Artman and Grygiel are the top two golfers returning from last year's squad which compiled a 7-4 record. Agostino and Sharkey were also on the team. Russell transferred from a junior college and this is the first year he is able to compete.

The finals will be held in Cooperstown, Pa. UMass has never reached the finals, but there is always a chance.

Mika, Parker Head List of Super Sophs

By MARTY KELLEY

About this time last fall, Walt Parker was snagging the pigskin for the Thatcher Whachamacallits. And a kid by the name of Mika was even less dramatic as a spare wing for Coach Bill Maxwell's freshmen team. Now through fate, bare necessity, and coincidence both are playing major roles for New England's number one football team that has continued to beguile the critics.

And now it's on to Burlington, Vermont which may not be the most ideal location for a college football game, but it may be the most scenic. So if you're planning to take that picturesque drive up New England's breadbasket this Saturday morning, don't get lost in the foliage and forget about the gridiron. And don't forget Mika and Parker, they're beginning to become more and more prominent as a dream season for the Minutemen begins to take shape.

Indeed the names of Mika and Parker are quite new to the UMass depth chart. But it's a good thing they're on there.

First of all Walt Parker has been out of college football for a year. After performing as a fullback on the freshmen team, Walt went on sabbatical while starring for his dorm team, Thatcher House. Apparently Walt and his mates had a good year. His picture has made the Intramural Hall of Fame outside Ted Schmidt's office. Now if you look for Walt on camera, you'll find him in a four by four on the Boston Globe in the Harvard endzone.

That's quite a transition from the green pastures of the Intramural Fields to the Golden Halls of the Ivy throne...Well, I guess six points is six points anyway you look at it....Sure.

Now last year Gary Mika didn't even start for the UMass freshmen team. A year later he's running 56 yards to the John 12 yard line setting up the game's most important score. He also broke a couple of tackles which led former coach Maxwell to easily pinpoint Gary's metamorphisis in football.

"Gary is a good athlete," says the former Winthrop High head coach. "He's matured so much physically since we had him last year. He's gone from 6'1", 185 lbs., to a rugged 6'2", 205. He's improving with time, his blocking is getting there, but we really like his size and strength".

Notice coach Maxwell mentioned nothing of Gary's speed. Well, I won't either. Mika made a nifty cutback against the grain and nearly went all the way against the Johns. "He lacked a little agility on the play," said coach MacPherson later, "but we'll take what we can get and Gary got us 56 yards and great field position".

Mika has been more than a blessing in disguise for "Mac." He's a tiger in the flat, very seldom drops the ball, played way ever his head against Maine, and in the pressure cooker at Harvard performed like a seasoned veteran. It's really a comfort to have the likes of Mika and Parker around. Now the Minutemen can really exploit a tight end offense with the material in this pair.

First of all Peil had his problems finding that secondary receiver as a rookie signal caller. Now since Pennington is calling his own plays, he's matured, can read blitzes, and can find that tight end over the middle. John Hulecki, the rugged blocker is gone, but Dick Cummings is around to butt heads with the defensive end, so now the Minutemen can go to the second receivers and Mika and Parker are beginning to fill the bill.

To see Walt hold the ball aloft in the Harvard end zone was quite a sight. Parker, believe it or not, brought the play in from the bench and in his own insomnia, forget it, and gave Pennington a different call. Well, Walt, your one for one as your own quarterback with a TD to boot. Yes, Walt Parker is the team's carrier pigeon, and if he keeps loosing his memory between hashmarks, he may make All-American as that twelfth man.

Yes, it's people like Parker and Mika that add to the character and overall gut of this the first and maybe the finest edition of Minuteman football. The battle cry for "Mac" at the beginning of the season was "Ready or not here we come". Why the cliche? Well at the beginning of the season there wasn't much around that "Mac" could rest on for used talent. But have those kids grown. And it's the likes of Mika and Parker that have added to that youthful resurgence that one can so easily see personified in that defensive unit, a unit that features seven sophomores.

Oakland Favored

DETROIT AP - The Las Vegas oddsmakers rate the American League East champion Detroit Tigers 5-4 underdogs to clinch the pennant in their playoff series with the Oakland Athletics.

The Tigers, who flew to Oakland Thursday for the first two encounters in the best of five series, couldn't care less, according to fiery Manager Billy Martin.

"That doesn't mean a thing, he said. "Las Vegas picked the Red Sox to beat us, too."

The Tigers do have access to fresh scouting reports on Oakland. Tiger scout Charlie Metro has been dogging the A's for several weeks.

"I have another source of scouting information," Martin said. "We've got all the material we need to do the job out there."

Detroit is expected to lead off with Mickey Lolich and Woodie Fryman in the Saturday and Sunday games. The Tigers are scheduled to face Jim "Catfish" Hunter and John "Blue Moon" Odom.

Martin plans to go with Joe Coleman in game No. 3 in Detroit, Then, it will be Lolich and Fryman again in the best-of-five playoffs.

Cross Country Win A "Must"

By WALT POWERS

"A must win". "A critical game". "The biggest meet of the year." These are the kind of statements usually uttered in the closing days of the season.

Unfortunately for Ken O'Brien's Cross-Country team, the toughest two meets of the year come back-to-back at the beginning. The second of these meets takes place tomorrow against Northeastern and St. Johns of New York. If the Minutemen entertain any hopes of capturing the New England championship, they'll have to make a strong showing.

The race, which will be run at Franklin Park in Boston, figures to be fast and very close. All three teams are closely matched, with neither team boasting an outstanding front-runner. Northeastern, led by Billy Rowe, has just about the same team they had last year, when they were runners-up in the New England Championship Meet. Their top three of Rowe, Flanders, and Crowley, are almost even with Gillen, Thomas, and Maguire.

St. Johns will run the same team they had last year when they lost to UMass by one point at Amherst. They are a stronger, more experienced team than last season, and are bolstered by some excellent freshmen. Like Northeastern, their top three are very strong. Their only earlier meet was a loss to West Point.

As for UMass, Coach O'Brien expects a faster, more aggressive race. In their opener against Providence and Harvard, the team as a whole ran conservatively. They seemed unsure of their ability to run strongly against a team like Harvard so early in the season, and didn't challenge the leaders until the end of the race. Tomorrow's race should be a battle from the start.

Who'll win the meet? O'Brien frankly admits, "Nrtheastern has to be regarded as the favorite. They're a better team than Providence, so we'll have to run better than we did Tuesday if we expect to win.'

At this point in the season, Harvard appears to be far and away the best team in New England, with UMass, Providence, Northeastern, and possibly Dartmouth battling for the No. 2 position. That's how Ken O'Brien sees it. Tomorrow at Franklin Park, the battle resumes.

Minutemen Ready For Vermont

By EARLE BARROLL

One said it over a piece of pie, another between helpings of turkey and yet another on the way out the door.

Their message had the same ring: The Minutemen are ready for Vermont tomorrow at Burlington. Game time is 1:30.

Dennis Kiernan is a sophomore starting at linebacker. The pie was pumpkin, his thoughts were thus: "Vermont isn't the team Harvard is. But you've got to make believe they are. As for the ratings, it's better to have recognition than nothing at all. That's what you're here for."

Tim Berra is a junior starting at split end. His helpings were in the Berra tradition...man-size, his feelings were poignant: "We're definitely confident. But we've practiced as hard as we did for Harvard. We're treating Vermont as we do every other team."

Johnny Jones is a junior starter at defensive tackle. His gate was quick, his words likewise: "We're taking this game the same as we do every one. You've got to remember that this one is also a conference game."

Their point is clear.

Over the years Vermont has had about as much success with UMass as...well..Maine. The only difference here is that the Cats have scored some points. Last year they lost "only" 24-15, but as head coach Dick MacPherson has said, "They lost, but their coach has them convinced that they deserved to win last year."

So far this season UVM stands 0-2, but it's a tough 0-2. They completely outplayed UConn and lost, 7-0, if you can swallow that one. Just last Saturday they lost to Lehigh, 26-20.

The later score is the big one to digest. Defensive coordinator Bob Pickett points out, "The most impressive thing about Vermont is that they played Lehigh to a 26-20 loss. Just the week before Lehigh had played Delaware, the top small college team in the country, and barely lost, 28-22."

Vermont has revamped its football program in the past couple of years. The administration is now into transfers and many of them are playing key rolls for the Cats, having replaced returning starters from last year's squad.

But let MacPherson leave you with this thought: "We're going to respect them (UVM). We've got something going now. And as Lou Saban used to say when I was out at Denver 'It's a short trip from the penthouse to the outhouse."

The point is clear.

Varsity Booters Host Worcester

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team will attempt to get to winning ways this Saturday morning when it plays Worcester Polytech on the playing fields at 11:00 a.m.

The Minutemen are currently 1-1, having defeated BC 2-0 to open the season, before losing to Maine 2-0 last Saturday morning. WPI has lost both of its games, the first to Holy Cross 5-2 and the latest to MIT 1-0.

UMass will be without the services of star goalie John Kiah, who is out of action with mononucleosis. Either backup Carl Vercollone or JV goalie Barry Lucien will guard the nets for the Redmondmen.

Probably starters at the fullback position will be Dave Oulette, Bob Merrill or Todd Buck, Kurt Syer, and Gary McKenna or Joe Cerniawski. "We have made some adjustments on defense," remarked Coach Gerry Redmond, "in order to prevent fast breaks against us. The defense has been working this week on getting back on defense more quickly."

Halfback Ed Doherty will probably be side-lined with a leg injury on Saturday. Mark Tyma, Herman Rodrigo, Vini Grandonico, or Mike Nugent should see much action at halfback.

"We have several halfbacks who shoot well from outside the penalty area in practice," said Redmond. "I just wish they'd shoot more during the games."

Speedster Jim Vollinger, Tom Coburn, who has both UMass scores this year, Tony King, Dean Lungu, and Jeff Hague will play a great deal of time at forward against WPI.

"Besides scoring goals," explained the first year coach, "the forwards are going to have to play a defensive game in WPI's end of the field. One or two of the players don't harass their opponent as he is bringing the ball upfield, thus allowing him to pass up wherever he wants to. I'll be watching closely for that on Saturday."

"I still have great faith in our forwards' ability to score goals. They scored four goals against Amherst in a scrimmage, and 2-more against Boston. The sooner they start scoring against Yankee Conference opponents, though, the better I'll like it."

Redmond also added that he and the players were quite pleased with last Saturday's turn out, especially with the cold and rainy weather conditions. He hopes that even more fans will turn out for the Tech game. He also asked that anyone interested in applying for the position of Soccer Manager should see him at 9C Curry Hicks as soon as possible.

Springfield gained its second victory of the season last Wednesday, beating Dartmouth 4-1. All New England goalie Jim Mueller turned in his second straight shutout to lead UNH to a 2-0 win over Boston U.

JV's Open Today

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The day of reckoning for the frosh-laden JV football squad occurs today at 2:30 at Alumni Field against the BU frosh. This will be the first time that the coaches will be able to see their charges in collegiate action.

Freshman Coach Bill Maxwell has had three weeks to mold these high school athletes into a cohesive unit. 77 players as compared to last year's 56 promise at least numerically to be superior. Coach Maxwell is pleased with the progress so far and he said, "The players have been very active and enthusiastic in practice, and they are looking forward to Friday's (Today's) game."

Offensively in practice, 6'2, 229 lb. tackle Tom Harris, split end Mark Finnerty (6'1, 184), fullback Bob Wolfe (6'1, 200), and halfback Jerry Mondalto (5'9, 171) have looked exceptionally well.

Defensively, linebackers Steve Falvey (5'11, 196) and Neal Desmaris (6'3, 200), defensive tackle Robin Elkin (6'0, 206), and defensive back Steve Wood (6'1, 165) earned plaudits.

The BU Pups are also very optimistic and BU Freshman Coach Tim Driscoll believes that his squad is potentially the best ever recruited by head Coach Naviaux. The Pups will use the newly implimented Wingbone-Wishbone type offensive. This favors a running game with an option type play.

The Pups, who impressed Coach Driscoll during practice, consist mostly of offensive players.

Sinden Signed

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins in a major front office alignment Thursday signed former coach Harry Sinden to the newly created position of managing director and shifted the role of General Manager Milt Schmidt to the new post of executive director.

Sinden, 40, who returned to this country Sunday after coaching Team Canada in Europe and Russia, signed a five-year contract with the National Hockey League team.

Sinden said his new job will be to "keep the Bruins the number-one attraction in the game."

Sinden coached the defending Stanley Cup champion Bruins for four season from 1966 through 1970. He left the team then for private business as an executive with Stirling Homex, a Rochester, N.Y. corporation.

Schmidt has been with the Bruins since 1936, playing 16 years in the National Hockey League.

The Fine Art of Predicting

It occurred to me the other day that none of my sports reporting has included the fine art of prediction. That just didn't seem right. Don't I have as much right to make a fool of myself as the next guy?

My first thought was that by making accurate predictions I could become a famous oddsmaker like Las Vegases Jimmy "The Greek". Maybe I could call myself Hibernian Harry to retain the ethnic touch. But alas, accurate predictions are difficult to make.

So then I thought of the advantages of total inaccuracy. Indeed, that sounded like an easier route.

I immediately recalled the case of Dick Stockton. Stockton was toasted at a formal dinner in Boston last year in a ceremony that included a main course of crow.

Among other predictions the T.V. sportscaster had said that the Patriots would be lucky to win a single game prior to last season's campaign. He followed with with the astute observation that Pittsburgh did not belong in the same ball park with Baltimore in last year's world series.

But, Stockton aside, I've got some catching up to do on the local scene. Our man Ballou, apparently in a race with Stockton, already has a Ranger Stanley Cup victory over Boston to his credit. He topped this with another bomb when he said the Bosox didn't have a chance in '72. Well, this is another year and my hat is in the ring. I thought I'd open with fling at the baseball playoffs:

Oakland will beat Detroit in the American League battle. They simply have a better club both on the mound and at the plate.

Their line-up is loaded with one-swing-of-the-bat types. Reggie Jackson, Joe Rudi, Mike Epstein, Sal Bando, and Dave Duncan are foremost in a formidable corps of power hitters.

With Catfish Hunter, Blue Moon Odom, and Ken Holtzman on the mound, it seems that here, too, Detroit is outclassed. And don't underestimate the value of late-starting Vida Blue. he could be a sleeper. (Good prediction men always use the word "sleeper").

On defense Detroit looks stronger and momentum is on their side, but neither force will compensate for the Oakland bats and arms. (Good prediction men also leave a little loophole.)

The National League race is much more difficult to predict. The Redlegs and Pirates are more evenly matched on paper, so I'll go with Cincinnati on the basis of being "hungrier". The "Big Red Machine" was derailed in the '70 series and never even got started last year.

On the mound it appears to be almost a toss-up. Neither pitching staff is especially strong for pennant winning ball clubs. Steve Blass is the best Pirate hurler with a record of 19-8. Gary Nolan leads the Reds with a 15-5 record.

At the plate the edge goes to Pittsburgh. Johnny Bench is the best either team can offer, but Willie Stargell isn't far behind, and the Bucs have a lot more after that. I just don't think they have the desire Cincinnati has.

That does it. My first attempt at predicting. Only one thing worries me. What if I'm right?

"Does God Play Dice?"

VOLUME C, ISSUE 23 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1972

Robin Morgan sees the Women's Movement branching off into various divisions such as reform, liberation, and radical feminism. In the case of the Radical Feminist Movement, Morgan explained that anti-rape squads had been developed in big cities such as New York, Boston, San Francisco, and L.A. She termed Rape a political act of terror and urged "consciousness-raising" in this area. (MDC Photo by Steve Quiggley)

Morgan Sees Women's Lib On The Move

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Robin Morgan, editor of the anthology of feminist writings The Sisterhood Is Powerful, led off the School of Education's Women's Caucus's Mini-Marathon, by speaking to a capacity crowd in Mahar Auditorium last Friday night.

Ms. Morgan explained that her role as "keynote speaker" was a small part of the "The Life In the Day of Woman" marathon, "the real thing happens tomorrow...women getting together...the main thing is communications within a group that is being oppressed."

She also congratulated the Women's Movement at UMass for "the kinds of things that have been happening" since her last visit in February, citing the three Women's Centers, Women's Studies and Feminist Studies "paid for by the University but in which the University has nothing to say."

"Basically, there have been changes in the last year in the Women's Movement," Ms. Morgan continued, emphasizing that "we should be sensing the divisions within the movement (i.e., reform, liberation, and radical feminism)."

The reform this year, according to Ms. Morgan, has been concentrated on political caucuses..."I cannot climb a tree in ecstacy over George," she continued, noting the deletion of abortion from the Democratic Party platform. "George is Dick is Spiro is Sargeant is the boy," and described "Bella in Congress' as "more valuable", because she "made the men extremely uncomfortable."

Ms. Morgan also described the Radical Feminist ideology as "not a hardline...continually evolving", explaining their development of anti-rape squads and a Rape Crisis Center in Washington, D.C. "Seven women - black and white, straight and lesbian - live in a house. They serve as back-up support for the rape victim. They go with the women into the police station to give advice about questions. and they go with the woman into the hospital. After a month and a half the D.C. police and hospitals wanted to shut it down." However, because of the support of a liberal woman judge, "the injunction was thrown out of court."

Ms. Morgan urged "consciousness-raising of rape as a political act of terror. The volunteers at the Rape Crisis Center were largely the rape victims of a month ago. There are now," according to Ms. Morgan, "such centers in New York City, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

She also explained the fate a self-help clinic in Los Angeles which had been in operation for a year and a half but which was recently shut down, its equipment and records confiscated and both women paramedics arrested.

Ms. Morgan predicted that their legal charges will serve as a "test case...for expertise teaching other women...this breaks down the hierarchy, and poor women have always suffered the most." The clinics "moved out into the communities, to the grass roots. These centers are based on the ripple procedure – helper, the one helped, the knowledge spreads...teach each other to teach each other."

Ms. Morgan continued by explaining some of the general developments within the radical feminist movement within the past year "on the three fronts...the international movement, the movement within the United States – the Third World, and the disparities between lesbian and straight women." She cited the "huge federation of African sisters" at the Pan-African Feminist Federation last June, and the "beginnings (of a Women's Movement) in Spain...which have to buck the Church and the State. These women cannot have consciousness-raising because it's illegal to meet more than five people." Consequently, there is a Feminist underground "led by a 'concerned' left, liberal, radical priest."

"The most important single development," during the past year, Ms. Morgan felt was, "the rapproachment between the Third World and white women," and she commended Michelle Wallace for her contribution. "The Third World Women are careful not to ever assume anything" and are attempting to "reach native American women." Ms. Morgan projected "progress in a whole new area."

"There is a very strong mobilization among Third World sisters," she explained citing the Women's Movement among them as "now a reality. And there is a struggle among white women against their own racism."

The straight-lesbian situation, Ms. Morgan explained, "came right out of women's condition" and resulted in "separatist radical feminism groups and created a backlash" against the objectives of the Movement which "thank the Goddess, is beginning to change."

Concerning Feminist Studies, Ms. Morgan announced that Antioch is offering the first graduate program in this area, and noted the "gap" in trying to make Feminist Studies "objective". "They should be political, to feed back into the movement. They should be oppressed, pained. It's pretentious to study the history of one's own people without passion."

The Matriarchal society, called "gynocracy", Ms. Morgan went on to explain, existed in the city-states in pre-ancient Sumar and were ruled entirely by women. "We did not want to be equal to men. We wanted to change all that. We weren't after equality, we wanted power. The gynocracies are beginning now to surface in history as societies structured on the mother-child relationship. Only on a maternal model can there be great reverence for life. Abortion and birth control were allowed. They were extremely sophisticated and used solar energy. Dominance and control did not exist."

"Witchcraft," Ms. Morgan defined as "the remnant of organized political gynocracy. And the mother principle is coming forth and will not be stopped."

Ms. Morgan also read selections from her forthcoming book of poems entitled Monster. She explained her intention "to synthesize my art into a weapon against political problems." Later, during the question and answer period, she followed her usual procedure of not accepting questions from men.

The company will perform its newest work, "Gilgamesh" in Bowker Auditorium tomorrow and Thursday at 8:00 P.M. Remaining reserved tickets for the two performances may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, or at Bowker Auditorium one hour before each performance, $1.50 for UMass undergraduates and $3.00 for the general public.

The company will offer informal workshops, open to the public without charge, at 3:30 P.M. in Room 163, Campus Center. Tomorrow's will deal with the art of mime and theatre signing.

UYA Volunteers Aid Low Income Community

By SUSAN HUBBARD

Serving the low income community is the goal of the University Year for Action, a federally organized program with a branch here at UMass, which places student volunteers in jobs where they can serve the public.

Students take part in the program for a full year, in which they live and work outside of the campus community. A minimum of 30 academic credits and a financial stipend are awarded to University Year for Action participants.

Undergraduates on the junior and senior levels, and grad students are currently involved, with over 150 people having taken part in the program since its beginning in September 1971.

University Year for Action was first created by an act of the U.S. Congress under certain proposals set down in the 1964 Equal Opportunities Act. The organization ACTION was then formed to incorporate existing groups such as Peace Corps and Vista, as well as the newly created University Year for Action.

In guidelines set down by the Washington, D.C. ACTION office, the key areas in which students may work include health, economic development, education, consumer protection, administration of justice, housing and environmental protection.

A program of project development and volunteer recruitment has been designed by UMass UYA Director, Dr. Ruth Burgin, and this program is currently being used as a model organizational pattern by other UYA groups in the nation.

At anytime during the year, a public or private agency may submit a proposal to UYA in which they outline a particular position which they request that a volunteer fill. If the job opportunity is approved, then, when new UYA volunteers are recruited before the start of the fall or spring semester, they will be informed of all the approved job openings in each of the public service fields.

Organizational meetings will then be held to acquaint volunteers with the various positions open to them. After the volunteers are interviewed by agency representatives, their choice of positions is cross matched with the agencies' choice of student applicants.

Since the program is entirely funded by the Federal government, all UYA volunteers are considered government employees and each receives $2,600.00, paid in bi-weekly allotments for his services. An additional readjustment allowance of $600.00 is paid to each volunteer upon the completion of his year of service.

Included in the agencies which are currently providing job opportunities to the UYA program is the Springfield Hospitals Project, Belchertown State School, Holyoke Community and Regional Legal Assistance service, Westfield Detention Center, Springfield Urban League, and the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission.

"The UYA program also coincides with President Wood's New Public Service Commitment, as set down in his December 1971 commission report," said Dr. Burgin. "His concern centers on giving students the opportunity to work off campus, do internships, and serve the Commonwealth, which is also an objective of the UYA."

Approximately 10 students assist Dr. Burgin and help man the UYA office at 513 East Pleasant St. Several of these workers act as liasons between the UYA volunteers in the field and the academic community at UMass.

"Students and faculty are primary in determining the success of this program," states Dr. Burgin. "Together with the community director, they form a tripod of key factors in assuring the smooth functioning of the program."

Infirmary Expands Facilities

Construction of the new addition to the Infirmary, at a cost of $1,368,000, began late last spring. The expected completion of the addition is January 1974. The new addition will provide significant expansion of outpatient services and laboratories.

Barry Averill, Director of Health Services, said "the most important result of the new addition will be reduced waiting time for patients."

The present building was designed to offer services to some 10,000 students. The University now has an enrollment of over 20,000. With the completion of the addition it will be possible to serve 30,000 students.

The two story addition is on the west face of the present three story building. An elevator shaft will serve the existing building and also transfer persons from the main building to the addition.

On the first floor of the addition will be four outpatient clinics each with its own waiting room, receptionist and appointment terminal. There will be space available for up to six doctors and twelve examining rooms in each of the four units.

Waiting time will be minimized by an automated appointment system and by the use of an automated conveyor system on the ceilings, which will bring patients' records to the appropriate department.

On the basement floor of the addition will be four departments, three supporting the medical program-physical therapy, radiology, a medical lab and a dental unit.

The radiology department will be equipped with a floroscopy, a diagnostic tool that allows live video viewing of the functioning process of organs.

The medical lab will have a culture-counter, a blood test machine which is capable of analyzing sixty cultures an hour.

The new structure was designed so that three additional stories could be added in the future. It was designed by Goody & Clancy and is being built by the Sabia Construction Company of East Boston.

The main bulk of the construction will be finished next fall and some parts of the building may be usable at that time.

State May Redistrict Hampshire County

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Precinct One in North Amherst may be split off from the rest of the town and joined to a newly formed Franklin County district if the state legislature decides to adopt a plan by 1974 to redistrict Hampshire County.

James Collins, Democratic nominee for one of two posts as State Representative from the 2nd Hampshire District, says the proposed split is one of several plans under consideration in Boston for redefining the district.

The House of Representatives has until 1974 to comply with the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" ruling that would divide the state into 240 single-representative districts.

Under redistricting, new boundaries will be drawn to insure that voting districts are approximately equal in population, with 23,150 people being the norm. As it now stands, each voter in the 2nd Hampshire District has two votes for state representative.

State Rep. George Keverian, D—Everett, chairman of the General Court's redistricting committee, has indicated that he hopes to have legislation outlining the state's 240 districts out of his committee and ready for debate by the beginning of March, 1973.

In a letter which he presented to Amherst Selectmen, Collins stated: "One plan would remove Precinct 1 from Amherst and include it in a Franklin district and would group Amherst's remaining six precincts with Pelham, Hadley, and three precincts of South Hadley. South Hadley's remaining two precincts would be grouped with Belchertown, Granby and Ware."

Collins told the selectmen Monday night that Rep. Keverian has informed him that he would "welcome recommendations from community governing bodies concerning their towns' future districting."

The selectmen voted after Collins' presentation to communicate with Rep. Keverian and inform him that the the would be opposed to any redistricting plan which would split it into two districts.

Collins added that numerous political intrigues are involved in any redistricting plans. In addition to the usual Republican vs. Democrat factions, he said, there are a number of separate issues, such as the desire by some to create a predominantly Black district in Roxbury.

"Being practical, we can expect that politicians will try to form districts which will give them the greatest strength," he said.

"At this point," he continued, "there are no finalized plans for our district, but it seems that a division of one or more of our towns might well be included in the redistricting committee's final report."

He said a "top priority should be to keep towns intact" since splitting would involve "dividing up a town's influence." He added that this would involve redistricting surrounding districts.

Redistricting will be based on total population, taking into consideration registered and unregistered voters alike including children.

The law states that towns under 6,000 in population need not divide into precincts and will be included as a whole in a given district. Towns over 6,000 in population and cities must subdivide into precincts if they have not already done so. Such precincts may not exceed 4,000 in population.

Under the law, large towns and cities may be divided by precincts, into different districts.

Gourdet Resume Sparks Controversy

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

A non-existent Ph. D in the resume of Alfred Gourdet, one of the two final candidates for the now filled position of Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs has brought into question the procedures and handling of the information by the Vice-Chancellor Search Committee.

Gourdet stated in his resume that he had obtained a Ph. D degree from Cornell University in 1964. According to sources involved in the search for a permanent vice chancellor, Gourdet, while he had taken courses at Cornell, never received a Ph. D from that institute.

Margie Lenn, chairwoman of the Vice-Chancellor Search Committee, confirmed the fact that Gourdet "has no doctorate degree."

However, Lenn stated that Gourdet had withdrawn from the contest before the University or the search committee had known of the falsification on his resume.

Gourdet withdrew on Thursday, the 26th of September.

Lenn said the fact that Gourdet did not have a Ph. D from Cornell was not known by the search committee until after their final meeting on Tuesday, September 31.

At that meeting the search committee voted unanimously to recommend to the chancellor that Robert Gage, then acting vice-chancellor, be appointed permanently to that position. Gage was appointed by the Board of Trustees October 4 at their monthly meeting.

The committee was informed of the falsification by Fred Preston, a member of the committee and a special assistant to Gage.

Preston said the Chancellor's office had run an initial check on Gourdet following an interview Gourdet had with Chancellor Randolph Bromery, and had discovered discrepancies in his resume. The Chancellor's office referred the matter to Preston Friday, September 27.

Preston said he ran a check on Gourdet that day but didn't receive confirmation of the falsification until, "Monday or Tuesday". Preston said he did the follow-up on behalf of the search committee.

Both Preston and Lenn said Gourdet still does not know that the University knows he has no Ph. D.

Asked why the information had not been released earlier, Lenn said it was kept confidential "because there was no need to release it. The committee had gone the whole way without knowing. There was no news value." Lenn added that there was "no major consideration one way or the other to have it printed."

Lenn said the committee had assumed that "a person going for this high a postion wouldn't falsify his resume." Lenn said the committee had dealt with "recommendations, not credentials."

Bromery, who said the only contact he had with the search committee was when they sent Gourdet up to him to be interviewed, said he regretted that it appeared Gage was appointed by default.

"I'd rather have seen Gage go up against three or four good candidates because he could outstrip them." Bromery felt that in the committee's zeal to protect the confidentiality of the candidates there was not a routine check of each candidate.

"Home institutions don't always know that there people are applying for another job," Bromery said, "and if it is public knowledge that a candidate has lost, it makes him look bad."

Bromery said that he had run into cases of false resumes infrequently in his 20 years in administrating. "It's usually people wanting to put themselves in the best possible position. Not outright lying, rather than a shading of the truth."

Lenn said Gourdet had called her up Thursday morning, the 26th, told her he was withdrawing and asked if he could meet her at lunch. Lenn and three other members of the committee met with Gourdet.

At lunch, Gourdet made no mention of his resume, Lenn said. According to Lenn, the reasons Gourdet gave at that lunch for pulling out were that the climate at the University was not right at this time for him and that he felt Gage was the better man for the job. Lenn said Gourdet spoke mostly in generalities.

Lenn said the search committee has recommended to the chancellor that some centralized office be set up to investigate resumes.

She said the committee was not equipped to do checking into candidates' resumes. The search committee was given the resume, Lenn said, and given "a free run" if there was anything there they wanted to check.

Preston agreed with Lenn for the need of a resume research office. Preston said it would be easier for an office to get information on a person's official background. "Either that," Preston said, "or the chairman would have to be given some kind of clout to do that with. Not all universities will respond to individuals."

Lenn said she felt that Gourdet's falsification was a "freak incident".

She said at this level (that of a vice-chancellor) "you assume and trust in the individuals. Plus you have to ask if the credentials mean anything. Is there a realm of experience and background which would eliminate the need for a Ph. D?"

Asked whether or not she felt Gourdet had that experience, she said in light "of the irregularity I could not look at him objectively."

3rd World Hears History, Discussion At Meeting

On last Wednesday the Third World Alliance held its opening meeting. They apologize to all those who were inconvenienced by the change in location.

According to a spokesman "The meeting was fruitful and makes us feel that with the coming of so much new and positive energy, that the coming year will be most productive."

Bro. Acklin Lynch gave a history of the development of the Third World Alliance and also the confrontations this political structure has dealt with from the time of its inception.

From there the meeting was opened up for discussion on the topics of (1) restructuring of the Third World Alliace (2) the integration in the W.E.B. DuBois Dept. and the Institute for Pan African Studies, of the cultural identities of all minority peoples (3) utilization of the Ahora Meetings (4) recruitment of minority peoples all over the Five College Area.

Another area now being investigated is the racism which has been exhibited in the athletic dept. The dept. has been utilizing the 1.6 ruling to legitimatize the exclusion of Third World People from participating fully in the athletic sports and scholarship programs. All concerned brothers and sisters should make their presence felt at the meeting of the Athletic Committee on Wed. night Oct. 12, 1972, at the Boyden Gymnasium in Room 227.

At last week's meeting, those attending were also aquainted with the Third World representatives recently elected to the Student Senate.

The Alliance will be holding its next meeting on Thursday Oct. 12, 1972. They desire your participation and valuable imput once again.

The meeting will be held in the School of Business Administration Auditorium #120 at 8 p.m.

Police Alert

An alert has been issued for the UMass-Amherst area for two men who escaped from the Concord N.H. House of Correction last Friday. They are believed to be in this area and possibly on campus.

The two men are Stephen Penney age 17 and Bruce Tyrell age 21.

The two are believed to be armed and are considered dangerous. They are wanted in connection with a robbery in Leverett on Friday morning in which two shotguns, a rifle and some ammunition were stolen.

According to Sgt. John Taylor of the UMass Security Department, Penney was seen in town on Friday by an Amherst policeman. A car he had allegedly stolen from his father was recovered on the UMass campus on Saturday.

Taylor stated that there was no search underway on campus for the two men. However, security guards have been alerted and given descriptions of the two men.

According to Taylor, campus police recovered one shotgun and some ammunition in the stolen car recovered on Saturday.

Women's Caucus On Ed. and Sexism

By ROBERTA MARTONE

Women in Higher Education, Sexism in the Schools, Feminism and Values: these were among the topics discussed by women of the area community this past Saturday. 9 am until 5 pm. The Women's Caucas of the School of Education at UMass presented a "mini-marathon" entitled THE LIFE IN THE DAY OF WOMEN.

On the second floor of the Student Union various discussions concerning Feminism took place. The speakers and organizers included women from the UMass campus and representatives from surrounding campuses.

One of the main points of discussion concerned the development of the University Feminist Studies Committee. Kathleen Reardon said the goal of the committee is to promote Feminist Studies as an interdisciplinary major.

It would be team-taught by a small core faculty from various departments. There would also be core requirements but, the entire system would be basically informal with learning on all sides.

They plan to have a department advisor to the faculty; a coordinator who will take care of administrative work; and a graduate or undergraduate student to help with organization.

Some type of Colloquia with films and speakers will probably be the starting point. Their main ambition right now is to "get off the ground."

Ann Brentlinger, in the philosophy department on campus said the committee is currently working out the model for this studies program. Working to define the ideology of Feminism is their first step. Brentlinger said they want to be sure the women are getting what they want and need.

The Feminist Studies Committee will send out a questionnaire shortly to find out who wants the studies program and just what its organization will entail.

When asked what they plan to do for funds, Kathleen Reardon said they are hoping for an independent budget.

In answer to the question What could one do professionally with a Feminist Studies major?, Kathleen Reardon said the Feminist Studies would be incorporated as an interdisciplinary major, for example women in history, women in economics etc. They said the job market is open to this area because it is new and different and will "fill in the gaps".

They all agreed it was basically the same as having a liberal arts major. Ann Brentlinger said, "You get a good feeling--a good attitude--you're a stronger person for it. It's important to work it out together with everybody actively creating."

The Feminist Studies Committee is now meeting every Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. at 902 North Pleasant St. They are in the process of setting up outlines, straightening issues, and answering questions.

At present, there is an organization on campus known as Everywoman's Center, previously called the Women's Counseling Service for Women in Continuing Education. Its location has been moved from Whitmore to the first floor of Monson Hall. Pat Sackery is current full-time director.

This organization is responsible for Women's Institute Workshops and festivals; Life Planning Workshop; Project Self, and a summer counseling program. Their future goal is to expand to the five college area and the Connecticut Valley.

S. Viets Hit Enemy 12 Miles From Saigon

SAIGON (AP) - Government troops made a helicopter assault against Communist-led forces 12 miles north of Saigon Monday. South Vietnam's military command contended the enemy penetration posed no serious threat to the capital.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong infiltrators seized a cluster of hamlets along Highway 13 near Saigon four days ago and government infantrymen have been trying since to dislodge them. Unconfirmed field reports said two hamlets were recaptured between noon and dusk.

U.S. military sources believe the enemy is trying to tie down government troops while its larger forces slip southward still closer to Saigon.

While the over-all threat to the capital is regarded as remote, American officials fear the prospect is increasing daily of headline-catching rocket and sapper attacks against Saigon and the nearby Tan Son Nhut air base and the Bien Hoa military complex.

To counter the threat, U.S. B52 bombers have been pounding the Saigon River corridor, a long-time infiltration route along which most of the North Vietnamese regular forces are concentrated.

The enemy force, estimated at 8,000 men, is entrenched in and around the village of Huong Phuong and half a dozen nearby hamlets.

Women and children in the occupied area have been allowed to escape but all the men have been held, possibly to work as bearers or as an insurance against saturation bombing.

Helicopters lifted government troops into an area just south of Huong Phuong but Associated Press correspondent Richard Pyle reported from the field that they encountered no immediate resistance.

About 1,500 villagersare occupying a make-shift refugee camp along Highway 13 nearly two miles to the south, he reported.

Tactical air strikes by Vietnamese Skyraiders and F5 jets went on at intervals throughout the day on both sides of the road.

"I don't think there is a very serious threat to Saigon," asserted Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, chief spokesman for the Saigon command.

"They have infiltrated only small units. It is not really an offensive by large units against Saigon, not a direct threat to Saigon."

Secret negotiations in Paris aimed at ending the Indochina war were not reflected by any let-up in U.S. air activity over North Vietnam.

Neither did Hanoi show any sign of withdrawing its divisions--most of them under strength--from South Vietnam.

Peace Talks Accelerate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential adviser Henry Kissinger's Vietnam negotiations accelerated Monday as he completed his second day of private Paris talks with the North Vietnamese and arranged an unprecedented third day of meetings.

U.S. officials in Washington and Paris refused to say whether progress is being made in Kissinger's sessions with Politburo member Le Duc Tho and the chief of the North Vietnamese delegation, Xuan Thuy.

White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler said at mid-afternoon that the second day of discussions had been completed and "they will meet a third day."

The Kissinger party plans to return to Washington Tuesday night, Ziegler said. He would give no details on substance of the talks.

But it was clear that the tempo of the negotiations had been stepped up, and there were indications the focus now was on the makeup of the Saigon government after the war ends.

Never before in Kissinger's three-year series of 19 secret trips to the French capital have the talks lasted three days. All but the immediately preceding session on Sept. 26-27-lasted only one day.

When Kissinger flew to Paris during the weekend, he was accompanied for the first time by his top aids, Maj. Gen. Alexander M. Haig, Jr., who returned last Wednesday from four days of meetings in Saigon with President Nguyen Van Thieu and other South Vietnamese leaders.

Haig's trip to Saigon had prompted reports that Thieu would step down to clear the way for establishment of a coalition government in South Vietnam. The White House dismissed the reports as speculative.

The Communists have publicly proposed that an interim tripartite government be set up in Saigon, with Thieu resigning. The United States has publicly rejected the proposal, and Ziegler said Monday: "I have no new statement of policy to give you...."

In saying that a third day of talks were anticipated, Ziegler added that it is unlikely the current sessions "will go beyond that". He said the next session of the regular Paris peace talks will be held as usual on Thursday.

Govt. Assures Eco Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government assured the Supreme Court Monday that environmental-impact analyses will be drafted before grants are issued for the construction of highways through national forests.

The concession came in a memorandum seeking to head off an important legal test of the 1969 National Environmental Policy Act.

Solicitor General Erwin N. Griswold and three other Justice Department lawyers told the court the new policy makes it unnecessary for it to rule in a key case from New Mexico that involves the Santa Fe National Forest.

Last May, the court announced it would consider an appeal by the Upper Pecos Association, a local conservationist group, questioning a $3,795,200 offer to San Miguel County for constuction of the Elk Mountain Road through the forest.

The plan would involve construction of about 26 miles of road and the resurfacing of another 7-1/2 miles. A critical conservation factor is that the road would pass within one mile of the Pecos Wilderness Area, a pristine 167,000-acre enclave within the national forest.

The U.S. Forest Service issued an impact statement following the grant by the Economic Development Administration. The association contended the 1969 law specifically required that the study be made by the EDA-and before the grant was issued.

Two lower courts have rejected the association's allegations that the act was violated.

With the appeal moving toward oral argument, possibly later this month, the Justice Department filed its memorandum to the Supreme Court saying the case is moot and should be dismissed.

In the future, the department said, the EDA will prepare environmental-impact statements before approving grants either on its own or jointly when other agencies are involved.

The memorandum cited guidelines issued recently by the Council on Environmental Quality.

Construction of the Elk Mountain Road has stopped, the funds frozen and the grant will be reconsidered "at every level of EDA at which it was originally considered," the department said.

Shriver's Wife Calls American Voters Apathetic

WASHINGTON (AP) - Mrs. Sargent Shriver said Monday the American electorate seems to have a feeling of apathy about the coming elections that no campaigners have been able to dispel.

"People are just not listening," she told a news conference. "I don't know why they don't listen, why they're not turned on..."

Regional Commission Accused of Waste

BOSTON (AP) - Five years ago and $23 million after creation of the New England Regional Commission to fight the region's sagging economy, the battlefield is still clean-no new jobs or companies, The Boston Globe says.

The commission's effort "has been marked by favoritism and apparent political opportunism," the Globe said Monday in a second copyrighted article dealing with the commission's performance.

Sunday's article, the first, labeled the commission "a high-level pork barrel operation that has squandered millions of tax dollars on salaries, shelved studies and barren programs."

One project tackeld by the New England Industrial Resource Development agency NEIRD was publication of a guidebook containing information of 100 firms in the business of lending money to prospective entrepreneurs.

NEIRD paid $59,000 to the Boston Globe School of Management and its dean, Albert J. Kelley, to produce the book, "Venture Capital." The article said a similar book was published eight months earlier in Chicago listing 86 of the same 100 capital sources in "Venture Capital."

Kelley told the Globe has was a "close friend" of Richard Wright, the executive director of the regional commission, which funds NEIRD.

The article said the men met when both were executives for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration NASA. When Wright left in 1967, it said, Kelley wrote a "highly praiseworthy" letter of recommendation for him.

Asked about the friendship and its connection with the grant for the book, the Globe said Wright stated jocularly: "It was the least I could do for him getting me my job."

Later, however, Wright said he had "little to do" with the grant. "It went directly through NEIRD," he said.

The globe said NEIRD has spent $189,000 in the past two years to create jobs, but has failed to develop even one.

NEIRD director Robert M. Webber was quoted in the article as saying his agency had caused one new company to open and four others to expand, resulting in a total of 40 "scheduled" jobs.

However, it said the new company has not yet opened and is not likely to do so. It also quoted presidents of two firms disputing Webber's claims.

Frederick Grondberg, president of Flash Technology, Inc., of Nashua, N.H., whose firm was supposedly assisted in providing 10 new jobs, said, "They have given us some advice, but we didn't get anything which led to 10 new jobs."

USSR Vegetables Ruined

MOSCOW (AP) - Already struggling to cope with a bad grain harvest, Soviet authorities have revealed potato and vegetable crop failures caused by drought conditions.

The lead editorial in Pravada, the voice of the Communist party, urged farmers on Monday to prepare now for a maximum effort next year to increase potato and vegetable production.

"The drought of the current year in many regions influenced the crop of these important food products," said Pravda in its euphemistic style.

It had been reported earlier that searing heat in the Moscow region had nearly wrecked the crop of potatoes-a staple of the Russian diet along with bread.

But Pravda's reference to the potato and vegetable problem indicated crop failures went beyond the Moscow area. Even in the best of years there are not enough vegetables for the Russian table although potatoes have been in adequate supply the last few years.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture in Washington reported a serious food situation in the Soviet Union, citing "various sources." It said Moscow may be planning to import more food from satellite countries in addition to the massive purchase of 20 million tons of wheat from the United States.

The grain harvest, planned for an average of 195 million tons a year during the current five-year period, may fall well below the 170-million ton mark this year.

Harvesters in Siberia and northern Kazakhstan are trying to bring in crops damaged by rain and snow with time running out.

The shortages have sparked official campaigns to save bread and flour. There have so far been no corresponding drives to conserve potato and vegetable supplies.

But Pravda seemed to carry a warning that shortages of those commodities might develop.

Bay State Taxes To Increase

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent says he will ask for no new taxes next year, but taxpayers' bank accounts will shrink anyway with increased local property taxes and possible new state programs to aid cities and towns.

Bay state property taxes, already among the nation's highest, are expected to leap 10 to 15 per cent next year after the Fiscal Year law takes effect Jan. 1.

The law changes the fiscal year for cities and towns from the calendar year to a July 1-June 30 basis, placing municipalities in line with state and federal practice.

The law was passed by the 1969 legislature and was to become effective in 1970, 1971 and 1972. However, difficulties and confusion surrounding the complicated measure caused its postponement.

The 18-month period from Jan. 1, 1973 through June 30, 1974 will be considered fiscal 1974. Fiscal 1975 will begin at state and local levels July 1, 1974.

Local budgets and property taxes will be based on the 18-month period, rather than the normal 12-month one.

Under the new plan, homeowners and businessmen will have to pay two-thirds of their tax bills by Nov. 1, 1973, and the remaining one-third by May 1, 1974.

Meanwhile, although Sargent says he plans no new tax programs, state aid to cities and towns may need a new tax program next year.

If such a program is needed, administration officials say, they hope to keep it under $100 million. Sargent has said he will request no new taxes to support other state programs.

Sargent's aides also say that if property tax relief is "done right" next year, extra taxes won't be needed in fiscal 1975 or 1976.

The projections do not depend on voter approval of the graduated income tax amendment No. 7, Sargent says, but the new taxing method would be "the key to property tax relief. If we have got to be limited by the present flat-rate tax, then I don't see how we can really move."

China To Raise UN Support

UNITED NATIONS, (N.Y.) (AP) - China said Monday it plans to raise its share of U.N. budget support from 4 per cent to 7 per cent over the next five years.

China's contribution to this years operating budget is about $7.1 million, the sixth largest after the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and Japan.

An increase to 7 per cent would make China the third-largest contributor.

Hsing Sung-yi, the Chinese delegate, told the U.N. budget committee that China still is a developing country but that "with the development of our national economy we intend to raise our rate of assessment gradually to 7 per cent in the coming five years."

But Hsing repeated that his government has no intention of paying the $16.6 million debt left by the Taiwan government when it was ousted from the Chinese U.N. seat last Oct. 25. He expressed dismay that the debt shows on the accounts of Peking, which was voted in to replace Taiwan.

MacLaine To Cap 'McG Day' Here

Actress Shirley MacLaine, ex-vice presidential candidate Frances (Sissy) Farenthold, and Mrs. Susan McGovern Rowan, daughter of Senator George McGovern, will speak at the UMass Student Union Ballroom, tomorrow at 12 noon.

The speakers will be the University's high-light of McGovern Day, a day of participation, fund-raising, and speechmaking for McGovern supporters around the Commonwealth.

Campaign '72

Other McGovern Day events include a "polka night" and smorgasbord in Hadley, an international buffet in Brockton, and a "bike-a-thon" in Worcester. The day will be capped off with an evening celebration in Boston with Senator McGovern in person, Senator Edward Kennedy, actors Warren Beatty and Carl Reiner, and Dr. Flora Needlman, as well as the Amherst speakers.

Shirley MacLaine has been active in Democratic politics since 1968, when she was a delegate to the National Convention in Chicago. She has appeared in numerous movies, including "The Apartment", "Sweet Charity, "Irma LaDouce", and "The Yellow Rolls Royce."

A Texas State Representative, "Sissy" Farenthold lost a close primary race this Spring for governor of the Lone Star State. She received the second highest number of votes for the Democratic vice-presidential nomination this summer in Miami Beach.

Chairman of the UMass McGovern Committee, Mark Mawrence, said that the rally Wednesday would mark the beginning of the "down-stretch sprint" of the area McGovern campaign.

"The drive during the final months", Mawrence said, "would include fund-raising movies at UMass, in-state and out-of-state canvassing, and a final push to enroll citizens in the McGovern Million Member Club." The Million Member Club is an honorary organization for campaign contributors.

The MacLaine-Farenthold rally is free and open to the public.

Pat and McG Mark Columbus Day

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS - Sen. George McGovern joined in New York's Columbus Day parade Monday, and Pat Nixon led Chicago's thousands of marchers capped a weekend of election-year observances of the discovery of America.

The Democratic presidential candidate marched down Fifth Avenue under sunny skies with a contingent of the Italian-American Labor Council. Parade organizers estimated 100,000 marchers took part.

McGovern's presence in the colorful line of floats, bands and fraternal societies drew some Republican complaints when a youthful crowd of his supporters gathered around the reviewing stand.

The massing of McGovern backers bottlenecked the march for about 15 minutes, leading Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, President Nixon's New York State campaign chairman, to label the gathering "counterproductive."

Tricia Nixon Cox, the President's daughter, viewed the crowd from the stand and said: "I'm still waiting to see the rest of the parade. This was supposed to have been a non-political event."

"No one knew that McGovern was going to march today," said parade chairman Joseph Giamboi, who wore a "Nixon" button. "The parade was not a political function."

McGovern, who left the reviewing stand after about half an hour, maintained he was invited to march by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and said: "A parade is a day for politicians and people. People want to see their leaders."

In Chicago, Mrs. Nixon joined Democratic Mayor Richard J. Daley in viewing the parade down State Street in clear, crisp weather. Police estimated some 250,000 people viewed the march.

Report On Summer Study Abroad

Few UMass students are fully aware of the variety of study abroad projects that are possible. One of the most unusual projects undertaken last summer by a UMass undergraduate involved research on Voodoo music in Haiti. The student, Bruce Paynter, reported on his experience to the International Programs Office which had helped him with scholarship aid towards his travel costs with funds supplied by the Student Senate. His report is printed below.

"Conga drumming in Haiti"—that's the subject of a documentary filmed this summer by UMass sophomore Bruce Paynter and UMass craftshop director Penny Worman. Living at various times with a Haitian family, in a bar, out in the country in a mud hut, and in a voodoo temple, Paynter spent from June to August studying drumming, as well as learning how to speak French and Creole, searching out different types of Haitian music, and making arrangements for the film. In late August, he was joined by Penny Worman, and they worked for three weeks shooting the film.

"The film, which should be finished in December, was done for credit under the Media Center of the School of Education, and will show a drum being carved out from a solid oak log as well as showing examples of Haitian music such as a bamboo orchestra and music from a voodoo ceremony."

Mr. Paynter's overseas study experience was admittedly one of the more unusual for UMass students. However, a variety of programs for overseas study are open to students. The evening of Tuesday, October 17 a number of students who studied abroad during 1971-72 will talk about their experiences. The evening program is being sponsored by Alpha Lambda Delta, and will be held in the Campus Center. All students interested in learning about opportunities to study abroad are urged to attend this meeting.

Symposia For Strings Set

In an effort to expand community service, the UMass music department is offering a series of String Symposiums for school string instrumentalists and music educators from schools throughout the Commonwealth.

The first string symposium is scheduled tomorrow, on the Lower Level of the UMass Campus Center.

Workshop Seminars will be conducted from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. by a series of outstanding clinicians including Julian Olevsky, violinist, and Leopold Teraspulsky, cellist. These two internationally celebrated performing artists are members of the resident faculty at UMass.

The purpose of these string symposium events is to improve string performance techniques by offering strategies of practical value for student and teacher alike. Registration is free. Schools planning to bus students to the String Symposium should call (413) 545-2434 or 545-2227 regarding campus unloading and parking areas.

Don't Let It Happen

Tomorrow will be the third successive day in which Henry Kissinger will engage in secret talks with North Vietnamese representatives in Paris concerning an end, hopefully, to the War which has tormented America for so long. While we certainly don't object to ending the war, we must say that it looks like the people in Washington have engaged in the most despicable kind of politicking, using human lives while waiting for the politically right time to make the people happy.

Chief among these people is Richard Nixon, who is no new hand at this sort of thing. To think that even he would wait for the right moment, politically, to end the war was a thought that even Nixon's most passionate haters didn't want to consider a few months ago. But it appears to be true. And to paraphrase an ever popular cliche of the last couple of months, is this the type of man that this country can afford to keep in power for four more years? Is it possible that we can vote in, and by a huge landslide at that, a man who has bargained with human lives in the pursuit of political power? If this is the way a man can act when he doesn't even have the majority of votes in the last election behind him, how will he act if he receives an overwhelming mandate?

There is real cause for alarm in this country as the possibility of the election of Richard Nixon becomes more real with each succeeding day. Wake up, America. The political games you play today can have crushing effects on the America of tomorrow. Wake up, America. It's not too late yet.

Vietnam Comes Home

By STEVE ANDERSON

There is a war going on that is as immoral and costly as the one in Vietnam. The same type of atrocities are being committed against the civilian population as in Indochina. The United States has deployed Green Berets and other military support as it did in Vietnam.

Guatemala is embroiled in a conflict that is similar in many ways to the tragedy in Vietnam. In 1954 the Guatemalan government included many Communists and Communist sympathizers. Most of them were in the trade unions. The government was legitimate or as legitimate as a Guatemalan government can get. The communists were nationalists and were more interested in improving their country than leading it into the sphere of the Soviet Union. Both the government and the communists were interested in starting reforms that ran contrary to the best interests of the United Fruit Company, a large U.S. concern in Central America.

The State Department viewed the situation as a threat to the security of the United States. It was believed that the movement in Guatemala would threaten the stability of El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua. This "Domino Theory for Central America" had some foundation. There were strikes in Honduras near the Guatemalan border that many people feel were carried out with the aid of Guatemalans as the Hondurian labor movement was not very strong at the time.

A set of treaties were concluded with various Latin American governments that were part of a world wide scheme to halt the spread of Communism. The equivalent of SEATO for Latin America was designed by the United States and called the Declaration of Caracas. This Declaration was later used against the Guatemalan government. Both the Declaration of Caracas and SEATO were designed by John Foster Dulles and both were signed in 1954.

The United States' involvement in Guatemala and Vietnam began the same way. Aid was given to the anti-communist forces. In Guatemala this meant that the government fell. In Vietnam it meant that a government was established. Both countries began to flounder and more support was needed. In Vietnam this meant more military aid, advisers and finally combat troops. At the present time the Guatemalan government has only received advisers, Green Berets and other military aid. Eduardo Galeano, a guerrilla sympathizer, has pointed out the similarities between Guatemala and Vietnam. "The Green Berets say, as they once did in Vietnam, that 'our mission is not to fight but to train.' Yes the sound and the fury are familiar: Guatemala....is a premonition of Vietnam..."

U.S. intervention in Guatemala and Vietnam have produced a series of weak governments that have been unable to deal with their country's problems and have relied on the United States for support. The United States has been unable to halt the "communist movements" in either country. We have been involved in a long hard war in Indochina and may be involved in one in Central America.

Unfortunately, the United States in 1954 and in part since then has felt that other countries were either with us or against us. In Indochina this forced nationalist to the Vietminh side. In Guatemala this policy has resulted in a guerrilla war that has no end in sight.

People know someething about the war in Vietnam because it receives plenty of press. The conflict in Guatemala does not receive much attention. Occasionally Guatemala receives some national notice. When the U.S. ambassador was murdered in Guatemala City some press attention was given to the civil strife but it only lasted for a short time. The United States has only paid attention to Latin America when problems develop such as the Cuban missile crisis. If we do not pay more attention to our neighbors more tragedies like Guatemala will will develop.

UMass Budget: Two Sides

Springfield Republican

Gov. Sargent and the University of Massachusetts trustees are busily battling the fiscal 1974 UMass budget back and forth. The governor received it and sent it back to the trustees with recommendations for pruning. He got it back - unpruned. Now he's returning it again.

Perhaps the board's refusal to knock a penny off the $98 million budget was a touching display of loyalty to old UMass. But it was a poor show of responsibility as an agency of the state.

A spokesman says the board is aware of the state's fiscal plight but gives priority to its pursuit of "quality education" for the university. Fine, but what happens when the well runs dry? It's getting there fast.

Unfortunately, "higher education" has become an umbrella for assorted activities that stray far from the basics of learning. Do these exist for the institution, or is it the opposite?

Extraneous courses that offer no credit and require special facilities, along with some social and athletic programs, are far out on the fringes of genuine education.

Is it so important that UMass become a football power at the expense of state programs that bear directly on the public health, highways, tax relief, and education in general?

An example of new fat on the UMass budget is the item for a law school which would bring to eight the number of law schools in the state and add to an already drowded profession.
crowded profession.

Letting the governor take the rap preserves the image of dedication. But is also a cop-out by a board that should face up to its public duty.

(Reprinted from Oct. 8 edition)

Collegian

The UMass Trustees returned the fiscal 1974 budget unchanged to the governor's office Wednesday. The next move is now the governor's. The governor's office should pass it on to the legislature.

The Governor indicated late yesterday afternoon his specific plans would be detailed at an October 14 meeting at Framingham State College. At this meeting, according to one of his aides, he will present a position paper concerning what he's for and against in higher education.

He has also said that he "regrets" the decision of the trustees to pass on the budget without cuts.

The governor is supposedly worried about experimenting with new programs while keeping obsolete ones. The trustees have certainly reviewed this budget enough to know whether or not it is responsible. And we certainly think it is.

The University started a phenomenal growth several years ago. It drew its finish line in the Future of the University Report. We are not there yet. If the governor cuts back support of public higher education now, we may never see the University reach its full potential.

The governor points out that there are about 100 private institutions of higher education in the Commonwealth. However, he should realize that these institutions are not there to primarily serve the Massachusetts student. The University and the other state colleges are.

Low cost, high quality public higher education should be one of the Commonwealth's top priorities. It is one step toward solving this state's problems.

Rhetoric About Rhetoric

To The Editor:

Since I have taught in the General Rhetoric Program, and thereby know it; and since I no longer teach in it, and thereby have no personal stake in the question; I wish to remark on the Undergraduate Student Senate's unanimous recommendation that the General Rhetoric requirement be dropped in favor of a voluntary laboratory for communication skills. It is a foolish idea.

The reported debate never impugned the concept of a basic standard of skill in speaking and writing. The arguments were all circumstantial, not essential.

The occasional overcrowding complained of is an administrative, not an educational mistake. The alleged variation in the quality of teaching assistants is irrelevant to the merits of the requirement, can be remedied, and at any rate implies that undergraduates can recognize good teaching.

It was urged that many high schools in the Commonwealth have courses in speaking and writing, so that a superfluous repetition is required. For the most part, though, the traces of high school rhetoric instruction that show up here are extravagantly unimpressive. The charge would also seem to imply that a year of high school work is enough to make competent communicators; which is manifestly not the case. Further, it conflicts with another charge, namely, that the one required year of university instruction isn't enough to do the job, and is therefore wasted. Which way do they want it?

As for the claim that one year sufficeth not, this argues for more, not less, instruction. Hamilton College, an ancient and venerable seat of learning, has for over a century required four years of public speaking and prose composition, under the quaint notion that college graduates ought to be able to express themselves with some skill and power. The mastery of the word is a necessary, though surely not a sufficient condition, to wield some influence in the world. If it does not produce Hemingways or Churchills, at least it can reduce the numbers of those for whom obscenities, slogans, and epithets pass for discourse.

And from a purely practical viewpoint, the suggested voluntary laboratory has problems. It assumes that those deficient in communicative skills are (1) able to diagnose their affliction, and (2) willing to exert themselves for a remedy. Any more than passing acquaintance with human nature makes (1) and (2) seem unlikely.

Whether the studentry like it or not, there is, and long has been, an art of discourse. Whether the studentry like it or not, adepts in that art, whether their mentors be Aristotle, Cicero, or E.B. White, have always found it of great service in explaining and promoting their ideas; often to the discomfiture of those can only hem and haw, and choke their argument in the coils of their own ineptitude. Whether the studentry wish to save the world, relate to Mom and Dad, or get ahead in IBM, rhetorical skill is a precious attribute, and its lack, a grievous impediment. Too many people would argue that the facile speaker or writer is not to be trusted, that halting speech and obscure argument are the tokens of a "sincere" and unaffected person. More likely they are the tokens of a sloppy and imprecise mind. In truth, the University curriculum has little to offer that is of more utility and abiding relevance to the student than this humble requirement of two semesters' work in rhetoric. One can only hope that the studentry will recognize that the Student Senate vote is not in their best interests, and will petition the Faculty Senate, that they should not accede to that piece of foolishness.

"Seig Heil," Again

To The Editor:

Since Mr. Estelle was incapable of understanding my previous letter, I submit the following.

Fact, 90% of the industry in the U.S. is controlled by 10% of the U.S. corporations. That is big business.

Fact, rivers have caught fire after being polluted by big business.

Fact, stripmining and open pit mining have destroyed fertile land, and ruined land that once was noted for it's natural beauty.

These are some of the benefits of unrestrained "Free Enterprise" Mr. Estelle speaks so highly of. I am not against Free Enterprise, I am against calling exploitation Free Enterprise, and against the idea that companies that exploit be given free rein to do so. (How can it be free when a small business has almost no chance of competing with a giant corporation?)

I agree with Mr. Estelle in saying "Free Enterprise" has made this country what it is, polluted, and hammer-locked by monopolies.

We do have the highest standard of living in the world, one that is rotted thru with planned obsolescence, one that uses up natural resources so rapidly that the world resources would be used up in one generation if our standards were world wide.

Since I am indeed familiar with the platform of the American Party Mr. Estelle, I repeat. A ticket to isolationism, and a revival of the campaign cheer "SIEG HEIL" .

Border Crossing

To The Editor:

On October 14th, the Amherst Area Action Committee will make its seventh crossing of the Canadian border carrying funds for medical supplies for North Vietnam, South Vietnam, and the National Liberation Front. To give medical aid in this way is considered by the Treasury Department to be illegal under the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act. We act with the conviction that no man is an enemy, to relieve suffering and to dissolve hostilities.

On Tuesday, October 10th, money will be collected on campus. Contributions should be in the form of cash or checks made out to cash. Those who wish to accompany the committee to Canada and join us in the crossing, please call The Clarks, Market Hill Road, 549-0586, or Leone Stein, Harkness Road, 253-7743.

Reasonable Policy

To The Editor:

As a student member in charge of publicity for a major campus organization (Orchard Hill Apple Corps), I wish to question the MDC's advertising policy. Tight publicity budgets coupled with the decreasing effectiveness of inexpensive wall poster advertising have made it extremely difficult to inform students of important events. We cannot afford to have our modest admission charges (we often do not charge anything at all) swallowed up by expensive advertising. Modest MDC ads run $12-40 apiece. Yet, if we do not advertise, response to activities is not large enough to cover their cost.

I think it reasonable to suggest a policy of 25-50% discount to low budget-highly active campus organizations. The Collegian is student financed to begin with, so why should student groups pay the same rate as MacDonald's or the Hadley Drive-In? Also, the loss of revenue may be more than made up by an increased use of advertising.

Editorial reply requested.

Editorial Points

Why is it that the Physical Plant spent a week seeding and raking an area near the Garage and another north of the Campus Center, and then promptly bulldozed both of them into huge mounds of dirt? Surely there are better things that can be done with Physical Plant time (and money) then turning piles of earth around after you've just seeded them. But then, it's par for the course for Physical Plant. Just last Spring three Physical Plant workers were observed shoveling a pile of sand: one sitting in the truck waiting to take it away, one shoveling, and one leaning on his shovel watching the whole thing.

The Collegian took on the Senate yesterday in touch football and won, 26-6. We promise we'll take a dive next time, Senate.

Too Bad, Sox

To The Editor:

Hooray! Oh, hell. The Red Sox finished second, only a half a game out when the reporters had them chalked down for fourth. But they didn't win the semi-pennant. They played some great games. Like that one with Milwaukee when they were behind by four runs and we all shut off the radio to go to sleep and woke up to find that they got five runs in the ninth to win. They wouldn't have come close without those games.

They played some real nightmares. Like the one with Detroit where they blew a four run lead in the ninth and lost eight to four. If they'd won that they would have won the semi-pennant.

Carlton Fisk had a great year for a rookie, didn't he? Yaz stunk until September again. Marty Pattin, he was great during the pennant drive. But if he had won instead of lost just one of those games when he was all screwed up earlier in the year, the Sox would be Numero Uno.

Bob Bolin and Bob Veale were out of sight from the bullpen, but Lew Krausse was this year's Cal Koonce. And Louis Tiant--wow! was he good. He did everything right during the stretch. But he lost the most important game of his life.

You're a great team, Sox. You gave it a hell of a try.
You stink, Sox. You choked under pressure.
But I still love you Sox.

'Women's Hour' Dilemma

To The Editor:

If you tuned in to WFCR last Monday night to listen to the Women's Hour you did not hear it. The program has not failed: listener response and financial support have been consistently good. Barbara Patterson and the rest of WFCR's staff want the program to continue, but the station's management has demonstrated no intellectual, emotional or financial commitment to women's programming.

If you tuned into the Women's Hour on September 25th, you heard Barbara Patterson, three supporters of WFCR, and Godwin Oyewole, acting station manager and program director, take phone calls from listeners concerning this "temporary suspension of the Women's Hour." Women and men alike voiced strong protest and, in summary, asked that the Women's Hour not only be retained but fully financed. Mr. Oyewole responded that the station had no money but that he was committed to seeing the program go back on the air.

First of all, I contend that WFCR does have the resources, both potential and at hand, to fund not only the Women's Hour but expanded women's programming. Listener contributions earmarked for the Women's Hour during WFCR's annual marathon were generous. But that money was allocated to the station's general operating budget--none of it went directly to the Women's Hour. There remains the question of the full-time salary being paid to Elaine Prostak, former co-producer of the Women's Hour, who left the station at the end of August. If she had remained at the station Mr. Oyewole would have continued to pay her. He has chosen to allocate the majority of that money to station debts. This seems a priority easily contended. All listener-supported stations run at deficit--often at great deficit. They do so because their priority is excellent programming (of the sort of the Women's Hour).

There is also the matter of the Lucy Sprite fund, a $40,000 grant to WFCR of which only about $6000 has been spent for classical music programming. Mr. Oyewole did not mention this resource to the listeners when they enquired about the station's finances. He also evaded one listener's question about salaries. The disparity between Ms. Patterson's salary and those of some management personnel is as much as $12,000.

But given that we could accept Mr. Oyewole's contention that money is very tight and "properly" allocated at WFCR, could we then go to accept a volunteer program as an alternative?

Volunteerism is a tradition of women; it means that the value of a woman's time is in the "self-fulfillment" rather than the actual value of the job performed. In a free-enterprise society, if your enterprise is worth doing you don't do it for free: that is the ethic. People are paid for work that the society, or sub-society, really wants done. In this context, the women of this area are being asked to put on a weekly program on a volunteer basis. The implications are broad.

I know radio to be a strenuous discipline. To continue to produce consistently good programs, one must enjoy a professional status at a radio station. Volunteer status is essentially no status. You are accorded no space, no professional respect, no regular studio privileges. (I had volunteered for eight months, called to reserve a studio, and was told that it would cost me $12.) Further, you are accorded no budget. (Barbara Patterson and Elaine Prostak could not even secure $25 last spring for records they needed for the Women's Hour.)

It takes a personal commitment of time and responsibility quite unknown to those outside of the field to produce a program every week. This volunteer thing--"if you care enough you will be a volunteer"--allows the station to easily cop out on any further commitment to women's programming. I have some suspicion that other programs would not be so readily abandoned to volunteers. We should not allow this to be the case with the Women's Hour and, in fact, should agitate for further women's programming.

Associate Provost Named To Head Minorities' Programs

An associate provost to administer programs involving women and minorities at UMass has been named by Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

Prof. Zina Tillona has begun as associate provost on a part-time basis, in addition to her position as chairman of the Italian Program in the Department of French and Italian. She will be involved in several areas of responsibility within the Provost's Office, including the area of improving the status and representation of women and minorities in all roles on campus.

Dr. Tillona came to UMass in 1966 from Boston University where she was coordinator of language instruction in the department of modern languages. Before that she was an assistant professor of Italian at Wellesley College, and from 1951 to 1960 an instructor in the UMass Romance Languages department.

Since 1971 she has been director of the UMass Summer Program in Italy. Dr. Tillona has also been chairman of the College Entrance Examination Board Italian Test Committee, of which she has been a member since 1965; and she has served on the National Screening Committee for Fulbright Fellowships.

PROF. ZINA TILLONA

Hunter College awarded her a bachelor's degree, Wellesley College a master's, and Middlebury a doctorate. Through a Fulbright Grant, from 1955 to 1957 she was in Italy studying, and teaching English as a foreign language. Her academic specialties include 19th and 20th Century Italian novel and theater.

Campaign Against VD Begins On Public Television

National, state and local efforts of public television will be used to launch a nationwide campaign against venereal disease. See it on Channel 57. The program will be shown tonight at 10 p.m.; Wednesday, October 11 at 8:30 p.m.; and Saturday, October 14 at 2:00 p.m.

"VD Blues", the PBS Special of the Week being aired throughout the country, will feature host Dick Cavett.

Following this hour long show, Channel 57 will join Channel 2 in Boston on the Massachusetts Network. Using the statewide interconnection, both stations will explore problems involved and treatment facilities available in Massachusetts. The latter portion of the program will originate locally at Channel 57.

For information about venereal disease, the public is invited to call Channel 57 at 781-3801 during these scheduled times. Trained volunteers from the Association of School Nurses will be on hand to answer confidential telephone calls.

Viewers in western Massachusetts can learn the basic facts about VD as WGBY—Channel 57 General Manager Jack Caldwell interviews local doctors, nurses and health experts about symptoms, treatments and free clinics.

On Tuesday evening Caldwell will have on the set Dr. James Doering of Springfield; Mr. Richard Whiting, Director of the Counseling Center at Springfield College; and Ms. Betty Aberdeen, Neighborhood Health Center, Springfield.

Wednesday night guests will be Mr. Barry Averill, Director of Health Services at UMass and Ms. Stewart.

Following Saturday's broadcast of "VD Blues" will be another PBS planned program titled "Project Venus", with other experts from the field discussing venereal disease and its epidemic proportions in America today.

Foreign Students Sought

International students of UMass wishing to belong to a 7-member Provisional Board advising the Foreign Student Office and Faculty Senate Committee on Foreign Students, should submit their names to the Foreign Student Office by Friday, October 13. Fifteen supporting signatures from other foreign students or faculty should accompany each name.

The seven will be announced (and runoff elections held if necessary) at the Foreign Student Office International Folk Dance Evening on Tuesday, Oct. 24, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Commonwealth Room.

Those interested in teaching a particular folk dance (American or international) are encouraged to coordinate with the Foreign Student Office, and be prepared to bring the necessary records or music.

Admission will be free with cider and donuts available at cost.

Room: To Move

Bio-energetic Workshop Coming

Room to Move, as first in a series of programs to broaden its scope to include alternative experiences for personal and spiritual growth, offers an ongoing bio-energetic workshop led by Gene Silver.

——A group meeting weekly, taking time and energy to discover, on a bodily as well as a mental level, who you are.

——To realize that you exist in your body as well as in your mind.

——To realize that your body is a neglected source of rich insight, feeling, energy.

——To realize that getting in touch with your body and its natural movement means becoming more "grounded:" gaining a greater sense of reality, living more in the present instead of dwelling on "how things ought to be," living more fully.

Gene Silver is a practicing therapist from New York City, having been trained by Dr. Alexander Lowen and Dr. George Greenberg of the Institute for Bio-Energetic Analysis. In addition, her background includes work in Gestalt, movement, sensory awareness, plus a more recently developed interest in meditation and its implications in terms of personal growth.

She will be available at the Room to Move office on Wednesday, October 11 from 9-11 A.M. and 1-3 P.M. for personal interviews for those interested in participating in the group. The group will be limited to 12 and no one be elected without a preliminary interview. If you are interested but cannot come Wednesday, call the Room-to-Move office to set up an alternate appointment, 545-0400.

Senate Seats Open

Student Senate seats are still open in the following dorms: Dwight, Gorman, Mary Lyon, Chadbourne, Wheeler, Crabtree, and Field.

In Southwest, openings still remain in JQA upper and lower, Melville, Mackimmie, James, Crampton, Thoreau, Coolidge upper.

Two people are needed to fill the Sorority Senator seats also.

Nomination sheets may be picked up outside the Student Activities area on the first level of the Campus Center. They must be returned to the same place by 5 p.m., Friday, Oct. 20.

Elections for these spaces will be held on October 28.

A challenge: Picture this. You only go around once in life. And you've got to reach for all the gusto you can. You can't settle for less. Because you don't get a second chance. This is our philosophy at the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. This is what we want you to find. And picture for us. And if your photo is judged the best on your campus, it will be printed in this paper. With your name, too. And you will be awarded $100. Not too shabby.

Photo competition rules: Use your head before you use your camera. Your photograph will be judged on its subject matter. Not on your photographic technique. You will be competing against students at your campus only. All photos should be black and white. And by the way, if you are a professional photographer this offer is not for you, since you already have $100. Please, please get and send us written permission from every recognizable person you use in your photo. Otherwise, your picture will be disqualified. You'll have until October 31, 1972, to get this assignment completed, should you accept. All photos submitted will become property of the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. Send picture with your name and address to: Schlitz Photo Competition, Leo Burnett Co., Inc., Prudential Plaza, Chicago, Illinois 60601.

'Police' Is Program Topic

"The Police and the Community" is the topic for today's program at Hampshire College's film/discussion series on "The Police in American Society," meeting in the east lecture hall of the Academic Building.

Each program begins with short documentary films illustrating the evening's topic, followed by an open discussion. The films, showing the Pittsburgh police in action, were made in 1969 by John Marshal of the Center for Documentary Anthropology (Cambridge, Mass.). Leading the discussion are two faculty members from Hampshire's School of Social Science: Lester J. Mazor, the Henry R. Luce Professor of Law, and Barbara Harrison Linden, Assistant Professor of Sociology.

The series is being presented by the College's Law Program, an experimental attempt to bring law back into the undergraduate liberal arts curriculum. Its purpose is to prepare students for citizenship, rather than preparing them solely for graduate school, by stressing the importance of law in daily life.

The series is open to the public, especially members of local communities and local police forces, as well as students from the Five College area.

JV Gridders Come Back To Slash BU 33-13

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Friday afternoon before a sparce crowd under cloudy skies, at Alumni Stadium the UMass JV football team erupted from a 7-0 half time lead to demolish the Boston University Pups, 33-13.

The Minuteman defense totally destroyed the BU wingbone-wishbone running game, as the Pup offense was unable to score until the fourth quarter.

While the defense stymied the BU attempts, the Minutemen offense came on like a lumbering giant. The yearlings moved the ball well with the running of Winchester's Bob Wolfe and the passing of New Bedford's Lee Harriman. Fumbles cost the home team two scores, but finally Harriman hit Mark Finnerty for a 40 yard TD and a 7-0 lead at the half.

The second stanza brought on the onslaught of scoring. Jerry Mondalto, despite a broken nose, broke away from the Pups for a 59 yard scoring romp, after being held to minus yardage in the first half.

BU's lack of offense gave Minutemen possession continually until Pup defensive tackle, Steve Winanski, intercepted an errant throw to close the score to 14-7. The closeness of the score did not indicate the real story, but Coach Bill Maxwell did, as he began to substitute freely. The passing of Harriman (6-11, for 122 yards), Frank Pallone (2-5 for 56 yards) and Tom Rohan (2-3 for 41 yards) put the game out of reach, as receivers Gary Warren, Carey Paster and Mark Finnerty kept plucking the pigskins out of the air.

Passes continually set up scoring opportunities. Dave Brady and Frank Pallone scored on short runs, while Gary Warren grabbed a 41 yard pass from Tom Rohan to ice the game.

Defensively for UMass, Dave Lelchook, with an interception, Steve Falvey, and the line play of Jamie Torrence and Bill Kulis kept the option in check.

Offensively behind fine blocking the backs also had a fine day. Wolfe had 72 yards in 14 carries. Mondalto carried 12 times for 47 yards. Dave Brady accumulated 30 yards in 7 carries before receiving an elbow injury. Bill Gelsomino gained 20 yards in four carries. The offensive line led by tackle Tom Harris controlled most of the Pups, except for DE Rick Horn, who picked the big city over UMass, who recovered a fumble and played a tough defensive game.

SCORING

UM Finnerty, 40 yd. pass from Harriman (Tsirisos kick)
UM Mondalto, 59 yd run (Kneeland kick)
BU Winanski, 26 yd interception (Lucci Kick)
UM Brady, 8 yd run (Kneeland kick)
UM Pallone, 3 yd run (Kneeland missed kick)
BU Molock, 43 yd pass from Williams (rush failed)
UM Warren, 41 yd pass from Rohan (Kneeland missed kick)

Wrestling Roll Around

By JOHN BOCK

It's the summer of '72 and the site is the Games of the Twentieth Olympiad where the possibilities of who is going to take the most gold medals in what sports is the topic.

The possibilities of the USA are being discussed. Yes, the Americans should be strong in track and swimming, as always. Gymnastics, a possible dark horse.

Wrestling, a knowing smile crept over the normally stern Soviet faces. A week later they weren't smiling as three times the American national anthem signaled the victories of Dan Gable, Ben Peterson, and Wayne Wells. Wrestling had done far more than they had ever set out to do and in the process gave the American public a view of the oldest sport in the world.

In an attempt to help spread the popularity of wrestling, Coach Homer Barr has extended an invitation to the entire University community to attend the Sunday night Wrestling Roll Arounds in the wrestling room at Boyden Gym.

From 7:00 to 8:00 p.m. each Sunday, anyone is invited to come in and use the mats to their own ends. Some of the varsity will be on hand to help those who would like to become better acquainted with the sport.

Wrestling is not the most popular sport in New England, but it is on the rise and after the success of the Olympic team, indications are that more people would like to know more about it. UMass, you have the chance.

Pirates Top Reds Lead Series 2-1

By BOB ESTELLE

The Pittsburgh Pirates took a 2-1 lead in their best of five series with a come from behind 3-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds yesterday.

The Big Red Machine scored first in the bottom of the third. Shortstop Darrell Chaney started it off with a single to right. Two outs later, Chaney was on second and scored on Joe Morgan's single over second baseman Dave Cash's head. Morgan then stole second base and scored on Bobby Tolan's single. But Tolan was out trying to stretch his single into a double. That was all the Cincinnati scoring for the afternoon.

The Pirates started to chip away at the Reds' lead in the fifth when catcher Manny Sanguillen homered over the left field wall.

They tied the score in the seventh when reliever Pedro Borbon hit Richie Hebner and Sanguillen followed with a single to center. After Gene Alley sacrificed the runners over, Red manager Sparky Anderson relieved Borbon with his ace, Clay Carroll.

Carroll intentionally walked pinch hitter Vic Davalillo to set up a force situation. But Renaldo Stennett hit a "Baltimore chop" bouncer which landed between Morgan and Tony Perez which neither one could handle, tying the score.

The go-ahead run was scored by the defending World Champion Bucs in the eighth. With one out, Willie Stargell walked and went to third on Al Oliver's double to left. Hebner was intentionally walked and then, Sanguillen hit a ground ball which Chaney had trouble handling at his shortstop position. He got the force at second but Sanguillen beat Morgan's relay to first.

The game ended that way. The winner for the Pirates was Bruce Kison, who had relieved starter Nelson Briles in the seventh. Dave Giusti saved the game for Kison and Clay Carroll took the loss for the Redlegs.

Booters Shutout WPI In Mudbath 3-0

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The UMass Soccer team got back on its winning ways Saturday morning with a 3-0 victory over the Engineers from Woreester Tech. The victory, in the muddy fields across from Boyden brings the Minutemen's season record to 2 and 1 and dropped WPI to its third loss without a win.

The steady downpour, which preceded the game and ushered through to completion, may have satisfied the whims of the neighborhood ducklings, but for everyone else at the soccer field on this morning the rain brought nothing but havoc.

The Minutemen wasted no time, and got what proved to be the winning goal at the three minute mark of the first half as Jeff Hague scored off of a corner kick by Bollinger.

Only five minutes later Tom Coburn scored the second UMass goal as he went in all alone and faked the WPI goalie out of his shirt and deposited the ball into the net behind him.

The score was 2-0 as the two teams raced inside at the conclusion of the half.

The Minutemen began in the second half where they left off at the end of the first stanza as they continued to control the flow of the contest. Midway through the half, Tom Coburn scored his second goal of the game and fourth of the young season as he took a pass from Nugent and put it away.

Carl Vercollone wasn't tested too stiffly in recording the shutout, although he did make a fine save in the first half beating a WPI attacker to the ball in front of the UMass net.

For the first time this season the entire squad saw action, as coach Gerry Redmond was able to substitute with a three goal cushion. The coach also commented that he thought the team played well in view of the treacherous field conditions but mentioned the problem his squad has had in finding the net from close range.

This afternoon the Minutemen play host to a strong squad from BU, which is coming off a victorious effort over the Maine Blackbears, conquerors of UMass lay week.

The JV's were like wise vistorious against WPI, as they nipped the engineers 2-1 in a hard fought contest. Polano scored the first UMass goal off of a corner kick from Boyle in the early goings, but WPI came back to tie the game 1-1 in the first few minutes of the second half.

The game cruised along until, with 2 minutes left in the game, Dave Penza scored the winning goal, as he knocked a pass from Bill Belcher home.

So, the undefeated JV's head toward a showdown with cross town rival Amherst this Saturday in a key game for the JV Minutemen. The squad also plays Ludlow High this Thursday afternoon, a team which tied Amherst in a scrimmage recently.

Crew Edges WPI

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

With a high wind and a strong current last Sunday, the UMass white shell edged a determined Worcester Polytechnical Institute crew by 3/10 second, to win the senior eight with coaxswain race in the Lowell Tech Fall Festival Regatta.

The other UMass shell entered, the red one, finished fourth, trailing the white shell, Worcester Polytech and the Coast Guard lightweight shell.

Earlier, the pair without a coaxswain, consisting of co-captain Bill Moran and Al Flanders, completely overwhelmed a Lowell Tech pair, and Paul Gowen finished third in the single sculler event.

The two eights were chosen Sunday morning by Coach Mike Vespoli in order to divide the strength. The white squad held onto a slim lead at the finish to edge the sprinting Polytech crew.

The senior pair of Moran and Flanders took the lead after 500 meters and for all practical purposes, the 2,000 meter race was over. The only worry was the rough water, as the Lowell Tech pair languished 57 seconds behind.

Soph Paul Gowen raced for the first time in the single sculler and trailed Vespar Boat Club's Jack St. Clair and Riverside's Boat Club's Dave McGale by 15 seconds.

The Head of the Charles Regatta is upcoming in two weeks, as this tune up showed that the rowers still need more work. At the Charles, the competition will be much tougher, so the oarsmen will have their work cut out for them.

Minutemen Topple UVM 34-13

By EARLE BARROLL

If you haven't already heard, the UMass football team defeated Vermont, 33-14, at Burlington on Saturday.

But, unless you were there to brave the driving rains and arctic cold (like us members of the press who were sheltered in the press box) the true meaning behind this particular 33-14 is missing.

There's a growing proverb in the Yankee Conference that goes something like this: When you tread on foreign lands be happy that you leave with a victory...period.

And so it was on Saturday as the Minutemen (3-0 overall and 2-0 in the Conference) had all they could handle from a fired-up Catamount squad and a rowdy homecoming crowd in coming from behind after trailing (yes, trailing) 14-10 at the half.

Open the record books and one has to go all the way back to 1956 – that's sixteen lean years – to when a Vermont football team was leading any UMass squad on the gridiron.

And it was not until Dick MacPherson gave the Cats a heavy dose of Peil Pennington and Steve Schubert that sixteen years of trying finally went for naught.

It was early in the second quarter that Yankee Conference proverb number one, two, three...etc., took shape. UMass had the ball, third and four on its own nine yard line. Paul Metallo got the call and was blasted just short of the first down, but the impact of the hit rendered him unconscious for a couple of minutes and out for the remainder of the game.

If this wasn't enough, on the very next play Vermont tied the score at 7-7 when co-captains Wayne Bulman and Rich Rostosky combined efforts to block and Andy Dutkanicz punt and recover it in the end zone.

The Minutemen had scored late in the first quarter when Metallo knifed over from three yards out after he and Tim Berra (Yogi was also there) hooked up on a 57 yard option pass to the UVM three.

After Mark Palau booted UMass ahead by three, the Catamounts drove 62 yards (their only sustained offensive effort of the game, thanks to Ed McAleney, Paul St. Onge and company) with quarterback Earl Olsen and end Tim Sullivan covering the final nine.

That's sixteen years of frustration wrapped into 30minutes. Now, the official unwrapping.

Within five minutes of second half action, Pennington and cohorts had the Minutemen back where everyone this side of Burlington (and then again, the betting odds in the stands had UMass by ten) expected them to be.

As MacPherson said (after surviving the second half in shirt sleeves), "Peil took the ball and drove it right down their throats."

Following a poor Vermont punt that gave the Minutemen excellent field position at the UVM 32, Peil raced 15 yards on an option (ala Greg Landry), found Billy Hanifan along the sidelines for ten more and completed the series with a seven yard bullet to Schubert who was all alone in the end zone.

Less than two minutes later, sophomore linebacker Dennis Kiernan intercepted an Olsen pass and returned it to midfield where another 15 yards was jacked on via one of numerous UVM personal fouls (179 yards worth).

On the second play from scrimmage, Pennington unwound on a 35 yard bomb that bisected two defenders and landed in the outstretched hands of - who else? - Schubert who made a brilliant over the shoulder grab.

Pennington went on to record his third TD pass of the afternoon when he hit tight end Gary Mika on a five yard shot to complete the scoring late in the fourth quarter.

Schubert was superb. On top of his two TD catches, he ran three-end-arounds for 40 yards. And in the second quarter following Vermont's first touchdown he returned the kickoff 58 yards to set up the first of two Palau field goals.

"You have to be impressed," MacPherson said after the game. "everything that could have happened bad happened. This type of weather took away our game of speed and varied offense. And when you get behind on a day like this, it's awful tough to get points back. But these guys hung in there and that's what counts."

It also turns sixteen years of trying into an infinity.

UMASS FLANKER Steve Shubert is about to catch a touchdown pass from Peil Pennington. The TD which made the score 23-14 at the time, turned out to be merely icing on the cake. The TD was one of two TD's scored by the Pennington-Schubert combination on the day who sparked the Minutemen to a 33-14 win. (Photo by Kenny Sulin)

The Refs Were Out To Lunch

By MARTY KELLEY

Burlington, V.T.–The beers flowed almost as freely as the cheap talk in this downtown northern suburbia nearly a dozen hours before game time. Yes, it was Homecoming for all the Green Mountain Boys, present and past. Places like Hanniballs, The Blue Tooth, The Billboard, etc., were damn rowdy but they were in no way able to compete with the debauchery at Centennial Field scarcely a dozen hours later.

To say the Catamount Claw was in vogue Saturday afternoon would be too kind. If you stood between those muddy harshmarks, wore white, answered to the name Minuteman, and were the protectorate of New England's number one ranking, then you were in trouble. For those angry "Cats" were after you.

Well, two concussions, near pneumonia, and 176 yards of flagrant penalties later, you could say it was nice to get home dry and alive from Burlington.

"All we wanted to do was get up here, get a win and get the hell out of here," said a rain-soaked MacPherson after the game. Mac knew as well as I did that we had nothing to gain and everything to lose in the inclemency at Centennial Field that forgetful Saturday. Yes, it was a bit scary for awhile as for the first time since 1956, a Vermont team had a lead over a Mass. unit. But the real fear rested with Paul Metallo and Richie Herman.

Both staggered off the tattered turf under their own power but hardly their own sanity. Both Minutemen were knocked senseless under the wrath of the determined Catamount. Yes, the tempo for the grapple had been set. Yeah, you can rationalize the situation and call it football if you want to, but clearly a band of well paid referees let this one get out of hand.

I'm sure Kent Best told you that the refs were out to lunch, but it's not so much the fact that th game was miscalled because who's to determine that. I'm saying it could have been handled better with a few bench warnings being issued.

But it was too late and there he was lying in the 17 yard line motionless. With the binoculars from the press box I could see that Paul Metallo for nearly two minutes didn't move a muscle. It scared the life out of me. There's Paul in limbo felled from what game films will reveal, an extra shot, not needed.

At the half, no one was informed of Paul's condition. Being loyal to the radio crews and the rest of the writers, I sprinted through the wind and went to talk to Paul and the team's medical staff.

Well, there he was all bundled up in his Red warmup. One of the best things that ever happened to a UMass backfield wasn't saying too much. It was a distraught look that really measured the man of Paul Metallo. yes, he was upset that he couldn't play the rest of the game, that's Paul the competitor. But yet Paul the young man of Pittsfield birth was fearful for himself. He knew he was hurt and at that hour in the cold, impersonal icy rain and mud in Burlington where friends were few and far between, Paul's future hung on a string.

But I went to Paul not only as an envoy from the press box, but as a friend. I held his strong bicep and asked him, "How bad is it, Paul?" We're really good friends and he wouldn't say much. Then I broke down and told him my mission, that the Boston press and half the state of Vermont and our campus hooked to the transactions of Centennial Field by a phone line simply had to know. He told me to check with the physicians. Kind of an impersonal reply but Paul was upset and as he gazed down the sidelines so were the rest of the Minutemen. To look at the angered faces of Pat Brady, Chuck Hamaty, and Jimmy Mahaney, well in a way, it reminded me of the loyalty of these Spartans to the felled body of Leonidas.

Yes, the Minutemen were upset and they had a right to be. For just what is the price of victory worth?

Soon Richie Herman left the field of battle still thinking he was back at the Harvard Yard. Richie Cronin went back to Amherst minus one knee and what else is new. Well they weje rough, no denying that and it hurt and I doubt that Richie and Paul are better men for spending the night in the Infirmary.

Well, it's over and thank God for that.

It's a victory and still after the mud, the rain and the hurt at Burlington, the University of Massachusetts, as Earle will tell you, with the shear brilliance of Peil and Steve, is still New England's number one college football team and when Boston University gets to the other end of the Pike this Saturday, the Minutemen will still be.

But there was some hurt left at Centennial Field and when nothing but post mortems were heard about the Catamount campus this holiday weekend, I can justifiably say it's sure as hell nice to be home dry and alive.

CC Team Edged By Northeastern

By WALT POWERS

Saturday at Franklin Park, the UMass Cross-Country Team had the first two men across the finish line, and overwhelmed St. Johns of New York. Yet they still lost to Northeastern. The final score was N.U. 25, UMass 30, and St. Johns 77.

The race was held in a driving rain, and this made for a somewhat slower overall race. It was highlighted by a tight, almost classic duel for first place. At the one-mile mark, the whole Northeastern team took off, with Bill Gillin, Randy Thomas, and Tom Maguire in close pursuit. It developed into a battle between Gillin, Thomas and first Bill Rowe, then Ken Flanders.

Throughout the race, both Rowe and Flanders tried to pull away, but neither could open a big lead. About three quarters of a mile from the finish, Gillin and Thomas broke free, with Gillin winning by about forty yards.

After Thomas had taken second, the parade began. Northeastern came first, taking the next five positions, and with them, the meet. Then Tom Maguire led a group of seven Minutemen across the line, taking seventh through fourteenth. After that it was mostly St. Johns.

The turning point of the race came at the one-mile mark. Coach Ken O'Brien had this assessment, "Northeastern beat us in the second mile. We ran just as fast, or even faster than they did in the first, fourth, and fifth miles. But when N.U. made their move, the team, as a whole didn't challenge them. The result was that Northeastern built up a big early lead, and this gave them a psychological advantage."

UMass emerges from the meet with a record of one and three, with close losses to two of the top teams in New England. Ken O'Brien has mixed emotions. "The team as a whole ran a better race. The freshmen, especially Tom Maguire, Mike Conlin, Phil Broughton, and Mike Roy, have been impressive. At this point in the season, the team is better off than any team of the past three years. But this team has as much potential as any I've ever coached here."

Tyner Asks For 'Message To The Country'

By BRIAN COYNE

Calling for a vote that will send "a message to the country that the people want a new direction," Jarvis Tyner, Vice-Presidential candidate of the Communist Party, spoke last night before a full hall in Hasbrouck Laboratory.

Tyner charged that the election of 1972 offered no real alternative to the people. He said that no difference exists between the Democratic and Republican parties and that the people must vote for an organization independent of the existing two-party structure if any effective change is to be realized. In the opinion of the party, candidates Nixon and McGovern had no fundamental differences, only tactical differences.

In 1972, the party's main objective is to establish its legitimacy among the people, Tyner said. "We are fighting for our very basic right to appear on the ballot in all 50 states." Though the party will not be on the ballot in Massachusetts in '72, it will be on in approximately 15 states. In 1968, when it ran its first Presidential candidate, the Communist Party appeared on the ballots in 2 states.

He said that in 1972, the people are presented with an unprecedented degree of confusion and deception on the part of the candidates. He acknowledged President Nixon to be the main enemy of the people. The principle weapons of the administration were said to be racism and anti-Communism.

Tyner accused the Nixon administration of "failing to do what must be done to end the war in Indochina." Namely, remove all military assistance and support of the Thieu regime in Saigon. He believes the POW controversy to be a confusing issue in the campaign. He said that there has never been a war in history where the POW question was settled before the political settlement of the war was negotiated. Tyner charged that McGovern, while advocating a pull-out of U.S. forces in Indochina, is also pledging military assistance to Israel.

On the problem of the rising cost of living, Tyner cited the way out of the present crisis is to end the war and shift the basis of the economy from wartime to that of peace-time. He also advocated the nationalization of the food industry, utilitities, and the medical profession. He also credited the Communist party of being the first to propose Social Security, veterans' benefits, and hospital insurance.

Tyner asserted that a vote for the Communist party would not be a wasted one. It would serve as a warning to the people of the country that they are still active. At the same time, he said that he did not realistically expect the Communist vote to influence the election either way.

The candidate asked the people to examine closely the platform of the Communist party and see if that wasn't what was needed in the country. A short resume of the platform follows:

1) An end to war, militarism and imperialist intrigue.–Withdrawal of all military assistance from Indochina. Shut down all foreign U.S. military bases. End all barriers to full trade relations with all socialist countries.

2) An end to povery; raising of living standards.–End wage freeze. Abolish the Pay Board. Increase welfare benefits to $6,500 per family of four. Raise minimum wages to $5 an hour for all workers. Reduce work to 30 hours at 40 hours pay. Nationalize major industries, plants, and factories under democratic controls.

3) And end to racism.–Spend $10 billion per year for needs of poor, Blacks and other oppressed nationalities and impoverished white workers. Make racism or any type of bigotry a federal crime. Honor old Indian and Mexican treaties.

4) Taxing the rich - End depreciation and depletion allowances. Abolish all income taxes on family earnings of $15,000 a year or less. End tax exemption for trust funds and private foundations.

5) Extension of democracy.–Curb power of Presidency. Abolish the FBI, Subversive Activities Control Board, the House and Senate Internal Security Committees and all repressive laws. Democratize the armed forces.

6) A national youth act administered by youth for the needs of youth.–End the draft. Make available free public quality education from grade school through graduate school.

7) Women's equality.–Pass a Labor Bill of Rights for Women. End wage differentials on the basis of sex. Provide nationwide, 24-hour child care services. Establish maternity leaves at full pay for six months. Provide free abortion service.

McGovern Rally At UMass Today

Actress Shirley MacLaine, Sissy Farenthold, and Susan McGovern Rowan will speak at UMass today in a rally for Presidential candidate George McGovern.

The rally will be held in the Student Union Ballroom, beginning at noon.

Also appearing will be Dennis Hult, a folk-singer from Hartford, Connecticut, and two UMass performers, Chuck Ortolani and Rich Perkins.

The rally is expected to be the largest gathering of McGovern supporters in Western Massachusetts for McGovern Day. McGovern Day will mark the beginning of the last month of campaigning for the November Presidential election.

The Day includes appearances around the state by the UMass speakers, as well as by Senators Edmund Muskie and Edward Kennedy, former State Rep. Michael Dukakis, ex-Attorney General Ramsey Clark, educator John Holt, composer Tom Lehrer, author John Updike, Mass. Attorney General Robert Quinn, and R.I. Governor John Licht.

Susan McGovern Rowan, 26, is the daughter of the Senator. A sociology major, she attended the University of Wisconsin. Her husband, who will also appear at the UMass rally, is Jim Rowan, a writer for Nation magazine. They have one eight month old son.

Sissy Farenthold is a member of the Texas House of Representatives. In 1971, she helped expose a bribery scandal in that body. She challenged the traditional Texas Democratic leadership by running for governor in this Spring's primary, losing by a narrow vote. During the National Democratic Convention, Farenthold was nominated for Vice-President and received the second highest number of votes.

Shirley MacLaine, in addition to her acting, has written a book, and has been a delegate to two National Democratic Conventions. She has starred in "The Apartment", "Sweet Charity", "Irma La Douce", and many other films.

The rally is free and open to the public.

Peter Rabbit Speaks Tonight

Peter Rabbit is scheduled to speak tonight, October 11 at 8:00 P.M. in the Student Union Ballroom. Peter Rabbit is best known for his communal settlements in Colorado. He is the author of DROP CITY a geodesic domed community of the same name, which was born in the middle 60's.

"For me, Drop City is my garret, a place where I can write and live in freedom. Creation has, as its source the fullness of joy. We want freedom for our bodies and freedom for our social selves, we want love. Creation is joy. Joy is love. Life, love, joy and energy are all one. We are all one."

Presently, Peter Rabbit is living in Libre, a second communal settlement also of geodesic-domed architecture, in Colorado. He is interested in various alternative life styles, social structures and change. Rabbit is involved with the plight of the American Indians of the Southwest. In addition he is knowledgeable about spiritual teachings and practices from several cultures. Some other of his many varied interests are ecology, solar energy, and education.

Tonight the Distinguished Visitors Program gives you the opportunity to hear and question a very entertaining person. All are welcome.

Rabbit will hold a workshop in the main lounge of Pierpont dorm at 2:00 P.M. today. The subject of the workshop will be: "Communes, communal building, and community building." All are welcome.

"Project Self" For Women

Registration for the Division of Continuing Education's "Project Self", a series of workshops for women, will be held Oct. 9 through 20. Women may register in person at Munson Hall on the UMass. campus, or by mail. There is a $5 registration fee which will be applied to the $25 tuition for the program.

Workshops on 17 different subjects will be held once a week, beginning Oct. 23 and running through the week of Dec. 13.

A limited number of scholarships will be available for those who need them. Women on welfare will receive full scholarships, and women who are tuition-paying students at any area school may attend the workshops for half price. In addition, free child care will be provided.

A pre-registration coffee hour will be held Oct. 17 in Memorial Hall, UMass, at 7:30 p.m. for the purpose of meeting the workshop leaders and deciding which workshops to take. Full information is available at Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall, or by calling 545-0883.

Olver Calls For State Development Corp.

By MDC STAFF

Massachusetts should establish an Industrial and Community Development Corporation in order to attract new industry and expand existing industry in the state, according to state Rep. John W. Olver, D-Amherst.

The proposed agency would, according to Olver, "plan with local communities for industrial and commercial parks and urban redevelopment. The corporations would issue revenue bonds to construct the needed industrial, commercial and residential facilities.

"Banks and individuals provide the capital via bonds of low risk and a relatively low interest rate," he continued, "with the capital costs being reduced for industry. Expected profits from the industries so created would repay the bondholder."

Olver, who made his remarks this past weekend during a coffee hour at a local home, is attempting to unseat John Barrus, R-Goshen, for the state Senate seat in the 2nd Hampshire District.

The Corporation, he said, would also work actively on studying where the industry is needed most, where work forces of special skills reside, and plan overall state economic policy.

"A similar corporation exists in New York and has proven quite successful," he continued. "Massachusetts must create such a vehicle to help generate new industry, expand existing industry, and thus get our economy back on the right track again."

MARY Holds Introductory Meeting

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY

Twelve members of the Massachusetts Association for the Reintergration of Youth (MARY) met last night in the first of a proposed 6-8 week value clarification session. Basically, the MARY Program (an extension of the Juvenile Opportunities Extension Program-JOE) is entailed in housing six youths from the Westfield Detention Center with six students of the University in Lewis and Webster Houses as an alternative to the Detention Center.

Joel Goodman, a doctoral candidate in the School of Education, led the discussion-involvement session, pointing out three main topics as an outline to these classes, 1) focusing on strength, 2) understanding what we value, and 3) nourishing our natural creativity, stressing the importance of flexibility, individual uniqueness, respect, support, and trust of all the people involved with this program.

As an ice-breaker to introduce everyone involved, each person wrote down how they felt at that moment, their likes and dislikes in certain areas, chose between having money, looks, or intelligence, and then had to find their exact opposite among the people present. The next step of getting to know each other became a short scenario of what kind of aminal they would want to become and why. Next, each person chose a partner and gave each other a brief autobiography.

For future sessions Goodman is planning synectics, or what he calls "constructive dreaming as a way of solving problems."

Barrus Rally

Governor Francis Sargent will appear in Northampton tomorrow with State Senator John Barrus for a campaign rally which will be followed by a fund-raising luncheon.

Sargent is expected to address a crowd in front of the Northampton Hotel on King Street at 12:16. He will hold a ten minute press conference at 12:30. The fund-raising dinner will follow.

Barrus is the Republican Senator from the 2nd Hampshire District running for re-election.

The Black Athletic Council will be holding a meeting tonight, October 11, at Boyden Gym. The meeting will be held in Room 227 at 8:00p.m.

Senate Passes Concert Funds

By STEVE FINE

The Student Senate's Budget Committee last night passed Concert Committees apportionment of its $10,000 budget by a vote of 6-1.

The budget, which is to go before the Senate tonight, is divided into Special Administration, Minor Concerts, and Major Concerts.

One item in the Special Administration section of the budget that drew a great deal of attention was $218 the committee had allotted itself for the National Entertainment Conference at the end of October in Durham, New Hampshire.

Rita Tonucci, Secretary of Budgets questioned whether it was necessary to send three people to the conference as opposed to just one.

Mitch Press, spokesman for the Concert Committee justified the need for three people by emphasizing that a lot of seminars on booking, publicity and production would be going on during the weekend and "three people would be needed to concentrate in different areas and later compare notes."

The committee voted to let three people go

In the area of Minor concerts, the committee listed its cost at $2,160 which they claimed they would reap back from the sale of tickets. Jeff Wilner a member of the 20 man committee said the small concerts would be put on to increase the big concert funds. The first of these mini-concerts will be in November.

The funds that were listed for the production of the major spring concert were set at $9,714. Wilner says the groups have not been chosen yet. "We won't be able to choose anyone until February since group tours are still unplanned," he said.

Bromery, Booth To Speak To Senate

By GARY TWARDZIK

Chancellor Randolph Bromery and David Booth, president of the Faculty Senate, will make special statements to the undergraduate Student Senate tonight in an apparent change of Senate format.

According to John Hogan, speaker of the Student Senate, the appearances of Bromery and Booth reflect a desire for increased interaction among students, faculty, and administration. Representatives of both the administration and the faculty will be appearing each week before the Senate. "This change will allow both groups to talk clearly to organized student government," Hogan said.

Likewise, representatives of the Student Senate will be entitled to speak at Faculty Senate meetings. Hogan believes that this will enable the Senate to become more responsive to faculty and administration.

Tonight's meeting will commence with a speech by Larry Ladd, SGA president. The agenda includes the completion of judicial appointments begun last week and appointments to various Senate committees. Ladd is also expected to make appointments to the Athletic Council tonight.

Other Senate considerations will be a revision of the UMass towing service and the possibility of adding a food service operation in the Goodell Building for next year.

Proposals concerning the new SUG Board will also be aired at the meeting. Appointments to an interim board consisting of four undergraduates and one graduate student were made last week.

Hogan also expects that an opening on the Concert Committee will be announced. The Senate has previously guaranteed $10,000 for a spring concert

News Analysis

Fac-Sen And Rhetoric

By ARNIE NEWBERGER

The proposal to abolish the Rhetoric Requirement will appear on the Faculty Senate agenda in two weeks according to its secretary, Robert Wellman.

The proposal, which came as a result of a year-long study by the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, was passed last week by the Faculty Senate Committee on Academic Matters, and needs only to be passed by the entire Senate before the recommendation is official University policy.

How the Senate will vote on this controversial proposal is not known and experienced observers say that it can go either way.

Even the Senate leadership could not predict how the Faculty Senate would vote. Secretary Wellman said that he could usually predict how the Senate votes but this was one issue that could not be predicted. He pointed out however that not one recommendation passed by Academic Matters last year was overturned by the Faculty, although some proposals were returned to the committee for further study. Wellman stressed his neutrality in the issue and would not even offer personal opinion.

Senate Chairman and presiding officer of the Faculty Senate Professor David Booth, was equally aloof when asked for a comment on the Rhetoric debate. Booth said that he could not predict the outcome either but he added that, "traditionally the Faculty Senate has high regard and confidence in its Committee on Academic Affairs and I assume that the Senate will endorse and legitimize the committee's decision". But Professor Wellman quickly added that this in no way means that Senate passage can be predicted.

The picture remains clouded. It is generally a new Faculty Senate as many new senators have been elected and many of the old faces are gone. It is a Senate that has had no major controversies so far which makes predicting that much more difficult. English Department Head Joe Frank and Acting Program Director Mal Sillers are girded for the Senate debate and as Frank told students at an Academic Affairs Committee meeting last week, "we intend to pin back your ears on this issue in front of the Faculty Senate."

How will Academic Affairs Committee Chairman Nick Apostola handle the debate? And what kind of support will he get from the student body? These are the questions that are still to be answered as the first major academic controversy of the year is about to be played out in the Faculty Senate.

Mal Sillers claims that if the Rhetoric Program disappears as he says it will if it is no longer required, then it will have nationwide effect. Nick Apostola claims that the Program's directors have been given a fair chance and have failed to make good on their promises. The Faculty Senate must now decide who is right.

Pro Newsmen Available To Journalism Students

Earl Caldwell, a reporter for the San Francisco bureau of the New York Times and Robert Maynard, the Washington Post Ombudsman will be on campus Friday to meet with students interested in journalism.

The two will meet with Afro-Am students, the Collegian, and will be available at some time of the day to the entire University community. Their schedule will be published later this week.

Caldwell and Maynard, guests of the Journalistic Studies Program and the Collegian are considered to be among the best newspaper men in the nation. They are perhaps the most famous black journalists in the straight press.

Caldwell best known for his series on the Black Panthers and the resulting court case when he refused to testify about the Panthers before a grand jury, has worked for the now defunct New York Herald Tribune and newspapers in Rochester, N.Y. and Lancaster Pennsylvania before moving to the Times.

Caldwell has covered the Angela Davis case for the Times, much of the civil rights struggle and was with Martin Luther King when he was assassinated.

Maynard's job as ombudsman on the Post is, in the words of Benjamin C. Bradlee, Executive Editor, "to monitor the performance of the newspaper in the pursuit of its goals. Maynard writes assessments for the editors on the performance of the Post based on his own experience, staff stimulus and reader reaction. He also does pieces for the editorial page.

Maynard started in the newspaper business at the age of 16. Before joining the Post he was a reporter for the York Pennsylvania Gazette and Daily. In 1966 he was a Neiman Fellow at Harvard, after which he was hired as a reporter by the Post. Before his appointment as Ombudsman he was a metropolitan and national reporter.

FRENCH TROUPE TO PUT ON PLAY

This year, U-Mass. will again have the honor of a performance by the Tréteau de Paris. This renowned French troupe, sponsored by the French corridor here at U-Mass., will present Beaumarchais' Le Barbier de Séville.

The comedy of the play itself focuses on the conventional theme of young love outwitting unsympathetic and unperceptive elders. The handsome Count Almaviva, aided by the barber Figaro, comes to Séville to woo the lovely Rosina, ward of the fat, elderly Dr. Bartholo. His intentions are somewhat hindered by Dr. Bartholo, who keeps her shut away and intends to marry her himself. But the tables turn upon him and young love triumphs. The visual humor and pantomimes in the play render it enjoyable to those in the audience whose knowledge of French is scanty or non-existent.

The performance is Friday, October 13 at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are now on sale and can be purchased in room 128 of the Campus Center.

In The Nation And The World

Kissinger Talks Extended To Fourth Day

WASHINGTON (AP) - Presidential adviser Henry Kissinger and North Vietnamese negotiators completed a third day of private talks in Paris Tuesday and agreed to extend their sessions into a fourth day the White House announced.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, in making this disclosure, refused again to discuss the substance of the unprecedentedly prolonged talks or to say whether the extension meant a breakthrough in negotiations is near.

Ziegler said word of the extension came in a cable from Kissinger to President Nixon.

The President's assistant for national security affairs had been scheduled to return to Washington Tuesday night after three days of talks with North Vietnamese negotiators Le Duc Tho and Xuan Thuy.

But at about the same time Paris airport officials were saying Kissinger's departure had been delayed Ziegler told newsmen at the White House that Kissinger and the North Vietnamese "have agreed to extend the talks to a fourth day."

This means, he said, that Kissinger and his top assistant, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., will return to Washington Wednesday night to report to Nixon.

Asked the significance of the extension Ziegler replied "I can't draw any conclusions at all or discuss the talks."

This sudden development came after another day during which officials again refused to disclose anything about the secret talks which until now never had extended for more than two days.

Ziegler's comment earlier Tuesday was typical: "I am not prepared to characterize in any way the talks that are taking place."

There have been persistent reports that Kissinger and Haig were centering their discussions on the possible makeup of the South Vietnamese government after the fighting ends. This long has been a principal obstacle to agreement.

In Saigon, U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker conferred with South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, whose resignation has been demanded by the Communists, in their public peace proposals.

A Saigon newspaper, Tin Song, which has links to Thieu's chief adviser, reported there has been no change in the basic U.S. and South Vietnamese positions in the Paris talks.

Some sources said it is likely either Kissinger or Haig would go to Saigon soon for more conferences with Thieu, but Ziegler said there were no plans for either to do any further traveling.

Ziegler, responding to questions at a White House news briefing, rejected contentions that the extended negotiations were linked to the coming election. "We have stated the purpose of the meetings I think rather clearly," he said.

Meanwhile, Herb Klein, the Nixon administration's director of communications, and one of many surrogates speaking on the campaign trail on Nixon's behalf, told newsmen that he is under instructions from Nixon and Kissinger to treat the negotiations in a low-key manner. He said his instructions are not to raise peace expectations.

Antibusing Bill Looks Dead

WASHINGTON (AP) - Chances of Senate passage of an antibusing bill faded Tuesday when an initial move to cut off debate fell 10 short of the required two-thirds majority.

The vote was 45 for putting the Senate's debate-closing cloture rule into effect and 37 against.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D—Minn., one of those opposed to the House-passed bill, declared it now has no chance.

"I'll give you an early obituary," he told a reporter. "The bill has had an early and ignominious death but one it richly deserved."

Sen. Robert P. Griffin, R—Mich., in the forefront of the fight for the bill, said he still sees a possibility of getting a two-thirds majority to terminate debate but acknowledged it is "a real long shot."

A vote is to be taken again Wednesday and, if necessary, on Thursday also on invoking cloture, but the key point in Tuesday's vote was that 37 senators voted against the motion.

Griffin said he figured one or two of these 37 might shift on later votes, but he said also some senators absent for the Tuesday vote are against cloture.

As long as 34 senators, one more than a third of the total membership, stand firm against shutting off debate, cloture cannot be obtained.

However, Sen. James B. Allen, D—Ala., who played a key role in getting the bill before the Senate, said he was "well pleased" with the vote and expects a slightly better showing Wednesday.

He told a reporter that even if a two-thirds majority cannot be mustered for cloture, the bill's supporters can launch a fight against a motion to put it aside.

If this happens, the situation will be reversed and backers of the bill instead of opponents could wind up conducting a filibuster as Congress drives for adjournment by the end of the week.

Allen told a reporter the vote showed that a substantial majority of senators voting favor the bill and produced the biggest margin yet in the Senate for antibusing legislation.

Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R—Fla., another supporter of the bill, said "I think we've got a chance for cloture by Thursday."

The roll call showed 20 Democrats and 25 Republicans voting to cut off debate. Against were 25 Democrats and 12 Republicans.

The bill, passed by the House on Aug. 18 by a 282-102 vote, would make busing for school desegregation a last resort and even then ban busing a child any farther than to the school second-nearest to his home.

It would permit also the reopening of court orders in school desegregation cases to bring them in line with the bill's restrictions on busing.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R—Mass., told the Senate the bill was "a prescription for returning to the doctrine of separate-but-equal schools"-a doctrine struck down by the Supreme Court in its landmark 1954 school desegregation decision.

"This is an anti-desegregation bill," said Brooke, contending its passage "would seriously divide and confuse the nation."

He said that contrary to complaints that the courts have forced massive busing, only 3 per cent of student busing is for the purpose of school desegregation.

And Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R—N.Y., said the Department of Health, Education and Welfare estimates that of that 3 per cent, two-thirds of the students would be taken to school by bus anyhow.

Doc Calls Diet Pills 'Clinically Worthless'

BALTIMORE (AP) - Diet pills are "clinically worthless" and can produce more addiction than weight loss, a Johns Hopkins doctor who headed a Food and Drug Administration study team charged Tuesday.

Dr. Thaddeus E. Prout, an associate professor of medicine, said the team recommended that the federal government ban refillable prescriptions of diet pills and impose quotas on their manufacture.

He reported that the team-two statisticians and four doctors-found that diet pills can help a person lose a fraction of a pound a week over short periods.

"But," he said, "there is no evidence whatsoever that they are useful over an extended period of time."

The public, he continued, is "spending unnecessary and hard-earned funds on agents that are clinically worthless."

The study is part of an FDA review of diet pills preparatory to recommendations it will make to the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs concerning their usage.

Prout, a former member of the FDA's advisory committee on metabolic and endocrine drugs, said that amphetamines are the most dangerous diet pills.

They leave the user "nervous, anxious and tense" without any noticeable weight reduction, he charged.

In Brief

The Pentagon POWs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government official told congressmen Tuesday the Pentagon is neither exempting returning prisoners of war from disciplinary action for conduct in North Vietnam nor prejudging that any is warranted.

Dr. Roger E. Shields, chairman of the Pentagon's Prisoner of War and Missing in Action Task Group, also testified that the condition of the three pilots released last month indicate Hanoi's treatment of American prisoners has improved.

Market Responds to Peace Talks

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock market prices rallied sharply Tuesday in response to renewed peace hopes for Vietnam, then backed off near the close.

The pattern was typical of many recent sessions, in which rumors and reports involving peace talks have bounced the market around like a rubber ball.

Tuesday's upswing came from news that presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger was meeting with North Vietnamese negotiators in Paris for an unprecedented third straight day of talks.

Ruling on 1968 Convention Arrests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Tuesday turned down the appeal of a group of persons arrested for disorderly conduct at the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago who say the arrests violated their constitutional rights to freedom of speech and assembly.

McGovern Issues New Plan To End The War

CHICAGO (AP) - Democrat George McGovern said Tuesday night that as president he would "forget about saving face," command an end to U.S. involvement in the Vietnam war and send his vice president to Hanoi to speed the return of American prisoners.

Returning to the original theme of his quest for the White House which began formally almost two years ago, McGovern said in a natinally-televised address the difference between President Nixon's policy and his is fundamental:

"It is a choice, after all, between saving face or saving lives. It is a choice between four more years of war, or four years of peace."

The speech, which McGovern strategists regarded as a pivotal one in his uphill challenge to Nixon, was essentially a compilation of what McGovern has said all along.

It included the familiar formula of ending the U.S. bombing, military operations and aid, and withdrawing all American forces within 90 days after he takes office.

Added was the pledge to send Sargent Shriver as vice president to Hanoi "to speed the arrangements for the return of our prisoners and an accounting of the missing."

Taped in Washington Sunday and aired on CBS and various other stations while McGovern was campaigning in Chicago, the speech aimed also at the acknowledged concern of McGovern strategists that voters familiar with McGovern's promises of peace doubted that any president could stop the fighting.

McGovern said he would do it by ordering the military out of Vietnam as soon as he takes office.

"Immediately after taking my oath as president," he said, "if the war has not ended by then, I would issue a national security directive to the secretary of defense, to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and to our commands in the field, with the following orders:

"—Immediately stop all bombing and acts of force in all parts of Indochina;

"—Immediately terminate any shipments of military supplies that continue the war;

"—Immediately begin the orderly withdrawal of all American forces from Vietnam, from Laos and Cambodia with all salvageable American military equipment. And we will assign whatever transportation is required to complete that process and to complete it within 90 days...."

McGovern said he then would notify Hanoi that the United States had taken steps to end the hostilities and call on them to honor their offer to return all prisoners of war and account for all missing in action.

He said he expected this to be completed within 90 days, coinciding with the U.S. withdrawal.

"We would further notify all parties that the United States will no longer interfere in the internal politics of Vietnam," he said, "and that we will allow the Vietnamese people to work out their own settlement.

"The United States is prepared to cooperate to see that any settlement, including a coalition government, gains international recognition."

"Thirdly," McGovern said, "I would send the vice president to Hanoi to speed the arrangements for the return of our prisoners and an accounting of the missing.

"I would also instruct our diplomats to contact the opposing parties in Laos and Cambodia in order to secure release of prisoners held in in those countries and an accounting of missing in action...."

Even a quiet afternoon stroll by this Laotian soldier and his children is disturbed by the almost constant reminders of the wars ravaging the countries of Indochina. US Intensifies Air Blitz

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. warplanes have intensified their air blitz against North Vietnam with the heaviest raids in three weeks, the U.S. Command reported Tuesday.

The command said Air Force, Navy and Marine fighter-bombers flew more than 300 strikes Monday across North Vietnam. It was the fifth straight day in which 300 or more strikes were launched, and the raids were the heaviest since Sept. 17.

B52 eight-engine Stratofortresses pounded the North Vietnamese port of Dong Hoi, 45 miles north of the demilitarized zone, as well as enemy targets in South Vietnam.

Among targets for the fighter-bombers were MIG air bases, vehicle parks, railroad rolling stock, barges, fuel depots, barracks and SAM missile sites.

Air Force pilots reported several explosions at the MIG base at Yen Bai, 80 miles northwest of Hanoi. Navy pilots reported they destroyed 16 buildings at the Thai Binh army barracks, 37 miles southwest of Haiphong.

The Viet Cong's secret radio claimed four U.S. F4 Phantoms and an A37 Dragonfly were shot down Sunday and Monday. The U.S. Command does not report plane losses until search and rescue operations are completed.

A Saigon newspaper with sources close to President Nguyen Van Thieu claimed the air raids were proof of continued American backing for the South Vietnamese leader.

The newspaper Tin Song also sought to dispel reports that secret peace talks in Paris between U.S. and North Vietnamese negotiators were focused on Thieu's political future.

The ground war went into a lull with enemy attacks the lowest since the end of September.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong infantrymen still held at least seven hamlets and a village 14-24 miles north of Saigon along Highway 13.

They moved in five days ago. Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen reported from the field that South Vietnamese troops have received no orders to retake the lost communities.

Deaths Continue In N. Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A powerful explosion killed three youths and set fire to five houses Tuesday night in a Roman Catholic section of Belfast.

Gunmen shot down a part-time soldier in sight of his family earlier in the day, and a man was crushed to death by a bus that overturned under a hail of stones hurled by rioting youngsters.

The day's five deaths brought the fatality toll in Northern Ireland to 602 since sectarian strife erupted three years ago.

The unexplained explosion rocked Balkan Street in the Leeson Street district, regarded as home ground for the Marxist Official wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

An angry mob of 200 blocked police and troops from the scene, described by a Catholic priest as an inferno. Fire and ambulance services were let through.

People fought the blaze with buckets of water. Framed inside the window of one of the blazing houses was the figure of a man, but the heat was so intense nobody could get through to him.

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. George McGovern yawns after making a speech Thursday in Cleveland, Ohio. McGovern addressed the City Club of Cleveland and presented his foreign policy. (AP)

McG Drumming Up TV Audience

DETROIT (AP)-Democrat George S. McGovern, arguing that his contest with President Nixon "is a campaign about peace," spent much of his time Tuesday helping drum up a television audience for his first nationwide speech-on his plan to end the Vietnam war.

With his campaign organization footing the bill, a taped film of a 30-minute McGovern attack on Nixon's Vietnam policies, was to be broadcast coast to coast on the CBS network and other stations at 7:30 p.m. EDT Tuesday night.

Everywhere McGovern has gone since launching an 11-state tour Monday, the Democratic presidential candidate has plugged his TV appearance.

The war, he told one audience, represents "the clearest and sharpest of all the issues between Richard Nixon and George McGovern on Nov. 7."

The Democratic standard-bearer, at a well-attended party fund-raising dinner in Detroit Monday night, referred to recurrent war settlement reports as "election-eve peace rumors."

McGovern said the rumors "do not signal an end to the war and if, which godforbid, Mr. Nixon and Mr. Agnew are reelected on Nov. 7, I believe that means not peace, but four more years of senseless wars and killing and destruction."

McGovern spent much of Tuesday stumping around Michigan, with stops at Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo in addition to Detroit. But he faced formidable competition-intense statewide interest in Tuesday afternoon's third American League playoff baseball game between the Detroit Tigers and the Oakland Athletics.

Talking to a meeting of about 700 retired members of the United Auto Workers Union Tuesday morning, McGovern acknowledged the competition but said that the Tigers and Athletics "are willing to appear on the same field at the same time."

The Democratic candidate, who has tried vainly to lure the President into face-to-face debate, drew a big cheer from his union audience, by adding, "I wish we could get Mr. Nixon to do that."

For the retirees, McGovern tailored his remarks to Social Security and health-care programs.

Campaign '72

Dem Hits Nixon "Assassination"

WASHINGTON (AP)-The chairman of the House Banking Committee Tuesday blamed President Nixon for what he called a Republican attempt "to assassinate an entire political party through espionage."

Rep. Wright Patman, D-Tex., after hearing of a published allegation of political spying and sabotage, said he would try again to get his committee to hold an investigation. But a GOP member, Ben Blackburn of Georgia, said Republicans would be "crazy" to testify.

At a news conference, Patman said he holds the President directly responsible for what he described as "the most sordid political tactics ever employed by a major political party."

His comments, echoed by Sen. George McGovern and his running mate Sargent Shriver, were in response to reports in Tuesday's Washington Post.

The newspaper said the FBI has determined that the Committee for the Re-election of the President used a secret espionage fund in efforts to sabotage the campaigns of every major candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination and zeroed in on McGovern after he won it.

"President Nixon is in charge of his own campaign. He is responsible," Patman said. "This is an attempt to substitute espionage for political discussion. It is a chapter out of the political handbooks of the totalitarian countries."

Muskie Asks Investigation Into Political Espionage

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said Tuesday an independent commission should be appointed to investigate alleged "political espionage" by President Nixon's campaign staff.

The Maine Democrat made the statement in response to a report in the Washington Post citing what it said were examples of Republican sabotage directed at Democratic presidential contenders.

Muskie said, "These press reports suggest a political opposition which is ruthless and unprincipled. These reports of wrongdoing by members of the White House staff are so serious that they require a response by the President himself.

"The President should tell us if these reports are true, how he proposes to get at the facts of these charges and whether he condones this kind of political espionage operation."

The Post quoted a White House aide as acknowledging that he made up a letter which damaged Muskie's campaign in the New Hampshire presidential primary last March. The aide, Ken W. Clawson, denied the statement.

The letter allegedly written by Clawson to the Manchester N.H. Union Leader accused Muskie of condoning a racial slur against French-Canadians by referring to them as "Canucks".

Booze And The Blues

Hearing the phrase "drug problem", people envision a person strung out on acid, barbs, heroin, speed, etc. Take a field trip by the Blue Wall tonight. Watch the folks who hang around the bar. Some are in a severe alcoholic stupor - totally unable to function, passed out in the restrooms, in the Hatch, or outside the bar. People so incapacitated they need to be carried to a more suitable place and revived.

Alcohol is a drug. For this campus and other communities it is the most abused of the available drugs. Alcohol is the trickiest because 1.) it's socially acceptable but, 2.) for one person out of 12 using this drug it's addictive. There is no way to know who will become addicted and who will not.

Following is published a checklist of signs of alcholism distributed by the Worcester County Council on Alcholism, Inc. Be honest with yourself!

1. Do you feel the need for a drink at any definite time during the day?
2. Do you have blackouts or periods of amnesia while drinking?
3. Do you miss school or work or fall short in exercising any duties as a result of drinking?
4. Do you take a drink to settle your nerves?
5. Do you take a drink the first thing in the morning?
6. Do you drink alone?
7. Does anyone who cares about you ever criticize your drinking?
8. Do you start promising not to drink the way you have been drinking?
9. Do you take a drink before going out to a party where you know there will be drinking?
10. Do you ever find yourself gulping drinks while others are drinking slowly?
11. Do you seek out excuses for drinking or for celebrating?
12. Is your drinking harming your family in any way?
13. Is drinking making your home life unhappy?
14. Do you deny your drinking?
15. Do you go on frequent drinking sprees?
16. Do you experience moments of remorse following a spree?
17. Do you begin to lie about your drinking?
18. Do you try to space your drinks and always fail?
19. Is drinking clouding your reputation?
20. Is drinking disturbing the harmony of your life?
21. Is drinking endangering your health?

If you answered YES to any one of the questions, there is a definite warning that you are beginning to have a problem with alcohol.

If you answered YES to any two of the questions, the chances are that you are a problem drinker. If you answered YES to three or more of the questions, you are definitely a PROBLEM DRINKER.

If there are any further questions about this article or about alcohol in general please drop by Room to Move, Student Union building, or call 545-0400 Tuesday or Thursday afternoons. Peace.

Court OK's Communists

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court Tuesday rejected an appeal by the University of California regents for authority to bar Communist party members from the faculty.

California state courts have held the ban to be unconstitutional. First adopted by the regents in 1940, it has been invoked only once--against Angela Davis.

The regents contended in their appeal that Communist party members are unqualified to teach "because of their commitments to accept the Communist party line in all areas thereby forsaking the free pursuit of truth and objective teaching."

The justices turned down the appeal unanimously and without comment.

SIMS

The Evolution Of Consciousness

Knowledge is structured in consciousness: this is the key to life lived in freedom and happiness. The knowledge of the basis of life, the systematic progression of pattern and structure underlying all of creation, is the essential knowledge which every individual should have to perceive the beauty of his own existence. Once experienced, this basic enlivening of the subtle groundwork of life cannot help but enrich every aspect of the person from the most delicate to the most obvious external perceptions.

The direct experience of this basic field of life can and has been experienced by over a 300,000 advocates of transcendental meditation in this country, and thousands more around the world. SIMS at UMass is the most local portion of the organization dedicated to making available to as many people as possible the knowledge and experience of life evolving to a natural state of freedom. Transcendental meditation is a simple effortless technique through which the conscious thinking capacity of the mind can be expanded, leading directly to an individual's utilization of full mental potential. These amazing claims are now supported by physiological and psychological research which show convincing evidence that the practice of TM for two 15-minute periods a day provides every aspect of the physiology with rest and relaxation, resulting in a more smooth and balanced psychology.

The philosophy of providing individuals with a means of effortlessly attaining a natural state of happiness is a philosophy of world peace. We can hope for a peaceful world when individuals are at peace within themselves at UMass. Individuals utilizing their full mental potential, rested in body and mind, are naturally more effective, more harmonious in their relationships with the environment at large, as well as with more intimate surroundings. It is easy to see the direct relationship between an individual living in a free state of permanent happiness and inner peace, and the world as a whole enjoying the age-long goal of world peace. When all individuals live in this most desirable state of freedom from suffering and frustration, the goal of world freedom will be a reality.

SIMS UMass is expanding rapidly as more and more students on campus begin to enjoy the benefits spoken of in this article. Larger rooms for weekly meetings of meditators and checking an office open for consultation and information and membership cards giving stdudents benefits toward local activiies are already available. The SIMS office, (409-B) Student Union, will be open from 11 A.M.-5 P.M. Meditators may pick up their new membership cards there. A schedule of Introductory lectures and course offerings in the Amherst area for the month of October and November has been arranged so that one may begin the four-day period of instruction on any weekend. This evening there will be an advanced meeting for meditators in Herter 113, 6 P.M. At 8:00 P.M. in Herter 231, a SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY LECTURE for all those interested in hearing more about the technique of transcendental meditation will be presented by Philip Goldberg, regional lecturer.

The Goethe Institute of Boston has awarded $500 to the Germanic languages and literatures department at UMass for funding of the department's annual Amherst Colloquium on German literature. The Colloquium has been conducted in April for the past six years, and as usual this year the lectures will be published by the Lothar Stiehm Verlag in Heidleberg, Germany.

Some Paths

They build you a 28-story library so you can be proud of it. For the three years it takes to build it, they say you'll have to walk around the construction site. So now that the exterior is all done, now that there is no construction crew in the way, now that you can make a straight line from Herter to the Student Union, they put two fences across the nice grassy area so no one will walk there.

This, you might say, is not a bad idea. We need such nice green areas. If everybody walked there, we would just end up with another mud puddle.

A walkway was built along the eastern side of the library tower. This is a straight path (almost) between Herter Hall and Student Union also. The only reason few people walk there are the miniature cliffs at each end (by the Chapel and by the Union).

What we're saying is this: either take out those fences or complete the dead end sidewalks. It seems totally ridiculous that one is still expected to walk along the pathway near the pond when the natural tendency is to cut across the grass in a straight line. It must also be frustrating to those who have walked around the construction site for three years and find that now that there no more is a construction site they still have to walk around it.

Even On The Moon

By GEORGE DANIEL

It is said that you find death, taxes and the UMass campus cops (hereinafter referred to as the UMCC's) wherever you go.

There was evidence of this fact when Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin landed on the moon. As we learnt later from secret sources, at least one UMCC was already there, lying low in one of the craters in the Sea of Tranquility.

What NASA did not know was that the state of Massachusetts was running low on funds and decided to fight it through collections such as on parking tickets. There was a big booty to be got from the billionaire NASA if they could be caught parking their vehicle on unauthorized territory.

So when Armstrong and Aldrin returned from their first moon-walk, what should they find but a $500,000 parking ticket on their lunar module.

Armstrong: "I'll be damned, Buzz! Am I moon-struck or do you see what I see?"

Aldrin: "Yes, Neil, you can bet on your eyes. In fact I'd always feared they'd pull off something like this."

So, Armstrong put a call through to Houston Control.

Arm: "What the devil's been going on there. I thought you guys had got a clearance from the UMCC's for parking our vehicle. Over."

Houston: "Why, what's up? Over."

Arm: "You're poorer by $500,000, that's what's up. Those UMCC's are up here having a jolly time writing tickets. I'd like to lay my hands on some of them and send them off to another galaxie for good. Over and out."

Meanwhile, the mission had to keep going, so off they went on their second moon-walk. Returning, they found another ticket dumbly staring at them.

It was a minute or two before Aldrin reminded Armstrong that he was dumbly staring at it, in his disbelief, of course, and proceeded to call Houston Control.

Ald: "Houston, we're poorer by another $200,000 - for parking overtime. Advice. Over."

Houston: "Move, damn it! Over."

Armstrong took over and tempers were flaring by now.

Arm: "Greenhorn, we can't move without shooting off the moon. Tell your boss, Thomas Paine, to get his ass moving and stop this nonsense immediately. Over."

Houston: "Roger. But do you want me to use those words, sir? Over."

Arm: "Affirmative. Over and out", he bellowed.

To make sure Apollo 12 didn't get a ticket for double parking, NASA arranged to have it landed a clear few thousand miles away from the parked remains of Apollo 11 - and then hoped they hadn't forgotten any other regulation.

But, you guessed it, on the return from their first excursion there was a ticket on the LEM.

Offense: Parking in a tow-away zone.

Since no UMCC was seen around with whom to debate the fairness of the act, Charles Conrad, incredulous, left a note asking, "What tow-away zone?"

Returning from their second excursion they found a torn page from Motor Vehicle Regulations (the UMCC's had come fully prepared) which read: "This area is embraced within the prolongation of latitudes 42.52 degrees and 42.53 degrees, and longitudes 67.12 and 67.13 degrees, and is on the pathway between the Crater Proxima the Ditch Centauri."

As we learnt later from NASA through secret informers, the flight of Apollo 13 wasn't aborted for exactly the reasons presented to the world.

NASA learnt, after the flight was on its way, that spurred by their splendid earlier successes, the lunarscape was bristling with UMCC's in every crater, pothole and other unseen places. Moreover, that the amount of the fine was considerably increased.

NASA then decided that that was the last straw, and finagled the flight to bring it back without adding to an already expensive project, and swore on the head of the moon god that they'd rather walk henceforth (walking from V parking lot to campus center at UMass, Earth, isn't much easier either) or delay further moon landings until this absurdity was settled once and for all.

NASA evidently went on to win their case, which is why most UMass students and faculty members now succeed in picking up tickets freely.

It is unfortunate that Neil Armstrong did not go on to reach a position where he could keep his oath - that one about sending off UMCC's to yonder galaxy to continue their good job!

TV Commercials For Candidates

WASHINGTON - The political television commercials are now starting to appear on our television screens. Some of them are pretty boring; others are rather tough on the opponents.

It seems to me that the men in charge of making up advertising campaigns for our presidential candidates could do just as well if they would take the TV commercials that are now on the air and paraphrase them for their own use.

For example, I could see Pat Nixon cooking a steak over a campfire. She says to the audience, "I've been First Lady for almost four years and yet I feel younger now than when Dick first took the job as President. That's because I exercise, get eight hours sleep, eat right and take iron for my blood. Dick treats me better now than he did when I used to wear a cloth coat."

Just then we see Richard Nixon walking toward Pat. He's dressed in a plaid wool shirt and blue jeans. He comes behind her and kisses her on the neck. Then he says to the camers, "My wife, I think I'll keep her."

McGovern says, "I don't feel like going out and campaigning today. I just seem so sluggish and tired these days."

Eleanor looks at him and asks, "Is it uhhhh....irregularity?"

McGovern nods his head sheepishly.

"I have just the thing for it." She holds up a blue bottle.

We cut to McGovern at a rally. He's smiling and happy. The crowds are cheering. He hugs Eleanor and says, "I feel great, thanks to you."

Eleanor giggles, "....and Snow White Formula 67."

Another commercial could show Spiro Agnew on the golf course playing with Arnie Palmer. Then the camera cuts to the country club locker room. "That was great fun," Agnew says as he takes off his shirt. "I wish I didn't have to go out now and face those rotten, miserable kids. They hate me. I can't understand why."

Arnie Palmer says, "Maybe it has something to do with underarm perspiration."

Agnew says, "But I use a deodorant."

"Yes," says Arnie, holding up a can, "but maybe you need a dry one that lasts all day. When you're out campaigning, most deodorants won't give you 24-hour protection." Agnew takes the can from Arnie.

We cut to Agnew on a college campus. A group of kids, all with beards and wearing beads, are crowded around him and they're laughing. "We want Spiro! We want Spiro!" they start chanting. Then Agnew turns to the camera and winks. "Arnie was right. All deodorants aren't alike."

The final commercial idea could show Sarge Shriver. First he's eating a pizza in an Italian neighborhood, then he's eating a frankfurter in a Jewish delicatessen, then he's eating Polish ham in a Polish restaurant, then he's eating an Idaho potato on a farm.

Then we cut to Sarge in bed with Eunice. He's groaning and moaning, "I can't believe I ate the...."

"Don't say it!" Eunice screams as she jumps out of bed and rushes to the medicine cabinet. She gives him two tablets in a glass of water.

The next morning Sarge, refreshed and sparkling, says to Eunice, "Well, I've got to go to a catfish fry at the All Souls Baptist Church this morning, so just give me some of your delicious scrambled eggs, bacon and an English muffin for breakfast.

Eunice puts her arms around Sarge's neck and smiles into the camera, "My husband, I think I'll keep him."

Advertising Policy

In response to student inquiries we wish to explain the advertising policy of the Daily Collegian.

The Collegian budget this year is supported by approximately 60% in projected advertising revenue, and 40% by Student Activity Tax Funds. Direct cost for printing the newspaper runs about 66% of the total Student Senate approved budget. Now, if the advertising rates for student groups were decreased, our projected advertising revenue would be less, requiring a higher SATF disbursement, and ultimately a greater tax on students. It is our belief that those groups or individuals that plan to benefit directly from advertising should pay the costs for such rewards, instead of burdening the individual student further. Any increased advertising resulting from lower advertising rates for student groups, would be more than offset by increased printing costs. At this time, proper and due consideration is being given to the overall advertising rate structure of the Collegian for the future.

The Collegian is the student newspaper at the University of Massachusetts, and we try to provide a service for the students. For that reason we have the "Notices" column, a column that student groups without a large advertising budget, can use without charge to notify the University community about their programs.

Letters To The Editor

You Only Go Around Once In Life

To The Editor:

Recently, a young man wrote to you expressing concern about a phrase used in the rules of the Schlitz College Photo Competition and what that phrase might imply.

This letter is intended to provide a clear understanding of why the phrase is used and what it means to persons entering the contest.

It is standard practice for any company or organization conducting a contest to use the phraseology "all entries become the property of (the sponsoring company)".

This disclaimer is used to relieve the sponsoring company of the responsibility of returning each entry to each person who submitted an entry. You can appreciate the problems this would present, particularly in a large contest.

Should the company be interested in using any of the entries in its advertising (other than printing the winning entries as stated in the contest rules) it is incumbent, legally, upon the company to negotiate with each person, individually, to establish a fair price for that person's work and to obtain written permission from the individual as well. Moreover, it is the right of the individual in such instances to set a value on his own work.

We hope this clears up any concern or misunderstanding about the Schlitz College Photo Competition and that your readers will participate. It is great fun and a good creative challenge!

Loyalty Oath

To The Editor:

The Massachusetts loyalty oath so-called--"so-called" because no oath can make a man loyal--has been reimposed on all employees of the Commonwealth by a recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Many members of the faculty and staff of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst object to it in conscience, and it is possible that some will refuse to take it on pain of losing their jobs.

The loyalty (or "test") oath has a long and melancholy history. Ineffective on its face, it has never been demanded of a free people except in some jurisdictions of the United States of America. It is a relic of tyranny and, in our country, a relic of the chauvinist hysteria of the McCarthy era. It is a disgrace to a self-governing society and an insult to a self-governing populace.

Employees of state institutions other than the University also are mobilizing for legal, political, and religious action. An open meeting of all concerned state employees in the area will be held Wednesday, October 10, from 3:30 to 5:30 P.M., in Room 904 of the

To The Editor:

This is addressed, again, to Keith Loescher. Yes, Mr. Loescher, I perfectly understood your letter(s). And I still say that you have been taken for a ride. It's not your fault, though. It is the fault of the educational system(s) operating in this country today. Let me ask you a question: Do you feel that your formal education let you explore all facets of an issue and give you the ability to think? Your letters give me the impression that this is not so. To explain this point further, all I see formal education as is that it is just opening heads up and putting in information that "the "system" can leave out what it wants. And don't think that all sides of an issue are covered because the school systems today are controlled by the same "clique" I have been mentioning all along.

Now, back to your second letter. I can't deny the facts that you pointed out in the beginning of your letter. But you have a real misconception about the free enterprise system. What you referred to as free enterprise is what is known as cartel capitalism. That is thoroughly explained in the book I referred you to, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy". This book explains how certain individuals have abused the free enterprise system and, as a result, have created the economic chaos we now experience. But, Keith, if you read the book, you will understand why socialism is not the answer. Yes, I still believe that the free enterprise system will work as long as the government makes sure that the same abuses do not happen again. Keith, if you read the book I have mentioned above, you should be able to understand what I mean.

You say you re familiar with the American Party. Bullshit! In my letter of last Friday, I asked you to read the book as well as other related material before mouthing off again. Since it is obvious that you didn't do as I requested, I must repeat my request. I'll even supply you with the material. All you have to do is contact me.

As for your last comment, all I can say is that if you really knew the what's and why's of the American Party, you wouldn't make that sick comment. Actually, that comment more appropriately belongs to Richard Nixon and his clan. The book will explain why. Just read it before making any more public comments about this issue.

C'est Inexcusable

re: the foreign language requirement

Concerning the surprisingly large amount of CASIAC majored students who PAY other students to sit in on their 140 level foreign language class, and, enrolled under name, take the tests and attend the classes under a pseudonym;

Concerning the surprisingly large amount of students who cheat on their foreign language exams (especially in Mahar Auditorium);

Concerning the surprisingly large amount of students who are afraid to change their majors to the College of Arts & Sciences because of the four-semester language requirement (Instead, these people remain in a major they don't like because either they wouldn't have time to complete the requirement or aren't competent enough in foreign languages);

Concerning the surprisingly large amount of students who are forced to spend the majority of their study time on their language, and are forced to neglect their major to some extent; there still exists a language requirement.

Sure, there are intensive courses which complete the requirement in two semesters, but, these consist of six classes and four labs per week, and furthermore, can really only be taken by those "students with proven abilities in languages".

Sure, knowledge of a foreign language makes one well-rounded, but how many cocktail parties have you attended recently in which you would have starred, if you were the product of the UMass 4 semester foreign language requirement?

High school students who had four years or three and two years of a language are exempt from the requirement; that means they forget it the summer after they graduate from high school. UMass students who complete the requirement don't forget their language until the summer after they graduate from UMass.

Why does this requirement persist? Is it because of the possible loss of jobs? Is it because of tradition?

Lonely Inmates

To The Editor:

So you think you have an empty mailbox? One of the inmates at Bridgewater State Prison hasn't gotten a letter in thirteen years.

Loneliness is a contagious and chronic disease at Bridgewater. Oftentimes the inmates are even forgotten by their own families.

Next time you're feeling pissed cause the only letter in your box was was from Mom sit down and think about what it's like to be locked up in the place where "Titticut Follies" was made. Living there is bad enough without losing touch with the outside world.

The inmates at Bridgewater need you. Devote ten minutes of your time to a little happiness. If you're interested in writing to an inmate please get in touch with Barbara, 445 Pierpont, 6-5291.

Vietnam Veterans...

To The Editor:

Coffee Hours given by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War have grown across the country for the past year or two. In the New England area they have been given at a V.A. Hospital near Boston and in the V.A. Hospital at West Haven, Conn. Although they are open to the public and especially to all V.A. patients, the coffee hours are intended primarily for Vietnam veterans....both patients and non-patients.

A basic assumption behind the coffee hours is that we who were in Vietnam have many experiences, feelings and difficulties in common. As with veterans of other wars there are troubles on re-entering society, difficulties explaining our acts to others or to ourselves, and memories which haunt us still. Unlike veterans of other wars we cannot discuss our actions, we cannot relive our lives over there with friends, family, or aquaintances back here. Vietnam is a forbidden topic in this confused, guilt-ridden country. So the memories...some pleasant, some painful...live on inside us. The Coffee Hours give a chance to relive the memories, to calm the fears, and to evaluate our involvement in this war.

The Coffee Hours at the V.A. Hospital, Northampton are held every third Wednesday from 7:00 to 8:30 p.m. The next meeting will be on Wednesday, October 11, 1972.

Campbell M. Davis, M.D.

...Against The War

To The Editor:

Last Thursday evening a group of veterans who still care enough about that strange expression "brother" met to find out what they could do to help their brothers and sisters...those on active duty in the Armed Forces and those now being destroyed by a machine that at one time housed these same vets, fed them, clothed them, and exploited them in various fashions.

Is it so easy to forget that night in Mo Duc you sat up with your brother while he "cold-turkeyed" after smackin' up so much because he couldn't take another day of blood....and lifers? Or when that new dude in your platoon couldn't get it together enough to go into Columbus by himself, and he came to you just to rap; or did you take the time then either? The Vietnam era vet and G.I. has been thrown to the dogs by almost everyone from Nixon to the lowest paid orderly in the V.A. hospitals...and nobody cares?, not even the guy who stood next to him for a year, or two or three?

And you vets who stood with us in Washington, Valley Forge, Boston, Lexington, Springfield, UMass....was it all wasted time? Sure you're disillusioned man, you're frustrated, you've walked too many miles, but for every mile you have walked, maybe there is one registered voter, one 17 year old kid, or another vet who asked themselves why you were walking and then decided to walk with you. So sit back and get your head together, then come back.

Being a Viet Nam Veteran Against the (and All) War does not necessarily mean you're a fatigue-draped superradical. There are many angry brothers, but can you honestly say their anger is not well justified? Being a Viet Nam Veteran Against the War or having any supportive alignment with them means that you care enough to ease the load for another human being who's being stepped on, rolled over and steam cleaned. It means that you care enough to rap with the V.A. patient the 3rd Wed. of every month or more, whether he's from WW2, Korea, or our latest "walk into the wilderness"; or fighting military injustices any way you can; or when the dude sitting across from you reads a news item about the NVA--NLF committing an infraction of Geneva Convention Rules and mutters "goddamn chinks" couldn't you mention softly: "Have you ever taken a close look at our own Armed Forces?...POW's booby-traps, etc?" Or maybe it means giving some dude a dollar so that the little 1-1/2 year old kid who thinks war is peace 'cause he's known nothing else, can have an artificial limb....or burial.

If you have any hassles or want more info, or just want to rap to me, or Gery Morton, or any other VVAW Brother or come to the meeting on Oct. 12 7:00 P.M. CC 171-173. There is so much you can do, if you take the time to think, to care; is it too hard to remember what "brother" really means, or is it that easy to forget?'

Nuclear Power Could Ease Energy Crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Before the century ends, the process that gives the H-bomb its big bang may be harnessed to produce electricity. Coal, now a frequent cause of pollution, may be a major source of clean natural gas. Uranium supplies may last for hundreds of years.

These are among possibilities being assessed by scientists under White House orders to come up with ways of easing the nation's energy crisis.

Some proposals, using so-called unconventional sources of energy such as the winds, the tides and tropical currents, may not be practical until the 21st century. Other, more conventional possibilities, from coal gasification to controlled thermonuclear reaction, under immediate consideration.

The dimensions of the energy crisis are clear. For example, demand for electricity doubles each decade, but supplies of gas and oil that today furnish 75 per cent of the nation's energy are running out. Estimates are that current domestic supplies of natural gas will be exhausted in the 1990s.

Reports from 11 panels of specialists appointed by the White House's Office of Science and Technology are due soon and are expected to provide the basis for Nixon's administration recommendations for further funding of energy research. The OST says money for such research has increased 75 per cent in that past five years and will run at a 600-million level in fiscal 1973.

The panels, each dealing with a different area of the energy, are expected to pin down more precisely timetables for developing by government, industry or both.

The highest priority list for developing conventional sources of energy include:

—The liquid metal fueled breeder reactor, an atomic power plan that would create more fissionable fuel than it burns in sustaining a chain reaction.

—Coal gasification for the production of synthetic natural gas. OST scientists say some process to convert coal into gas are beginning to emerge and more sophisticated ones should be available by 1976. But they add that gasification may not make a significant impact on the national energy picture until 1980-1985.

Abortion Clinic Causes Uproar

COLCHESTER, Vt. (AP)-A women's health center-a natural product of growing feminine self-awareness, according to its incorporators-has been opened in this quiet suburban town to provide health care, counseling and education.

Vermont Women's Health Center Inc. offers abortions.

The hospitals of the state have avoided the fury by saying nothing, putting off decisions or being highly selective on abortions.

In January the state Supreme Court ruled Vermont's 126-year-old abortion law invalid because it affirmed the right of a woman to have an abortion, but denied her medical care for its safe exercise.

Following guidelines issued six-months ago by the attorney general's office, the center's incorporators decided to offer abortions until the 12th week of pregnancy.

The storm of controversy, which had been dormant since January, broke.

But, said a center spokesman, "we don't need to be discussing being murderers, we are not an abortion clinic, we are a women's health clinic."

"We're going to have a very small number of patients. This is a small clinic with four part-time physicians and no possibility or desire to handle a large number of patients," said Mrs. June Aschenbach, a member of the board of trustees.

"In less than two months, more than 50 women of different backgrounds and all ages have come together and with no central leadership have put together this clinic," she said.

From putting the paint on the walls to making the sheets for the beds, women have done virtually all the work.

The doctors, three of whom are women, have been training staff members in paramedical skills. The clinic offers birth control counseling, pregnancy tests, venereal disease tests and checkups concentrating on diseases striking women, such as vaginitis or breast cancer.

"We feel more than a woman's sexual health is concerned here," said Mrs. Aschenbach. "Her body, her mind, her family and her children also will benefit through what she learns here."

With classes on nutrition, anatomy, natural childbirth and sexuality planned, staff members emphasize their concept of an organic program-one which grows according to the interests and needs of the women using it.

"What makes us different is we're not locked into any kind of formula," Mrs. Aschenbach commented.

The decision to offer abortions was made because the incorporators felt women in Vermont had demonstrated a desire and need for legal abortions performed in a local medical facility, she said.

Figures released by the state in October showed 16 abortions were performed in Vermont this year. Of those, 10 were performed at the Women's Health Center during its first two weeks of operations.

Maria Muldaur at Amherst

Maria Muldaur will be at the Amherst Folklore Center tomorrow evening for two shows. Ms. Muldaur will travel from Woodstock, N.Y. for this performance and it is expected that she will be accompanied by some upstate New York musicians.

Ms. Muldaur first became known as Marie D'Amato, the only female member of the Jim Kewskin Jug Band. Since the Jug Band broke up in the late sixties, she has performed with her husband and also former member of the Jug Band, Goeff Muldaur. The pair have recorded two albums, the most recent one was released last month. This is Muldaur's first performance without her husband.

The Amherst Folklore Center is on Spring Street opposite the Lord Jeffrey Inn.

Economic Study Said Worthless

BOSTON AP - A $300,000 study designed by the New England Regional Commission to upgrade the economy of the area's three northern states "benefitted only a politically involved New Jersey firm," The Boston Globe said Wednesday.

In the last article of a four-part-copyrighted series on the commission the Globe's Spotlight team said associates of the firm which got the study contract, Louis Berger, Inc., contributed more than $5,000 to the 1970 campaign of Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

The article labeled the study "unquestionably an assembly of old data," and said the commission's executive director, Richard E. Wright, described it as having "generated nothing now."

Clam Ban Lifted

BOSTON (AP) - The state Department of Public Health has developed a plan to allow the sale of imported softshell clams and mussels in Massachusetts and has asked for $130,000 to do the job, spokesmen said Tuesday.

Dr. William J. Bicknell, commissioner of Public Health, said the proposal developed by his agency and the Department of Natural Resources would allow the marketing in the state of uncontaminated clams imported from Canada and areas of Maine.

Sale of all soft shell fish products was banned in the state after an infestation of poisonous "red tide" forced closing of the state's own clam flats.

Army Builds Seawall

NEWBURYPORT, Mass. (AP) - The Army Corps of Engineers is building an 800-foot-long sand barricade along the Plum Island shoreline as protection against high tides and surf during winter storms.

A corps spokesman said the barrier is expected to be completed within a week.

Some 500 national guardsmen, 700 townspeople and 150 Sea Explorer Scouts worked feverishly Sunday afternoon and early Monday morning throwing up a sandbag seawall to protect the shoreline homes from the storm-churned Atlantic.

The Army engineers have said they are willing to build a permanent sea wall, but cannot use federal funds if the land to be protected is privately owned

Some owners of private land along the beach have said they are willing to give up title to their land, but only if they are given other locations for their buildings.

MBTA Financial Plan

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority has worked out a financing plan in which the state would pay for maintaining the "basic plant and fixed facilities" of the MBTA.

The plan, already submitted to a state study commission on the MBTA, calls for a change in the law assessing MBTA deficit costs on the 79 communities in its district.

It argues that maintaining rail rights of way, stations and repair shops is a state responsibility like construction and maintenance of highways.

It also claims the state should pay for subsidizing reduced fares to the elderly and to students, as well as for general administrative costs of the regional authority.

Explosion in Lowell

LOWELL, Mass. (AP) - An explosion blasted chunks of plate glass over the heads of 40-50 children on their way to school Tuesday morning as a two-story commercial-residential building was destroyed and an adjacent structure moved three feet off its foundation, officials said.

Fire officials were investigating the cause of the explosion.

"It definitely was not leaking gas," they said.

Possibly an oil-fueled hot-water heater in the basement ruptured at the base and triggered the blast, they said.

GTE Gets Contract

NEEDHAM, Mass. (AP) - GTE Sylvania, Inc., said Monday it has received a $4 million Air Force contract for work on the Minuteman intercontinental ballistic missile defense system.

Young people on Plum Island pitch in on building a 300-foot seawall as a precautionary measure against possible tidal flooding the wake of a weekend nor'easter. National Guard helicopters were used to airlift 12,000 empty sandbags onto the island from Fort Devens for volunteers to build the barrier. (AP)

McG Speaks In Boston Today

Presidential Candidate Sen. George McGovern will speak at a fund-raising gala at the Commonwealth Armory in Boston today.

Sponsored by Massachusetts Citizens to Elect McGovern-Shriver, the event will be the culmination of "McGovern-Shriver Day."

Sen. McGovern will arrive at Boston's Logan Airport at 4 p.m., for the most important visit of his Massachusetts campaign.

From the airport, McGovern will go to a late afternoon rally in downtown Boston. He will also make other appearances in the state before going to the McGovern-Shriver Day gala at the Armory.

With Sen. McGovern at the Armory will be Sen. Edward Kennedy, an active campaigner for the McGovern-Shriver ticket, who will introduce McGovern.

Actress Shirley MacLaine, her brother, actor Warren Beatty, the Boston cast of Godspell, Carl Reiner, Tommy Smothers and Dr. Flora Needlman will perform on behalf of McGovern. There will be a cash bar, informal seating, and continuous entertainment throughout the evening.

Those attending the gala are also invited to attend one of the many dinner parties being given earlier in the evening throughout the state.

In an effort which has snowballed throughout the state, fund-raising activities have been planned in virtually every community, and a long list of celebrities have become involved with plans to make McGovern-Shriver Day a huge success.

In the western part of the state, there will be a major rally in Amherst at noon, Oct. 11, with Texas gubernatorial candidate Sissy Farenthol, and Shirley MacLaine. Both women have been active in the McGovern-Shriver campaign.

Sue McGovern Rowan and her husband Jim Rowan, the McGoverns' daughter and son-in-law, will also be at the Amherst

Shirley MacLaine, who is devoting the entire day of Oct. 11 to campaigning for McGovern, will also be at a rally in Worcester at 5 p.m.

McGovern-Shriver campaign efforts have emphasized the importance of individual grass-roots support, and of small campaign contributions from many people, as opposed to very large contributions from a few people.

This theme is reflected in the organization of McGovern-Shriver Day.

Ecology Lectures

Under the sponsorship of the Environmental Studies Program at Hampshire, speakers for forthcoming lectures on "Environment and Society in Transition" will be Five College faculty members, and include Professor Stuart Fisher, Amherst College ecologist (October 17); Professor Leonard Bickman, Smith College psychologist (October 24); and Professor David Smith, American Studies at Hampshire (October 31).

Speaking in November will be Smith College economist Fred Leonard (November 7); Hampshire biologist Lynn Miller (November 14); Smith geologist Brian White (November 28).

Oxford Summer Seminar

The Oxford Summer Seminar at Trinity College, University of Oxford, England, sponsored by the English Department (plus one Sociology course) announces final plans for summer, 1973. Application forms, details about travel plans and theatre tickets, course descriptions: all are available now in room 160, Bartlett Hall. But only 110 students in all may be accommodated, and since courses are limited to a maximum of 15, it's first come, first served.

Here are details of special interest about the new, 8th session, from the Director, Dr. Ernest Hofer, Associate Head of the English Department, founder of the program:

"We have gone into an interdisciplinary art and literature course with a practicing British artist and her professor (English Literature) husband. It involves field trips to houses and museums and makes taking the course in England relevant. The same for the sociology course: in "British Society," taught by a man who heads Oxford's department and edits the British Journal of Sociology–as well as being educational advisor to Parliament. His name is A.H. Halsey. He personally takes students to see England through a sociologist's eye, and his contacts are plentiful. Professor Christopher Ricks, a close friend of Robert Lowell and of the late T.S. Eliot, will teach a special seminar in these two Anglo-American poets. John Hodgson, the head of Brenton Hall, drama college, himself an Oxford man, is giving an experimental course in contemporary British Theatre.

There are a dozen such courses planned. But much more, too: free travel time, paid excusions attached to courses, a guest-lecture series, three nights free in a London hotel, free theatre tickets to Stratford and London productions. It's a chance to see England at your own pace, to live six weeks (of ten "over there") in a serenely beautiful Oxford college in circumstances the same as British student enjoys. Including transportation over and back, the Seminar costs $890. Some financial aid is available. Undergraduates and graduates are welcome, for the tutorial method is used and classes are kept very small."

by SYDNEY OMARR

Scorpio seldom compromises. These persons expect complete loyalty. They also exhibit a tendency to be jealous, overly protective. Scorpio does not mind giving, but often finds it difficult to admit the need of help from others. The Scorpio native wants to run the show. This applies to various area, personal and professional. Scorpio keeps a secret side and wants it that way. These persons are not easy to understand. The Scorpio native loves a mystery and often strives to be mysterious. Scorpio is drawn to Pisces, enters agreements with Taurus, travels with Cancer, can build a business with Leo. The Scorpio sense of humor becomes active with Capricorn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Long-range plans may be subject to revision. You are due to gain access to special information. This will change proposed agenda. Now is time to get ideas on paper. Excellent period for creative writing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Personal desires come to fore-you find out what reality is required. Express yourself. Get close to one you love. Don't block feelings. Take a chance. You are on brink of emotional adventure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Agreement may not be convenient. One who should be your ally acts in contrary manner. Don't be discouraged. Play waiting game. Patience now is your ally. Know it and act accordingly. Review legal affairs.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): There is no need to be frightened by love. Give of yourself and various areas of life will improve, including health. You learn this now: act on knowledge. One who shares your interests comes on scene.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stop criticizing one you love. Be receptive. Money question is not as major as you might imagine. Realize you don't own any person. Aries individual could be involved. Finish project. Submit format.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tie down agreement. Protect security. Correct any safety hazard at home. Confer with Leo. Get some spice into your efforts. Older family member has no right to try to live your life for you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): One you taught in past makes reappearance. Short trip may be involved. Don't overextend. Know where you are going, what is to be accomplished. Avoid wasting energy on wild-goose chase. You will comprehend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep guard up where personal possession enter picture. Don't try to get something for nothing. It would be a time-waster. Sagittarian can help you perceive potential. Be receptive. Get money's worth.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Cooperate with Scorpio individual. Accent is on glamor, romance. Cycle is such that you can be at right place at right time. Know it and be confident. Subtle approach gains dividends. Others now perceive your worth. It's plenty!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Obtain valid hint from Sagittarius message. What occurs behind scenes has direct effect on you. Wait for additional information. Clandestine conference could figure prominently. Don't fear the unknown.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend may be well-meaning but misinformed. Rely on yourself. Stick to convictions, principles. Some of your desires need review. You may be seeking in wrong direction. Taurus, Libra persons are involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your efforts make solid impact. Pet ambition can be fulfilled. Be selective. Settle only for quality. Shortcut procedures are not likely to be productive. Your own style is best-eschew substitutes.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher, capable of expressing yourself in writing. Recent change of scenery will prove beneficial. Gemini, Virgo persons play key roles in your life this month.

Field Hockey Team "Looks Very Good"

By AVIS YUNI

In its biggest test of the season on Monday, October 9th, the Girls Varsity Field Hockey Team cut short its undefeated and unscored upon record by losing to Springfield, 3-1.

Springfield scored its first goal about ten minutes into the game. At half-time the score was still 1-0 in Springfield's favor. With five minutes left in the game, the UMass team tied it up, Jennifer Edminster making the goal, only to see the Springfield team score two more goals to win it in the next minute and a half.

According to Coach Jane Farr, the team lost because "we tried to change our strategy in the middle of the game and that doesn't work. We played Springfield's game instead of our own. We didn't stay with our game plan. We made switches and tried to use the same strategy they were using. We should've stayed with our own. You have to stay with what you practice."

Prior to this, the team had beaten in away games both Central Connecticut State College (3-0, Wendy Alpaugh, Wendy Small, and Roberta Garr each scoring one goal), and Keene State College, New Hampshire (2-0, Wendy Alpaugh and Wendy Small each scoring one goal).

In an interview prior to the Springfield game, Coach Farr expressed that the team "looks very good, especially for this early in the seayon. They've really played aggressively. Until the Keene game (October 5th) the goalie never touched the ball to block a goal. She touched the ball once in the Central Connecticut game (October 2nd) but it wasn't a shot, she ran to kick the ball."

Talking about the game against Keene State, Coach Farr felt that Nancy Barr, the goalie, "played a beautiful game" making quite a few saves. In that game, the turning point was when the goalie "took a penalty bully and beat the Keene State forward on it. After that we just dominated the place."

In the Sportsday held here on September 30th, ten New England schools came to each play three pre-season, shortened field hockey games against teams normally not on their regular schedule. The teams had a chance to see their players in competition before the season's games began.

While the UMass team was rained out of its third Sportsday game, it beat its other two competitors - Trinity College, Connecticut (4-0, Dolly Lambdin and Jennifer Edminster scoring two goals each) and the University of Rhode Island (1-0, Roberta Garr scoring the goal).

The other schools represented at the event were Plymouth State College, New Hampshire; Keene State College, New Hampshire; Northeastern University, Mass.; Bridgewater State College, Mass.; Worcester State, Mass.; Springfield College, Mass.; University of Connecticut; and Wesleyan University, Connecticut.

The Springfield game and today's game against Bridgewater Coach Farr feels are the two biggest tests of the season. She's satisfied with the team "as long as they play what they're supposed to play. We'll stick with what we practiced and just do it right."

In regard to today's Bridgewater game, there at 3:00, Coach Farr feels "Bridgewater has a strong forward line but I think we should be able to beat them and we should be able to beat Northeastern" on Saturday.

As for the JV Girls Field Hockey Team, they're still undefeated in their regular season, having beat Keene State 1-0 (Kathy O'Neil scoring the goal) and Springfield 2-1.

Golf Team Finishes 5th in ECAC

The last time any UMass golfer qualified for the Eastern finals was back around 1966, the "Redmen" days. So it looks like Frank Agostino and Joe Artman will be the first "Minutemen" to do it.

Agostino and Artman (could it be a law firm?) each fired 75's this past weekend to lead the UMass golf team to a fifth place finish overall and a tie with Holy Cross for the Yankee Conference title.

The qualifying tournament was played in Hanover, N.H. at Dartmouth's home course with thirty teams competing.

The winning team was Central Connecticut with a score of 296 while Harvard and Salem State tied for second place with scores of 304.

Coach Pan Gaudette was happy with his team's performance, but felt that "This team is capable of a good day so I wasn't really surprised. They really are good players and most importantly they don't get down on themselves."

Artman started bogey-bogey-bogey but settled down nicely later on to pick up his 75. Agostino played a steady round, his best competitive round in a long time, to notch his score.

Gaudette was also pleased with his team's overall performance, a 310, which was good enough to beat our perennial powers like Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Grimsley Two Hits Bucs Series Tied 2-2

CINCINNATI (AP) - Ross Grimsley overpowered Pittsburgh with a two-hitter as the Cincinnati Reds crashed the fumbling Pirates 7-1 Tuesday and sent the tense National League playoffs into a fifth and deciding game.

The Reds tied the best-of-five series for the National League pennant at 2-2 and set the stage for Wednesday's showdown struggle between opening-game pitchers Steve Blass of Pittsburgh and Cincinnati's Don Gullett.

Grimsley, a hard-throwing left-hander who pitched the Reds' West Division-clincher this season, allowed both hits to Roberto Clemente-a fourth inning single and a seventh-inning home run.

Grimsley didn't walk a batter and finished with a flourish by retiring the final nine batters. He struck out five.

Pete Rose led off the Reds' first with a ground single to right center and was sacrificed to second base by Joe Morgan. Pittsburgh starter Dock Ellis appeared to be out of trouble when shortstop Gene Alley stopped Bobby Tolan's sharp grounder in the hole and nailed Rose going to third on a close play.

But then Tolan broke for second on the next play and Johnny Bench poked a single to right through a gaping hole left by Pittsburgh second baseman Dave Cash, who was covering the bag. Tolan raced to third, giving Cincinnati runners at the corners with two out.

Bench then stole second as Pittsburgh catcher Manny Sanguillen threw the ball into center field allowing Tolan to fly home with Cincinnati's lead run.

More sloppy Pittsburgh fielding led to two more Cincinnati runs in the fourth before a delighted crowd of 39,447 at Riverfront Stadium.

Bench opened with a single and, after Tony Perez flied to center field, he stole second as Denis Menke struck out. One more, an erratic toss by the weak-throwing Sanguillen made the steal possible.

Alley then dropped Cesar Geronimo's short pop down the left field line, allowing Bench to score Cincinnati's second run. When the Pittsburgh shortstop threw wild to the plate for a second error on the play, Geronimo went all the way to third base.

Darrel Chaney then dragged a bunt down the first base line and just beat a diving tag by first baseman Willie Stargell, allowing Geronimo to come home standing up.

Ellis still had work to do in the inning after giving up a double to Grimsley that put men on second and third. The Pirate righthander got the final out, inducing Pete Rose to lift a foul pop to third baseman Richie Hebner.

The Reds committed daylight robbery against the besieged Sanguillen in the midst of a two-run flurry in the sixth.

Menke doubled with one out off Pittsburgh reliever Bob Johnson and raced to third on a bouncer to the right side by Geronimo. Chaney was intentionally walked and then stole second as Sanguillen had to eat the ball when no one covered the bag.

DETROIT (AP) - Right-hander Joe Coleman struck out 14 Oakland batters, setting a baseball playoff record Tuesday and keeping Detroit's American League pennant hopes alive with a 3-0 victory over the A's.

The A's still lead the best-of-five series 2-1 and need one more victory either Wednesday or, if necessary, Thursday to clinch its first World Series berth since 1931.

Coleman made sure the A's didn't get the victory Tuesday. The hard-throwing pitcher worked out of frequent jams, allowing seven hits and pitching with men on base in all but two innings. But his strikeout pitch kept bailing him out of trouble.

His 14 strikeouts broke the playoff record of 12 established by Baltimore's Jim Palmer on Oct. 5, 1970, against Minnesota.

The Tigers took advantage of a wild streak by Oakland starter Ken Holtzman to score their first two runs with seldom-used Ike Brown drilling the bases-loaded single that brought them home.

Al Kaline started Detroit's scoring rally with a one-out walk in the fourth inning. Bill Freehan, starting his first game since Sept. 21 when he suffered a broken thumb, followed with a double past third, sending Kaline to third.

Then Holtzman walked Willie Horton to load the bases. The veteran left-hander got Mickey Stanley on a fly to short center for the second out as the runners held.

That brought up utility man Brown, playing first base to give the Tigers an extra righthanded bat against southpaw Holtzman.

Brown, who played in only 51 games during the regular season, drilled a single up the middle, scoring Kaline and Freehan and giving Coleman the lead.

Freehan added an extra run in the eighth with a long home run to left field but Coleman didn't need it.

Coleman finished with a fourish, striking out the last two batters he faced to end the ball game.

The way things started, it didn't look like he'd be around to see the end. Matty Alou lined his first pitch for a double to right and Dal Maxvill followed with a walk. But Coleman bore down a strike out the heart of the A's batting order-Joe Rudi, Reggie Jackson and Mike Epstein-to get out of the jam.

In the third, he was in trouble again with two men on and two out.

He seemed to have Epstein struck out with third out but plate umpire John Rice ruled it a half-swing after checking with third base ump Art Frantz.

Manager Billy Martin raged at Frantz over the decision but it didn't matter. Coleman fanned Epstein on the next pitch.

Split Second Important For UMass Punter

By EARLE BARROLL

One-tenth of a second is making Saturday afternoons a nightmare for UMass punter Andy Dutkanicz.

As minute an issue as it may appear to be this fraction of time has become the achilles heel for the senior kicker.

And it's now of major concern for head coach Dick MacPherson.

Two Saturdays ago at Harvard this problem of punting vs. PUNTING came to the surface

Daily Collegian

when the Crimson -- whose coach Joe Restic has pioneered the rebirth of the all-out punt rush back into collegiate football -- nearly stuffed a couple of Andy's attempts. But this can be partially dismissed as a normality for all Crimson opponents.

However at Burlington over the weekend the problem became acute when the Catamounts blocked a Dutkanicz punt and recovered it in the end zone to tie UMass at 7-7 and shed a new light on the game.

"We recognize that Harvard has great athletes," explains MacPherson, "but when it happens at Vermont we have to be concerned."

Where does the problem lie?

"It's all in the rhythm of the kicker and the protection the line gives him." says offensive line coach Bob Lord. "Rhythm is so important. From the center snap to the time the ball is airborn it takes between 1.9 and 2.1 seconds.

"But when it takes 2.2 and 2.3 seconds that's when the blocked punts occur."

On top of this Lord points out that when a punter is 15 yards in back of the line and all alone he has an awful lot to think about.

"This can be a problem," he says. "They start thinking too much about where the snap is going to be, how hard is the rush going to be, where does he have to kick the ball and questions of this nature. Through experience this thinking decreases and this might be what Andy needs."

Well, the guy that this story is centered around has his own version also.

He says he thinks, but then again football is a thinking mans game. He doesn't fault his protection, although the blocked punt at UVM was due in the main to the fullback at the time missing an assignment.

He doesn't place the blame on his center, sophomore Bruce Pinto who Lord cites at the best at his position in New England at getting the snap back to the punter.

"I'm really disappointed in my performance so far," he said, yesterday at practice. "Something just happens to me when I set myself to punt.

"I think it has something to do with the way I play with the ball when I get the snap from Bruce. I did it against Vermont when they blocked the punt. I wanted to get a good one off and even though a block was missed I still should have gotten it off.

"What I need now is one good game to get my confidence back. And most of all I have to get that rhythm back."

All this for a tenth of a second.

THE WAY I DO IT—Crew Coach Mike Vespoli gives final instructions to the onlooking oarsmen, before the varsity eight action in the Lowell Tech Fall Festival Regatta last Sunday. In the race, UMass shells finished first and fourth. This was a tune-up for the Head of the Charles Regatta in two weeks. Notice the shell in the center, it really does hold eight men and a coxswain. Booters Boot BU, 3-1

By DOUG FIDLER

Tom Coburn scored his fifth goal of the season on a penalty shot with 10:59 gone in the second half for what proved to be the winning tally, as UMass upset highly-rated Boston University 3-1 yesterday afternoon on the Playing Fields.

The Terriers attempted to open the game with a quick goal, but just failed to score on several threats. For a time it appeared as if the Minutemen would be hard-pressed to gain a victory, as the Boston team showed a great ball control game.

UMass shook off its opening period jitters to resist BU and pressed forward on attack. Fullback Bob Merrill intercepted a down-field Terrier pass and raced back down the sidelines with it. He passed across to Ken Banda, who vollied a blazing shot from 30 yards out into the upper left corner to open the scoring at 29:20.

The Redmond-men pressed to open their lead before half time, but were stymied by the good BU fullbacks.

Coburn upped the count to 2-0 after he was tripped in the penalty area.

The Coburn goal ignited a very poor display of sportsmanship on the part of the Terriers. The visitors continuously griped at the calls of the officials and blasted each other for poor play. Nejat Sarp was ejected from the game with 20 minutes left to play for verbally abusing the referees, and was accompanied to the sideline by a shower of BU obscenities against the officials.

Several minutes later UMass' Tony King and BU's John Dimodica were thrown out for fighting.

Vini Grandonico fired in a rebounded shot from just outside the penalty area to give the Minutemen an insurmountable three goal lead with just 14 minutes left to play.

The victory upped the UMass record to 3-1, including a 1-1 Yankee Conference standing. BU, which defeated Vermont 2-1 on Saturday, now sports a 2-1 conference record.

"This was a good win," remarked Gerry Redmond, "especially since it represented our first win in the Yankee Conference. Everybody played well."

"The game showed that we still have a few weaknesses to improve upon, especially in the midfield defense, before playing Tufts away on Saturday. I'm confident, though, that we can make the needed adjustments."

Carol Vercollone continued to play well in goal in place of John Kiah, turning away 10 BU scoring attempts.

From Rags to Riches

Two years ago, at the age of 33, Ross Brooks was a hasbeen. He had been a career minor-league backup goalie and no one wanted him. He had been with the Providence Reds for seven years and they had released him. He was with the Phoenix Roadrunners for one game and they released him. The Oklahoma City Blazers picked him up and used him, despite the fact he was horrible.

Today Ross Brooks is a goaltender for the Stanley Cup champion Boston Bruins. Horatio Alger lives.

Perhaps Brooks is a product of expansion, perhaps he is a late bloomer. Whatever he is in his own way he has fashioned a comeback story that is hockey's answer to Luis Tiant.

From 1964 through January of 1971, Ross Brooks was a backup goaltender for the Providence Reds of the American Hockey League. His first year with the Reds he backed up Eddie Giacomin. When Giacomin was traded to the Rangers for Marcel Paille, he backed up Paille.

For the major portion of his professional career, Brooks backed up Paille. When he wasn't backing up Paille he was trying to win the No. 1 job himself.

He was recognized throughout hockey as "the best backup goalie in the minor leagues." It was really the kindest thing anyone could say about him. His seasonal goals-against average through 1971 had never dropped below 4.22, hardly all-star play.

His career with the Reds read like something out of a bad Three Stooges film. In 1966-67 he had taken the No. 1 job away from Paille with his steady play for a lastplace club. Then one night in Hershey he took a puck in one of his eyes and Paille had the job back again. Brooks had to wear a mask after that, and never seemed the same.

He was a specialist in his early years; the Reds only played him against Rochester, the perennial powerhouse. They said he played well against them, but one night in Rochester the Reds scored six goals and lost by seven. 13-6.

The fans in Providence, never noted for their gentileness, used to serenade him. It wasn't unusual to hear the strains of "Goodbye Brooksie" echo through the old RI Auditorium after the anemic Reds had lost another.

He survived all this, and in 1970-71 seemed to have put it all together. He was the last man cut from the Oakland Seals of the NHL, and was supposed to be the Reds No. 1 man for the season. Something got screwed up though, and he didn't get to Providence from Oakland until midway through the first period of the first game. By then Paille had the Quebec Aces on their heads and went on the play brilliantly and lead the Reds to a 4-2 win.

By January of that season, Brooks was gone. The Reds had sent him to the Phoenix Roadrunners of the Western League where he played on game and let in five goals.

Phoenix sent him to Oke City where he played nine games and had a Goals-Against Average of 4.99. He even played a period for them in the playoffs, allowing five goals in those 20 minutes. Brooksie had apparently reached the end of the trail.

But Oklahoma City was a Bruins' farm club, and the Bruins were building a team in Boston, the Braves, to play in the AHL, and Brooksie knew the AHL. Maybe he could help.

Dan Bouchard was to be the Bruins goalie of the future, and the Braves kept Brooks to help teach Bouchard the ropes and spell him on occasion. That's all he did for the first half of the season, when the Braves were beating everyone in sight. But around the New Year, things went bad, and Braves coach Bep Guidolin called on Brooksie to help steam the tide. He did.

Brooks played more and more as the Braves entered the stretch run, and for the first time in his pro career, Ross Brooks was more than a backup. He was an instrumental part in the Braves' eventual first place finish and also saw extensive playoff action.

Nevertheless, when the 71-72 season ended, the Bruins were loaded with goalies. The list ran like this: Ed Johnston, Gerry Cheevers, Dan Bouchard, John Adams, Curt Ridley, Ross Brooks.

But enter expansion; exit Dan Bouchard.

Enter World Hockey Association; exit Gerry Cheevers.

Enter this year's training camp; exit Adams and Ridley. NHL, say hello to Ross Brooks.

Whether this guy will play well or not is one thing, the story behind him getting this far is another.

The whole thing sounds kinda corny, doesn't it.

MacLaine Blasts Nixon; Crowd Loves It

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Actress Shirley MacLaine blasted the Nixon Administration as the "most corrupt in the history of our country" and called for the election of Senator George S. McGovern before an enthusiastic audience of 1200 in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday.

In a speech interrupted 17 times by enthusiastic applause, she condemned the administration for its alleged involvement in the bugging Democratic National Headquarters and the ITT case.

She also said the recent wheat sale to Russia benefitted large wheat producers "while the small U.S. farmer is trying to make it through another winter."

Senator McGovern's daughter, Susan McGovern Rowan, and her husband James also appeared at the rally.

Ms. Rowan said the President was seeking an endorsement of his record, while refusing to discuss that record in public.

She said she didn't think Nixon's foreign policy was noteworthy, claiming the President "lets the real war (in Vietnam) rage on while meeting with nations we are not really at war with."

Her husband called the audience, which spilled over into the Student Union lobby and lined the rear and sides of the ballroom, "the largest we've had in six months."

He called the last four years "a disaster for the country, and for the people of Vietnam", and said the 1972 election was not just a choice for the President this year, "but to determine the course of history for a long time."

MacLaine was interrupted by loud applause for the first time when she began her speech by saying, "I'm a woman and proud of it, a Democrat and proud of it, an American, and proud of if, and I'm for George McGovern and I'm proud of it."

"Nixon's television ads say he is the architect of peace in our time," she continued, "but 20,000 American boys aren't going to see those ads because they're under the ground somewhere."

"Are we so smug that we believe the war is over just because the color of the skins of the people dying is different?" she asked.

She repeatedly attacked what she said were the priorities of the Nixon administration.

"Have we forgotten that Nixon called students bums four days before Kent State, and that this is the same man who sent 500 FBI agents chasing after the Berrigan brothers?" she asked to loud applause.

"Those agents could have been used going after drug pushers," she said.

She said the casualties of the Vietnam war included heroin addicts in this country as well as those killed or maimed in Vietnam, and claimed "the law itself" was also a victim of the war.

She cited the wheat sale to Russia, what she called a "payoff" by milk producers to the administration to lift the price controls on milk, and alleged attempts by the administration to gather campaign contributions before a law requiring the disclosure of contributors' names went into effect.

"The law and order crisis is in government," she declared.

"And if Julie and Tricia Nixon want to die to President Thieu, that's O.K.," she added, referring to remark by President Nixon's daughter Tricia that she would "be willing to die for" the South Vietnamese government.

She ended her speech with a reference to the Presidential campaign of Robert F. Kennedy in 1968, saying his goals of bringing "Love, wisdom, and compassion" to the country were not unrealistic, "but it will take George McGovern to accomplish them."

The audience gave her a 45-second standing ovation.

Ms. Rowan said the President had "vetoed practically all progressive legislation passed in the last three years," and said Nixon "doesn't deserve a chance to fulfill the promises he made four years ago."

Her husband James said President Nixon's claim, made in a speech four years ago, that "Those who have had four years to produce peace and could not should not be given another chance" was "about the only thing he has said we can agree with."

He added that recent trips to Paris and Saigon by Presidential aide Henry Kissinger were a "conscious attempt to give us the impression of peace," but said he didn't believe the war was ubout to end.

Even if the war were to end now, he claimed, "everyone would see that Nixon could have ended the war the day he took office, and didn't have to wait until 20 days before the election."

In the four years of the Nixon administration, he said, "there has been a steady erosion of civil liberties in this country."

"If you elect Nixon for four more years," he continued, "you'll then have eight years of Spiro Agnew, which brings us up to 1984—and we'll be getting there in more ways than one."

The Watergate affair, he claimed, was "only one of a series of incidents in which the Democratic party was spied on."

"If this is what happens now," he asked, "what will happen in the next four years if Nixon is re-elected?"

"We can't stand four more years," he concluded, "we can't stand four more weeks, or four more minutes."

In a question and answer period after the speeches, MacLaine said McGovern's position on abortion was that "it's up to the individual woman and her doctor, and up to the states."

She added that abortion was an issue that should be left out of the "partisan election process."

In response to a question about the candidate's endorsement of Rep. Louise Day Hicks, Mark Mawrence, chairman of the UMass McGovern organization, said the senator had endorsed the Democratic ticket in the state as a whole.

Mawrence added McGovern had many personal differences with Hicks.

The speeches were preceded by folksingers Chuck Ortolani and Rich Perkins, and a performance by Dennis Hult, another folksinger.

Frances "Sissy" Farenthold, a representative in the Texas House of Representatives and former Democratic vice-presidential candidate, was scheduled to appear but did not, reportedly due to speaking engagements in Texas.

Rabbit Narrates Communal Living Slide Demonstration

By MARK VOGLER

Communal living advocate Peter Rabbit, a spokesman and one of the founders of a commune (Drop City) in Colorado, narrated a slide demonstration before an audience of 100 in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

"We think we know something about real living from our experience at Drop City," Rabbit said at a coffee hour following the slide show. "But we don't want to force our beliefs on anyone.

"All we're trying to do is learn how to live with one another. We are determined to do this and we hope that others will follow."

Rabbit is currently one of 32 inhabitants of a second communal settlement in Colorado, Libre. He says that each member of the commune is able to subsist on just $250 per year.

Most of the slides centered around Libre. Rabbit devoted his attention to the geodesic-domed structures which are the most visibly distinguishing aspect of the South Western communes.

The guest speaker said that the commune movement in the Southwest has been evident since 1965. As for the pioneer project Drop City, "It was a basis for all other communes to start from. It was an inspiration to start others.

"Drop City is completely free and open. Anybody can go there at any time and do whatever he pleases. There's a lot of flower power still around, a lot of drugs."

At the commune Libre, everything is done collectively. All members are extremely work oriented.

As Rabbit pointed out: "Working together is one of the finest ways to learn to love and tolerate people in the whole world.

"We are really an earth-oriented people. We strive to do everything with complete respect to the earth at all times. 'Mother Earth' is all people talk about."

In regard to spiritual matters revolving around his commune, Rabbit said that there's no great diversity in religious beliefs.

"We have all decided that up is the only way to go and we encourage each other all the time."

The only major requirement for entrance to a commune settlement such as Libre is that the joining family erect their own house "so that they may prove their sincerity toward the living experience."

From all indications that Rabbit gave his student inquiries, Libre is still going strong and should continue successfully. He claimed that only four people have left since the project started.

And if the project should fail, Rabbit doesn't feel that the human energy and land resource will go to waste.

"Not by a long shot. Our land will never be sold or bought again. It's free. It can only be given away. If the experiment fails, it will be given away for someone else to try."

WMUA-Orchard Hill Problem Unresolved

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

"This is WMUA," says the announcer for the University of Massachusetts student radio station.

And on FM radio sets throughout the campus, and over a wider area covered by the 1,000-watt station, the voice carries out the message.

On radio sets, you expect it.

But on phonographs?

And television sets?

It's so bad at the Orchard Hill dormitories that at least 40 persons trying to get some sound other than WMUA have written letters, according to OH Area Government Pres. Roy Perdue.

"Rather than correcting the problem at the transmitter," Perdue explained, "the WMUA staff tries to adjust receivers and phonographs in the area so they won't receive the interference sent out. This will be a continuous process as residents buy new stereos and new people move in.

"Webster has the worst interference of the four dorms," Perdue said. "If WMUA is pressured, eventually it can be forced off the air. They have unlimited resources to solve the problem."

"The transmitter is just in a poor location," Perdue added. "The library was finished and the Graduate Research Center was complete and available before construction of the antenna on Dickinson. If nothing is done about the complaints within five days of receipt, they will be forwarded to the FCC and the UMass Building Authority will be contacted."

John Zizis, station manager for WMUA said in an MDC interview Wednesday, "Nobody from Orchard Hill has gotten in touch with us. Only three or four letters were received. We can't do anything unless they come to us with the problems. We have to have something in writing."

A year ago Zizis signed a paper personally guaranteeing "the perfect legal and technical performance of the 1,000-watt FM transmitter to be installed in Room 732 of Emily Dickinson Hall". The paper also included steps to be taken "should the transmitter installation malfunction or produce cases of documented interference". "I did not guarantee absolutely no interference," he said.

"If we don't receive complaints about interference within the next two weeks, we will go to the OH heads of residence and set up a grievance center so we can help the residents," Zizis said.

"It is no permanent problem," he added. "It is a temporary problem if people contact us directly."

McNamara Reported Attacked

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) - An unidentified man grabbed former Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara aboard a boat bound for Martha's Vineyard Sept. 29 and "attempted to wrestle him over the rail," a spokesman for the boat line said today.

The spokesman said McNamara "did not want to prefer any charges" and asked only that "the man be kept away from him," during the rest of the 45-minute trip.

The official of the Woods Hole, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket Steamship Authority, who asked to remain unidentified, said the incident was described to him by personnel of the ferry, the MV Islander.

He said it occurred as the vessel was under way from Woods Hole to the island, several miles off the coast, where McNamara is a part owner of beach property.

The official, confirming reports of the incident, also said he accepted as accurate reports that it stemmed from objection of plans by McNamara and others to purchase "Jungle Beach," a section of beach property which has been frequented in the past by nudist bathers. The steamship line official said he did not know the name of McNamara's assailant but understood he had "been around the island for some time."

He said he was told that, following the attempt to push McNamara overboard, "first, passengers who were nearby assisted and then the mate and a couple of deckhands arrived on the scene and helped subdue him and control him."

The official added that he understood the passenger was kept on deck and under control by crew members until after McNamara left the vessel at Martha's Vineyard.

The steamship authority reported the matter to the Coast Guard "well after the incident," the spokesman said, but did not call other officials because "there was nothing I could do." He said he understood federal officials had investigated it.

Joe Tex To Speak At New African House

We would like to make a correction on Tuesday's article. The first is the date of Oct. 12, 1972 as the date of the next meeting of the Third World Alliance. This meeting will take place on Thursday Oct. 19, 1972. It will be held at the School of Business Administration, Auditorium #120 at 8:00 p.m. sharp.

The above errors of day and date were ours and we take complete responsibility for them.

However we would like to state that the wording in Tuesday's article was edited by the staff of the Collegian. This practice is in NO way in keeping with the communications policies of the Third World Alliance. If the article seemed impersonal in content, it was due to the unconscious paternalistic nature of the Collegian staff. We would hope that this practice, as of this writing, has ceased.

At 1:00 p.m., on Thursday afternoon Oct. 12, 1972, Brother Joe Tex will be speaking at New Africa House in room 315. The brother who for many years made us pat our feet and snap our fingers to his rythmic sounds has cut show business loose and is devoting his life to the service of the people. The brother is now a Muslim Minister.

There are many areas of involvement in which workers are urgently needed at this time. We are asking all our people to GET ON THE CASE.

THE PRESENT IS THE TIME FOR STRUGGLE. THE FUTURE IS OURS!!!!!!!

Nixon Prepares Radio Talk

By The Associated Press Writer - The White House announced Wednesday that President Nixon is preparing another nationwide radio broadcast, probably for delivery this weekend, but it said the President did not watch George McGovern's television speech Tuesday night.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon is working on a speech but he would not give the subject. Nixon's first radio campaign speech last weekend called for a federal spending ceiling and promised no new taxes for four years.

Ziegler also said Nixon "was working" and did not watch McGovern's speech, in which the Democrat seeking the President's job outlined his plans to end the Vietnam war. The press aide would not offer White House reaction to the speech.

Meantime, McGovern was on television again Wednesday morning on NBC's Today Show and said "mysterious things have happened in our campaign which have puzzled us."

McGovern commented about published reports that some strategists in Nixon's campaign effort have conducted espionage and sabotage activities against Democrats.

Although McGovern did not elaborate, his political director, Frank Mankiewicz cited some examples of what he called sabotage against the McGovern campaign, but he said he had no proof they were linked to the Nixon organization.

The Tuesday night McGovern speech, televised nationwide, was said by his aides to be one of the most crucial of the entire campaign.

Senate OK's Five For Athletic Council

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Athletic council appointments, a money category change for the Action Lab program, and appearances by faculty-senate chairman David W. Booth and chancellor Randolph W. Bromery highlighted last night's Student Senate meeting.

After 90 minutes of debate, five of the six names presented by Student Government Association (SGA) president Larry Ladd to the senate were approved.

The budget category change, aimed at allowing the Action Lab program to buy four guitars for use in jail tutorial programs, was also passed.

In his remarks, Bromery said expected budget cuts in the University budget would probably hit most hard in financial aid, part-time student job funds, and library book funds.

Prof. Booth's appearance is designed to be the first of a series of appearances by faculty and administration members at the senate.

He said students and faculty could work together without always having identical interests, and said the faculty-senate was "a vital source of policy initiation."

"One president of the SGA said the faculty was a natural enemy of the students," Booth said. "I feel students are our natural friends."

He acknowledged that "some of our (the faculty's) work will not please you, but sometimes when we are working too slowly to please you, we are moving too fast for some of our colleagues."

The nominations of Richard Bell, Ed Bryant, Eric Krohn, Tom Price, and Gail Vittori were confirmed by the senate for the Athletic council after lengthy debate.

Much of the debate centered on the candidates' stands on building a new convocation center to house expanded basketball facilities, moving UMass out of the Yankee Conference, and their views on alleged discrimination against women in athletics.

The name of Kathleen Pendergast was defeated, and Tom Price was approved only after a tie-breaking vote by senate speaker John Hogan.

The Action Lab's program request for the change in their budget allowing them to buy four guitars for $200 passed, but another fund category change was committed to the Financial Affairs Committee for a week.

A sum of $10,000 was transferred to the Concert Committee, along with an amendment allowing money from a smaller concert, for which admission would be charged, to be used to help pay for a larger free concert.

Chancellor Bromery in his remarks said one of the major goals was the decentralization of the campus administration, aimed at more clearly defining the roles and objectives of different members of the administration.

He also said the decentralization would increase administrators' accountability in making decisions, and increase participation in the decision-making process.

Bromery said he wanted the vice-chancellors to spend less time on day-to-day details and more on long-range planning.

New programs should become a part of the school if they are successful, he continued, citing the CCEBS (Committeee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students) program as a good example of developing a workable new program.

In other action last night, the senate approved the appointments of Robert Ford and Ann Marie Walker to the Area East judiciary, Andrea Davis and Mike Roberts to the area West judiciary, and Wendall Barry to the non-residential judiciary.

A total of $500 from various accounts was also transferred to the special projects category of the Women's Committee.

Bromery On Resume Flap

By STEVE TRIPOLI

UMass Chancellor Randolph Bromery said yesterday that the withdrawal of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs candidate Alfred Gourdet and the ensuing difficulty over discrepancies in his resume is "regretful" because it exposes "another erosion of the viability of the Search Committee process."

Speaking in a Collegian interview, the Chancellor also touched on other matters, such as the reorganization of the Student Union Governing Board, the new Athletic Council, the proposed dropping of the rhetoric requirement here, and a pending case in the Student Judiciary concerning the recent reapportionment of the Student Senate to include fifteen Third World seats.

On the Vice Chancellor search, Bromery told the Collegian that there was "no question" in his mind that Dr. Robert Gage was the best candidate for the post. He also said that he still wasn't convinced that Mr. Gourdet had intentionally perpetrated a fraud on the Search Committee.

Gourdet withdrew from consideration prior to the committee's decision, saying that the atmosphere of the campus was better suited to Dr. Gage.

Gage was recommended by the committee shortly thereafter, before anyone on the committee knew of the discrepancy in Gourdet's resume.

It was Bromery's office that uncovered the irregularity. Bromery stated that his office as a matter of routine checks the credentials of anyone who is to work under him.

He also stated that since Gourdet withdrew before he was informed that a discrepancy had been found in his resume, he (the chancellor) had decided not to say anything about it.

The irregularity in the resume concerned a Doctor's degree that Gourdet had supposedly received from Cornell. On investigation, it was found that no such degree existed.

On the SUG Board issue, Bromery said that he "expected the best" from the new Board, which will begin operating in about a month. Bromery also said that he "didn't want to comdemn" the entire old Board, saying that the problem with it was that "one or two personalities" got involved, and that these people "didn't understand the role of SUG Board...they were trying to supervise Campus Center personnel."

When asked to comment about the Athletic Council and how he felt about the Athletic Fee, Bromery claimed that he couldn't make a fair assessment of the situation since he "hadn't looked at Athletics enough to understand how they're financed." He cautioned that the new council shouldn't "change for change's sake" and urged the new council to "find out who supports what on campus" before making any important decisions.

Bromery stayed more or less neutral on the issue of the abolition of the Rhetoric requirement, saying that he would in all probability approve the change "if everyone does", "everyone" being both the Student Senate and the Faculty Senate.

Concerning the case before the Student Judiciary which comes up tonight questioning the constitutionality of the reapportionment of the Senate, Bromery stated that he was glad that the fifteen Third World seats had been allowed because now there was "at least some Third World sensitivity involved" in the Senate, but he reiterated his stand on quotas, saying that he was afraid that a quota would "put a ceiling" on Third World membership in the Senate.

He also said that the reapportionment "presupposes that all Third World students will vote in a bloc", which according to Bromery wouldn't do much good if all non-Third World students did the same.

McG Losing Support On U.S. Campuses?

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Disenchanted with Sen. George McGovern because of the Eagleton affair and a belief he has vacillated on key issues, his campus supporters from Boston to Berkeley have lost their enthusiasm about the presidential election.

And while President Nixon has his college campaigners, they are not making much noise.

Associated Press bureaus in various parts of the country this week sampled campus sentiment and found little fervor about the election. Recent polls by the Gallup organization and Louis Harris indicated that more than 50 per cent of the campus population is registered to vote, with many campuses reporting better than 70 per cent registration. But while most students interviewed said they would vote, few expressed any excitement about it.

There are hard-working McGovern people on nearly every campus. Missing, however, is the outpouring of volunteer workers who fueled McGovern's primary campaigns last spring and whose efforts had been counted on this fall.

"People are going to vote for McGovern, but not many are interested in working for him," said Robert Dichert, editor of the Harvard Crimson. "Most people here see it as investing in a failing business."

Kissinger Returns Amid Speculation

WASHINGTON (AP) - Henry Kissinger completed a fourth day of private talks with the North Vietnamese Wednesday and unexpectedly delayed his departure from Paris until today.

But White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said "we have no indication the talks will be extended another day."

Ziegler would not say why Kissinger's departure-originally scheduled for Tuesday but reset for Wednesday-had been delayed again.

But there were indications that Kissinger might confer with French officials upset because their diplomatic mission in Hanoi was severely damaged during a U.S. air raid.

"We have just received confirmation from the party that Dr. Kissinger will be remaining overnight in Paris," Ziegler said. "We expect them to leave Paris tomorrow to return to Washington."

Ziegler said he could not respond to questions about the reason for the delayed departure saying "this is all the information we have."

The spokesman had said earlier that Kissinger would confer with President Nixon before the chief executive leaves Thursday morning for a one-day campaign trip to Atlanta.

With the change in travel plans, however, it appeared that the personal report to the President won't come before Thursday night.

Ziegler and other officials maintained silence on the substance of the talks.

The unprecedented extension of Kissinger's 19th round of secret Paris talks to four days naturally stirred speculation that a breakthrough toward a settlement might be near. But officials refused to give any encouragement to such theories.

Prior to this visit, Kissinger's talks always had been one-day affairs except for one that lasted two days.

Kissinger originally was scheduled to return Tuesday but unexpectedly agreed with North Vietnamese negotiators Le Duc Tho and Xuan Thuy to extend their talks through a fourth day.

Ziegler said the extension had nothing to do with the latest bombing raid on Hanoi. And Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird said air strikes against North Vietnam would continue despite the intensified negotiations.

The French said their diplomatic mission in Hanoi was heavily damaged and their chief envoy wounded in a Tuesday raid but Laird and Ziegler said preliminary reports did not establish whether the mission was hit by U.S. bombs or by stray anti-aircraft missiles.

When Kissinger arrived in Paris last weekend for what developed as the most extensive talks ever with the North Vietnamese, he was accompanied by Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., who returned last Wednesday from consultations with South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu.

This fueled speculation-never flatly denied by the White House-that the sessions were centering on the make-up of a coalition Saigon government. The Communists have publicly proposed that Thieu resign to clear the way for a tripartite coalition government, but the United States has publicly rejected the proposal. And Thieu has said he has no intention of resigning.

French Say N. Viet Mission Hit

SAIGON (AP) — U.S. warplanes attacked Hanoi today and the French said their diplomatic mission was heavily damaged and their chief envoy wounded.

In response to a French protest, the U.S. Command said initial operational reports indicated that Navy planes hit military targets 2-1/2 to 3 miles from the mission buildings. It promised an investigation of a French complaint.

"A number of enemy surface to air missiles were fired at the U.S. aircraft," the statement said. "No U.S. aircraft were lost, and the surface to air missiles, after missing the aircraft, could have impacted on the ground."

A spokesman agreed the statement might give the impression that the destruction of the mission headquarters was caused by the North Vietnamese missiles. The command refused, however, to rule out the possibility of U.S. bombs going astray and hitting the French compound.

The command said the military targets attacked included major railroad yards and trans-shipment points across the Red River north of the French delegation.

In Paris, President Georges Pompidou after a Cabinet meeting called the bombing "a deplorable act." The French protest was handed to U.S. Ambassador Arthur K. Watson.

A French government spokesman said the chief of the mission in the North Vietnamese capital, Delegate-General Pierre Susini, was "very seriously injured."

While his injuries were not fatal, Susini suffered from loss of blood and shock, the spokesman added. Three other diplomats and the mission's French secretaries were unhurt, but four Vietnamese employes were missing.

First to comment in Saigon on the bombing was Gen. John W. Vogt, deputy commander of the U.S. Command and chief of the 7th Air Force. He promised an investigation.

"Right now, I can honestly say I know nothing about it," he said. "I can't imagine how it could have happened. We'll just have to go into it and see what happened. We're going to take a good hard look at it. What we have to do is pick up the pieces and see what the allegations are and try to piece it together."

Radio Hanoi reported that four Vietnamese employes and one French woman were killed. It added that the Albanian charge d'affaires, who was calling on Susini, also was wounded.

Beano Licenses Refused

BOSTON (AP) — Beano licenses issued to 31 Elks lodges in Massachusetts will be renewed and another 10 applications are being held up because the organization refuses to admit black members.

Letters being sent to lodges of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks cite a state executive order which directs all state agencies to use their powers to end discrimination. The letter was signed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent and Public Safety Commissioner John F. Kehoe.

Bonus Bill Approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bonuses ranging from $600 to $17,000 to attract doctors and men with needed skills into an all-voluntary military won approval Wednesday in the House.

But opponents of the bonuses, estimated to cost $1.4 billion over the next five years, contended Congress already has done enough to try to attract an all-volunteer military by next June 30.

The bill was approved 337 to 35 and sent to the Senate.

Defense Funds Passed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A compromise defense appropriations bill totaling $74.3 billion has been approved by House-Senate conferees. It includes $6.1 billion for the war in Indochina.

The appropriations bill is the largest for defense since World War II, although it was $5.2 billion under the total White House requests. It now will be returned to the Senate and House for final action.

Laird Concedes Mission Bombed

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird conceded Wednesday that U.S. bombs might have struck the French diplomatic mission in Hanoi while planes were attacking military targets. But he said the incident won't halt air raids on the North.

On the basis of preliminary reports, he said, it was impossible to tell whether the damage was caused by "a faulty bomb drop" or from North Vietnamese SAM surface-to-air missiles falling back on the city.

He called the damage regretable and said an investigation is under way.

Laird's remarks came during a 55-minute news conference in which he described Sen. George McGovern's plan for ending the Vietnam war a sellout to communism.

"Never before has a major candidate for political office advocated a program of unconditional surrender," Laird said. "That's exactly what this program is."

Laird said the targets in Hanoi included a railroad marshaling yard and transshipment point three miles from the French legation, which is in the center of Hanoi.

Laird said the bombing of the North will go on during peace talks in Paris, which he said are at a "very serious, sensitive and significant stage."

On other matters, Laird said: The Soviet Union is very near testing a larger SS11 ICBM with multiple independently targetable warheads MIRVs.

Aside from some further cuts in support staff, the armed forces will remain at about $2.5 million under the fiscal 1974 budget.

Anarchy Seen In Britain

BLACKPOOL, England (AP) - A government leader startled the Conservative party today with a statement that unnamed plotters are stepping up efforts to smash British society "by promoting industrial unrest and anarchy."

Lord Carrington, the defense minister, also charged at the opening session of the party's annual convention that opposition Laborities are being found "on the side of the lawbreakers and wreckers."

He said in a keynote speech that this process, unless checked by the government, could lead to the downfall of democracy.

"They will be at their most active and dangerous in the coming months," he added. "They see unbridled inflation as their greatest ally and they see this government's proposals to combat it as the greatest threat to their ambitions."

The 4,000 party workers and delegates attending the four-day convention acclaimed Carrington when, called for more "militancy in defense of moderation" he said.

Senate Kills Antibusing Debate For Second Time

WASHINGTON (AP) — Efforts to cut off Senate debate on a House-passed antibusing bill ran into a stonewall again Wednesday. A third attempt will be made Thursday.

A two-thirds majority was required to put the Senate's antifilibuster rule into effect and, as was the case Tuesday, the move fell 10 votes short.

The roll call was 49 for and 39 against. The vote Tuesday was 45 to 37.

The only senator who switched his vote was John L. McClellan, R-Ark. He voted for closing out the debate Wednesday after voting against the move Tuesday.

Backers of the bill to put tight restrictions on busing, for school desegregation conceded they have slim hopes of turning the tables when a third vote is taken Thursday on cutting off debate which began last Friday.

However, they could come up with parliamentary maneuvers to delay adjournment beyond the end of the week if the Senate does not act on the bill.

Before Wednesday's vote, Sens. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., and Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., said those opposing the bill are thwarting the will of the overwhelming majority of the people.

But Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., said "this is an hysterical bill" and that an effort is being made to ram it through the Senate in the heat of an election campaign.

Griffin and Baker were among five antibusing senators who were called to the White House by President Nixon after Tuesday's vote on cloture. They said he told them he wants a yes-or-no vote on the bill before Congress adjourns.

The bill would place stiffer curbs on busing than Nixon recommended to Congress, but Griffin said the President considers the House-passed measure an appropriate vehicle for reaching his antibusing goals.

Passed by the House on Aug. 18 by a vote of 282 to 102, the bill would make busing a last resort for school desegregation and bar altogether the busing of a student to a school farther than one next-nearest his home.

It also would permit the reopening of court orders for school desegregation to bring them into line with the bill's busing restrictions.

W. German Kissinger Deep In Secret Election Talks

BONN, Germany (AP) - Egon Bahr, the Henry Kissinger of Bonn, is deep in secret talks that could influence the November election-the West German election, that is.

Chancellor Willy Brandt is up against a tough fight for re-election Nov. 19. Bahr's secret talks with the East Germans have recently intensified amid signs he is nearing completion of a treaty that could give Brandt's hopes a boost.

Bahr's role, as Brandt's chancellery state secretary, often eclipses that of Foreign Minister Walter Scheel as the main West German negotiator of treaties.

Like Henry A. Kissinger, Bahr at 50 is a much-traveled trouble shooter who enjoys the full confidence of his boss and the respect of Communist negotiating partners.

Fresh from Kremlin talks Tuesday, Bahr quickly resumed treaty talks in Bonn with his East German counterpart, Michael Kohl. The talks continue Thursday.

Brandt is clearly hoping Bahr will produce a treaty in time for the election.

The East Germans and the Russians apparently would like to help Brandt. Rainer Barzel, his challenger, is more militantly anti-Communist.

Bahr needs all of his skill from years of negotiating to overcome current stumbling blocks to the two-Germanys treaty.

Details are technical, but revolve basically around East Germany's legal status. Bonn considers it less than fully independent, and wants an exchange of diplomats below the ambassadorial level. East Germany wants full ambassadors. Bahr and Kohl will probably have to find a compromise.

In public appearances together the two men have exuded a friendly attitude.

They have one thing in common: both were born in the Thueringen area in what is now East Germany.

Bahr is considered Brandt's closest foreign policy adviser. This dates to their years together in West Berlin in the 1960s. As adviser to then-Mayor Brandt, Bahr helped him work out his "policy of small steps" approach to easing cold war tension. That later became Chancellor Brandt's Ostpolitik-Eastern policy.

6 DC Prisoners Get Hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six prisoners involved in an uprising at the District of Columbia jail voiced their complaints Wednesday night at an extraordinary court hearing while other inmates held hostages inside the jail.

The six were taken to the courtroom of U.S. Dist. Court Judge William Bryant after a day in which rebellious prisoners took control of one cellblock in the jail.

While the hearing was underway, D.C. Corrections Commissioner Kenneth Hardy, who had been held hostage earlier in the day, became ill and Bryant recessed the session. Hardy was rushed to George Washington University Hospital. There was no report on his condition.

At about the same time, a disturbance broke out inside the Women's Detention Center, 1-1/2 miles from the main jail. A city spokesman said about 150 women prisoners were involved but gave no details.

A half hour after the trouble was reported, the spokesman said the situation was under control.

The disturbance at the main jail began in the early morning hours when inmates took at least 10 hostages and threatened them with death. One correctional officer was reported beaten by the inmates, authorities said.

The six rebelling prisoners who went into court Wednesday night were selected by other inmates. Judge Bryant heard their complaints as a part of a pending civil suit protesting conditions at the jail.

When the court session was resumed following Hardy's illness, Bryant issued several orders to jail officials.

He directed that 16-and 17-year-old prisoners be separated from adults; that the Public Defender Service and city officials prepare for a hearing within two weeks on jail conditions; and that jail officials post inside the institution copies of his directives, issued last January, in which he called for a sweeping set of jail reforms.

Bryant told the inmates he could do nothing about their individual cases but promised each would be able to talk with a lawyer before midnight.

Judge Bryant also listened to jail guards voice their grievances.

The guards had a list of demands which included an immediate shakedown at the jail, immediate pay raises equal to those received recently by metropolitan police and permission to carry pistols on a 24-hour basis.

Talks began at the jail after relatives of the prisoners, inmates of nearby Lorton Reformatory, Rep. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y., and others were permitted inside to talk with the inmates.

India Asks Arms Embargo End

NEW DELHI (AP) - India is threatening to terminate a secret project in military communications, financed by the United States, unless Washington promises to remove its embargo on military sales to India.

The project originally was intended as a buffer against a possible Chinese attack on India.

One informed source said Wednesday that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has approved the termination papers "for the convenience of the government of India." The papers will be served, the informant said, if at least oral assurance is not forthcoming.

An American government source confirmed the existence of the project and said it is under suspension. Embassy officials declined on-the-record comments about it.

The project, called Peace Indigo, is an extension of a job begun in the middle 1960s, after India's 1962 border war with China. The U.S. Air Force installed radar in a number of Indian air force facilities along India's northern, eastern and northwestern frontiers.

Peace Indigo was to provide a link with the radar stations. In the event of attack the hookup would provide in New Delhi the same radar picture projected on the forward post's screens.

The project was so secret that 12 U.S. civilian technicians brought here about 18 months ago received security clearance from the Indian government before they were put on the job.

The project has been stalled since last December's India-Pakistan war. The technicians sat idle for want of $17 million worth of embargoed equipment. The U.S. contractor-the electronic system division of Dynamics Corp. of America-began pulling out its staff in late August, after most of the technicians had been without work for months. The original dozen has been pared to three.

India's defense secretary, K. B. Lal, issued the put up or shut down ultimatum in mid-September to Galen B. Stone, charge d'affaires of the U.S. Embassy, it was learned. An informant reports: "Lal said that unless the U.S. government could promise that the embargo would be lifted in the near-foreseeable future-which he made clear would be by June 30, 1973-then Peace Indigo would be terminated."

The Associated Press learned that the prospect of termination apparently has not bothered Washington much, mainly because the Indians have altered Peace Indigo's emphasis since the December war-from China to Pakistan.

Schools Start Group Recruiting

BOSTON (AP) - Four Boston-area colleges have joined for a collective recruiting program to woo prospective students in high schools as far west as Chicago.

The schools-Northeastern University, Boston University, Boston College and Emmanuel College-will send a team to interview students in Philadelphia, Syracuse, New York, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and East Orange, N.J.

"It's just become too complicated and too expensive to go into every secondary school," said Philip R. McCabe, assistant dean of admissions at Northeastern.

"If we were to undertake this alone, it would cost the university over $8,000. By joining with the other colleges, it will run about $2,000," he said.

Generation Gap Solved-McG

CHICAGO (AP) - George McGovern, whose ties with the "new politics" once angered Chicago's old-line Democratic organization, said Wednesday his party has solved the problem of the generation gap.

Addressing a luncheon crowd of hundreds of precinct captains assembled in a Loop hotel by Mayor Richard J. Daley, the Democratic presidential candidate asserted: "We don't have that gap in our party anymore."

McGovern said this was demonstrated Tuesday night when some 10,000 of his backers filled 11 Chicago hotel dining rooms and ballrooms for a fund-raising dinner. The turnout, he said, reflected all ages and segments of Chicago society and demonstrated that the Democratic party is working in harness.

Daley was much in evidence at the affair, as he was Tuesday night when he escorted McGovern to nine different dining halls and each time warmly embraced his candidacy.

Daley and McGovern were not always that close, particularly after McGovern's forces barred the mayor and his delegate slate from the Democratic National Convention in July.

The mayor introduced McGovern to his precinct captains as "a student and a teacher,.....a straight statesman,....the next president of the United States."

McGovern described Illinois as "terribly important in deciding the future of our country." And he recalled that the state gave John F. Kennedy an 8,000-plus vote margin in 1960 that put Kennedy into the White House.

"I'm counting on the people in this room," said the candidate, "to do for our national ticket in 1972 what you did in 1960."

Daley said he well realizes "the crucial position of Illinois in a presidential election year." He told McGovern that his powerful organization always has given strong support to Democratic presidential candidates and added, "that's what we're doing in 1972."

On Wednesday morning McGovern spoke at suburban Wheaton College, an institution closely associated with a number of fundamentalist Christian sects.

His largely student audience in the campus chapel was sprinkled with posters boosting the re-election campaign of President Nixon. However, McGovern brought just about everyone to his feet with a talk that seemed more like a sermon than a political speech.

"We all stand for the constitutional principle of separation of church and state," he said. "But we should all stand against the distortion of this principle into the practice of separating faith from politics and morality from government."

Herald Endorses Nixon Re-election

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Herald Traveler and Record American Wednesday endorsed the reelection of President Nixon, saying his White House record is good and "worthy of a strong vote of confidence from the people."

Published by The Hearst Corp., the Herald Traveler and Record American has a daily circulation of more than 400,000, and the Sunday Herald Traveler and Sunday Advertiser circulates more than 500,000.

In announcing its choice, the newspaper labeled Nixon's foreign policy achievements as "impressive," but said his "accomplishments on the domestic front are not as solid as they might be."

However, it said his domestic achievements are "due in part to the difficult economic situation which he inherited and to a lack of cooperation from Congress."

It said Democratic candidate Sen. George McGovern is "an indecisive, impractical and impulsive challenger whose radical views, wild accusations and ever-changing positions inspire no confidence that he would be capable of leading the nation." The lengthy editorial also lauded Nixon's Vietnam policies.

"He has gone the extra mile in offering the enemy reasonable terms for settling the conflict. He has brought home 515,000 of the 550,000 troops sent to Vietnam Vietnam by two previous Democratic presidents. He has ended America's combat role and reduced our casualties by 98 per cent," it said.

On economy, it said, "Mr. Nixon also deserves credit for making some progress in the war against inflation and unemployment, though his efforts were late and not as strong as they might have been." The endorsement also referred to national public opinion polls, which show the President leading McGovern by wide margins.

"If the political polls are reasonably accurate," it said, "he now enjoys the support and confidence of virtually every identifiable segment of American society.....

"In sharp contrast, his opponent is one of the most divisive candidates who has ever appeared on the national scene."

Laird Accuses McG Of Viet Surrender

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird today accused Sen. George McGovern of advocating "unconditional surrender" in Vietnam.

Laird struck back at the Democratic presidential candidate who Tuesday night outlined his program for ending the Vietnam war, including suspension of U.S. bombing, other military action and aid to South Vietnam on inauguration day.

"Sen. McGovern would undermine our Vietnamization program," Laird told a news conference.

"He would abandon negotiation in favor of a pure giveaway program with guarantees for absolutely nothing."

Laird called the news conference ostensibly to discuss the outlines of next year's defense budget but he was obviously primed to strike back at McGovern.

At one point, Laird accused McGovern of being "very deceitful" in what the defense secretary said was a distortion of a statement Laird had made to Congress.

McGovern had quoted Laird as recently admitting to a congressional committee "that the fighting could continue far into the future under present policy."

Laird said it is up to Hanoi to decide how much longer the fighting will continue.

"I cannot assure you that the Vietnamization track will stop the fighting," Laird said.

McG Bay State Organization Announces Committee List

BOSTON (AP) — With Sen. George McGovern on his second major campaign swing through Massachusetts in two weeks, his state campaign organization announced Thursday a "partial list" of 100 political and civic leaders who have signed up for a steering committee.

Co-chairmen of the committee are Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and retired Speaker of the House John W. McCormack.

The list included most leaders of the regular Democratic organization in the state, including the incumbent Democratic congressmen, Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, state Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, and House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke.

Twenty-three of some 175 Democratic state representatives in the 240 member House and 13 of the 30 Democrats in the 40-member Senate were also on the list.

Others on the list included Democratic congressional constitutional officers, the mayors of Cambridge and Somerville, a few labor leaders and various long-time backers of the McGovern effort.

Burton To Play In Benefit Concert

Jazz Performer Gary Burton will play in concert this weekend.

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

Jazz performer Gary Burton will be presented in concert with the J.R. Mitchell-Byard Lancaster Quartet on Saturday October 14 at 8:30 p.m. in the east side of the Worcester Dining Commons. The concert, which will benefit the M.A.R.Y. Program (Westfield Detention Center) and the Orchard Hill Music and Lecture Series, is sponsored by the area governments of the Orchard Hill and Northeast residential areas.

Gary Burton, named number one vibist in the Jazz and Pop and Downbeat Magazine's reader's opinion polls for four years, was voted "Jazzman of the Year" the first year he formed his own group. Prior to that, Burton received national recognition as a featured soloist with George Shearing in 1963 and Stan Getz in 1964-66. The Gary Burton Quartet was formed in 1967 and since then has traveled world-wide performing concerts and recordings.

The quartet was one of the first jazz groups to combine rock music with the improvisational skills of jazz. Burton's four mallet technique is seen by some as "a new standard of performance for the vibraphone."

Burton's latest recording, "Alone at Last," is a completely solo album. The album includes a recording of Gary's solo concert at the Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland. The success of that concert led Burton to repeat his solo performance as part of the Newport Jazz Festival Eurcpean Tour, including a State Department sponsored tour of the Communist-bloc countries. In another recent release, jazz pianist Keith Jarrett is guest soloist with the Gary Burton Quartet. Both albums are on the Atlantic label.

In addition to touring extensively, Burton has become well-known in his field as an author and lecturer. He is also an instrumental design consultant and clinician for the Musser Division of Ludwig Industries, a leading manufacturer of mallet instruments.

The twenty-nine-year-old musician was born in a small Indiana town where he developed his own technique for playing vibes, due to the lack of musicians in the area. He attended the Berklee College of Music in Boston, where he is presently a teacher of his instrumental concepts and advanced improvisational techniques.

Jet With 57 Aboard Hijacked

(AP) - A Lufthansa airliner with 58 persons on board was hijacked on a flight from Lisbon on Wednesday, but a Lufthansa employe and police overpowered the hijacker after the plane landed here.

The hijacker took control of the plane after telling a stewardess he was carrying a bomb and would detonate it unless he was paid 1,000 to 2,000 marks, the equivalent of $300 to $600 in ransom, an airline spokesman said.

The hijacker also demanded that a getaway car be provided when the plane landed in Frankfurt.

Amherst Traffic Survey To Be Conducted

Motorists in Amherst are advised of a forthcoming traffic survey to be conducted by the Office of the Town Planner for the Amherst Redevelopment Authority. Its purpose is to provide detailed information about parking and circulation patterns for several town committees studying the problems of traffic and transportation in Amherst.

The traffic survey will be conducted throughout one day in October. A survey area has been mapped and checkpoints designated on all entrance and exit roads. Checkpoint stations, manned by a squad of volunteer workers, will be defined by bright yellow or orange traffic cones and identified with large signs.

Upon entering the survey zone, motorists will be asked to stop and pick up a data sheet on which the survey worker will record the entrance station number, the time, the type of vehicle, and the number of passengers in the vehicle. When leaving the survey zone, motorists will be asked to deposit their data sheet with a survey worker who will record the exit number and the time.

The survey sheets will be scanned by machine and translated into computer data cards. A computer will then analyze the data gathered during the traffic survey and print out a detailed report of parking and circulation patterns within the survey area. Final results of the traffic survey will be available by the end of October.

The Office of the Town Planner is asking for the cooperation of all motorists.

Sex Education Program Heads NE Area Government Meeting

By STEVE RUGGLES

The Northwest Area Government, Tuesday night, voted to allocate $515 to a Peer Sex Education program to be run in The Quad. Also taken up at this meeting were proposals concerning Craft Shops, a Film Co-op, and new proposals for next week's meeting.

A series of films and guest speakers will be presented throughout the semester by the PSE Program. The two proposals passed include $200 in salaries for the two PSE counselors who will be running the program, $75 for a basic library on sex education, $40 for advertising, and $200 for the speakers and movies.

The Council voted to spend $87 for equipment for an Area Leather Crafts Shop. A sum of $150 was loaned to the teacher of the "Leather Crafts" colloquia to purchase an initial supply of leather.

Fifteen dollars was granted to buy a reusable amount of silver for demonstration purposes in the "Silver Crafts" colloquia.

The Quad Goverment voted to provide $245 from area money in conjunction with a three dollar lab fee paid by each student to pay the Yoga colloquia instructor. The Quad will have three introductory classes and one intermediate class in Yoga with a total enrollment of 60 students. For this, the instructor has been promised a total of $425.

One hundred dollars was voted to be spent on the Film Co-op for the purpose of renting a set of films to be shown in the Quad dorms which provide the facilities. The films are kinetic art experimental films, and last a combined time of about an hour.

The Northeast Government also heard four new proposals which will be voted on next week.

The first proposal calls for the purchase of photography equipment totaling $390 for the Quad darkroom in Knowlton. This figure includes $180 for replacing the enlarger which was stolen in August. The door to the darkroom is being re-keyed to prevent further thefts. Steve Dimock, Area Director, has put out the bids on the enlarger.

The second proposal was submitted by Ira Miller, a graduate of the University who is working in the Thompson Media Lab. He is seeking the position of Quad Media Center Director. He is asking for $1000 in salary for approximately 24-25 hours of work each week for the fall semester. He is also teaching two colloquia in "Photography" and "Film-making". As Media Center Director, he would be responsible for equipment loaned out, running equipment, and seeing that the Film Co-op is properly run.

A proposal for $300 for salary to pay the teacher of the "Practicum in Self-Education" colloquia has been presented. This figure would cover only the first semester. The colloquia has an enrollment of 15.

The last proposal submitted to the Council was for a total of $85 for the "Creative Clothing Construction" colloquia. This includes $50 for salaries, $15 for sewing machine repair, ten dollars for duplication of educational materials, and ten dollars for fabric.

These proposals will be voted on next Tuesday at the regular meeting at 7:00 in the Lewis House seminar room.

In other business, the results of the recent Quad referendum on the proposed ice-skating rink were released. The area residents voted to table the proposal for the time being until the situation could be studied further.

A coffee house sponsored by the Area Government will be held Saturday night at 8:00 in Crabtree Basement. This is one of the five coffee houses planned by the Area.

Ruling May Affect Future Boundaries

By MDC STAFF

The Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" ruling on redistricting is expected to play a major role in the drawing up of future precinct boundaries in Amherst.

Even though the town has until 1980 to comply with any conditions the Supreme Court may set, the Selectmen are required by law to redraw precinct boundaries every five years. The next date for such action is December, 1973.

At present the existing precincts elect 240 Town Meeting members in proportions related to the percentages of registered voters, but this must change to the use of population statistics by 1980.

Former Town Meeting moderator Toby Dakin last week told the Town Meeting Study Committee that the large percentage of UMass students unregistered or registered in another district could make a big difference in precinct division when and if the criterion changes from number of registered voters to total population.

Apathetic students, he said, might effectively be over-represented under the Supreme Court ruling.

"The students are interested in studying. I don't think most of them in general give a hoot about the Town Meeting," he said.

Noting the "cohesive units" the seven town precincts now represent, Dakin said he would not recommend changing any of them in the near future "unless more disruptive forces arise than now exist."

"The inequalities are small and not a serious matter," he said. "Distortions of the mix are taken care of in a big district under the one man, one vote principle," Dakin said, but for the smaller precincts he favored keeping the existing divisions intact.

Committee member Irving Howards said, "Ultimately the town must face up to the implications of the Supreme Court decision whatever these implications may be."

Howards noted that it was impossible to "measure the degree of concern among various citizen groups and was bothered by the possibility of "depriving students of Town Meeting privileges because they are not registered to vote on state issues."

UMass student Atty. Richard Howland told the committee Tuesday night that to hold off the Supreme Court directives until 1980 would tend to frustrate students who are interested in the workings of town government.

He said students are not likely to vote as a block during Town Meetings and could be expected to blend in with the community on the precinct level.

He added that it would be a "mistake to isolate the University as a single precinct," when boundaries are redrawn.

Fired Cops Reinstated

BOSTON (AP)-Four Townsend policemen were fired by selectmen to discourage membership in a union, the State Labor Relations Commission has ruled.

The commission ordered the four men reinstated with back pay estimated to amount to $40,000. They were fired last Nov. 11.

Selectmen charged the four with "disobedience to superiors, dereliction of duty and harassment of town citizens."

But the commission, in a 17-page ruling, said "The reason for the discharge was to discourage membership in an employe organization, purely and simply." It added that "From the time of the formalized union activity to the time of the discharges, the words, threats and actions of the chief and the selectmen were primarily meant to dissuade membership in an employe organization."

The four men ordered reinstated are Anthony J. McDonald, Richard P. Baker, Joseph G. Bergeron and Bergeron's brother Peter.

Board of Education Will Not Appeal

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Board of Education said Wednesday it will not appeal a court ruling which ordered release of $52 million in school aid to Boston, but one of the city's school committeeman said afterwards he hopes the city will appeal.

The state board had been withholding the money from Boston because it believed the city was not racially balancing public schools in line with a 1965 state law which requires all public schools to have non-white enrollments of 50 percent or less.

The board said Wednesday it was satisfied with the Suffolk Superior Court decision of Sept. 27 which ordered release of the funds but also ordered the city and state to implement a program aimed at racially balancing Boston's schools by Nov. 21.

The state board, in a statement, said it hoped the decision of Judge Robert Sullivan "will lead to a new era of cooperation and joint effort to assure equal educational opportunity to all the public school children of Boston."

John J. Kerrigan, a Boston school committeeman, said the city's School Committee has not yet made a decision on whether it will appeal the court's decision, but he said "if it's left up to me there will be an appeal."

Kerrigan said that while the city is badly in need of the $52 million, the much bigger issue was compliance with the racial imbalance law.

"Compliance with the court decision would destroy the city of Boston," Kerrigan said. "It would drive the hard-working, white middle class out into suburbia where they aren't affected by an unfair, unworkable law."

He said complaince would almost certainly mean busing of school children.

"There is no way we can comply with the court order without busing," he said, "without forcing children into areas which their parents consider unsafe. If we're going to save our major cities, we're going to have to make a stand."

However, Sullivan said in his Sept. 27 decision that his ruling did not mean busing would be required.

"The exact opposite is the case," he said. "By its very terms and by recent judicial interpretation, the Racial IMBALANCE Act inhibits forced or compulsory busing. If any busing is contemplated in the context of the....act, it is short-haul transportation provided for the convenience and safety of school children, who may use it or not, as they or their parents see fit."

The Boston School Committee must complete a short-term plan to comply with Sullivan's order by Nov. 6.

"New Press" Forum Will Feature NY Times Editor

Five noted journalists and members of the student press from throughout the northeast will gather at Mount Holyoke College Friday and Saturday, October 13 and 14, for a colloquium on "The New Press: Tattler or Guardian?"

Sponsored by Choragos, the Mount Holyoke student newspaper, and the College Lecture Committee, the colloquium features a keynote address on the political role of the press today by William V. Shannon, a member of the New York Times editorial board and frequent writer for the op-ed page. Mr. Shannon is a graduate of Clark University and received an M.A. degree in history from Harvard University. He has served as Fellow in Residence at the Center of Democratic Institutions and was awarded the Alicia Patterson Fellowship. He is author of The American Irish, The Heir Apparent: The Biography of Robert Kennedy, and co-author with Robert Allen of Truman Merry-Go-Round. Mr. Shannon will speak Friday, October 13, at 8:00 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium.

Earl Caldwell will speak on the limitations on the press by the government on Saturday at 10:00 a.m. in Gamble Auditorium. Mr. Caldwell, a New York Times reporter for the San Francisco bureau, from which he covered the Angela Davis trial, was recently convicted of failure to reveal information concerning the Black Panthers. He will discuss his case and the Supreme Court decision which upheld his conviction in an unprecedented restriction of the press.

Panelists Eileen Shanahan, Nat Hentoff and Richard Pollak will talk on "Between the Lines" considering the legitimate boundary between the public's right to know and the government's right to withhold information. The panel, scheduled for 2:30 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium, will be moderated by Tracie Rozhon '69 who is working for the Baltimore Sun.

Ms. Shanahan is Business and Financial Correspondent at the Washington Bureau of the New York Times and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Washington Press Club. An active supporter of the women's rights movement, Ms. Shanahan is the first woman assigned to cover a President's campaign trail. Mr. Hentoff is a regular contributor to The New Yorker, The Village Voice, Evergreen Review, Playboy, and The New York Times. He has written a number of books including the most recent Our Children Are Dying. Mr. Pollak was associate editor of Newsweek and assistant editor of the Honolulu Star Bulletin. In 1971 he co-founded (More), the New York journalism review, and he is currently its editor. Last year (More) sponsored an Alternative Press Convention where many of the problems and changes in the role of the press were discussed.

Resumes

In light of the Gourdet incident it would be appropriate to second the Vice-Chancellor Search Committee's suggestion for a resume investigation office.

The Committee advised Chancellor Bromery to set up some sort of screening panel or office to check into the resumes of potential office holders at the University. While this would not be a feasible action at the start of the search where often large numbers of candidates are under consideration, it could be done when the list is narrowed down to the final few.

Such an office would eliminate potential harm to both the University and the candidates.

Point Of Reason

In it's worst show in recent history the Student Senate spent over an hour and a half debating the appointment of six students to the Athletic Council.

Five were eventually chosen.

While the Council is indeed an important body, the interminable debate was not important. There were points of order, points of personal procedure, motions to table, requests for recounts, and motions to throw the names out and start all over again.

It was a petty, foolish show.

The Two Nixons

A day doesn't go by without some frustrated McGovernite reproaching me for my editorial policy, which has been consistently based on the assumption that Nixon, President of the United States, will continue to be President of the United States until 1976. What, they ask, gives me the right to assume that McGovern can't win?

Now to me, anybody who believes that George McGovern really stands a chance of making it to the White House can be classified in one of two categories: stoned or imbecilic. I've met plenty of the former, and none of the latter. Whenever I meet somebody who may fit the latter category, which means that his or her appearance does not exuberate with that ever prevalent botanically induced euphoria, I automatically offer a two-to-one odds wager on the outcome of the Presidential election. The fact that nobody has taken advantage of my wager offerings leads me to believe that there are no such imbeciles; nobody really believes in the inevitability of George McGovern.

Why have the polls been so favorable to McGovern? Is it that they are staffed with conspirators from the Nixon camp, who are determined to demoralize the McGovern shock troops? Or is it because the American voters are really in favor of FOUR MORE YEARS? Do the American voters love Nixon, or hate McGovern? What is determining Nixon's massive lead in the polls?

Let us rule out two assumptions. First of all, the American people don't hate George McGovern. Many people may disagree with many of the stands which he has taken, but still, there is not, and never has been, any widespread hatred of McGovern. The other assumption to be ruled out is that the American electorate loves Richard Nixon. If one watched the Republican Convention on television, and took it seriously, one might believe that to be the case. But it just ain't so. Not many people actually revere the President. The reverse is true; the President, historically, has generated more hostility among more people than has George McGovern. Then why do the polls, and just about every intelligent person in this country, predict the President's re-election?

This may all seem to be paradoxical, but the reason for Nixon's big lead may be due to the fact that there are two Nixons. Nixon is perhaps the most two-sided President we have ever had. It isn't schizophrenia, or any split personality tactics designed to deceive the voters. The split is totally in the eyes of the beholder. The American people have come to know two Nixons.

The first Nixon that the American people have been familiarized with is the proverbial "Tricky Dicky", the ruthless, slippery politician. This is not necessarily the real Nixon (who the hell knows the real Nixon?), but more of an image plastered on him by a hostile press corps. But American politics has been permeated by media created images, and Nixon was "Tricky Dicky" from the day he went to Washington as a freshman congressman, right up until he finally secured the Presidency. And throughout this period, Nixon was one of the most despised politicians in America.

But now there is the "new Nixon". He is no longer the run-around politician of the fifties. Tricky Dicky died when Pat Brown defeated him in the California gubernatorial race in '62. After that defeat, Nixon made the most remarkable political comeback in history. And that comeback, more than any other factor, is responsible for the metamorphasis which converted Nixon from "Tricky Dicky" to the President. Now Nixon is quiet, low-key, uninspiring. He is somewhat the ideal of the Middle American President: little flair, businesslike, diligent. The fact that he hasn't condescended to debate George McGovern has worked to his advantage; it pictures the President as a "full-time" President, whereas McGovern assumes the role of the old run-around.

No matter how hard George McGovern campaigns, and no matter how many kiddies make it to the polls in November, Nixon will stay where he is. Losing was for "Tricky Dicky" and he died long ago.

Question Of Priorities

(Editor's Note: The following letter was submitted to us as a Letter to the Editor. It is reprinted here for its editorial value.)

Dear Governor Sargeant:

I am writing to you in reference to something that I read in the Boston Globe on Wednesday, October 4, 1972. I learned that the State Department of Public Utilities will be spending 22.8 million dollars to fix up roads in the Commonwealth. Relative to this fact I would like to address myself to two points.

First of all, I have trouble understanding the priorities of people in State Government, particularly in Massachusetts. You spend 22.8 million dollars on fixing roads while the following has occurred over the past year:

1) A report recently published by the Task Force on Children Out of School stated that the Department of Mental Health treats only ten percent (10%) of the children that need care in Massachusetts. A large part of the problem is an economic question, coupled by the fact that the department hasn't been aggressive enough to get available funds from the Federal Government (similar to the funding that you have just received for the purpose of fixing roads).

2) You and the General Court both cut the budget of the Belchertown State School this year. I believe that the total amount was a 20% reduction. I'm not familiar with what happened to the budgets of the other state institutions, but I'm sure they suffered similar cutbacks.

3) You proposed a 10% cut across the board, for all Welfare recipients: at a juncture when I feel that they receive barely enough.

4) Tuition was raised at all State Colleges and Universities because funds were scarce. I believe there is another tuition hike proposed for a later date.

5) Lastly, a proposed Law School for the University of Massachusetts campus in Amherst was dropped, I assume because it wasn't economically feasible.

At a time when money is scarce to provide very essential services to the taxpayers of the Commonwealth, you and your deputies pursue a 16 million dollar grant from the Federal Government and you spend 6 million dollars of state money on fixing up roads. For what? So that we can have new six lane superhighways that will handle more cars at a faster speed; possibly resulting in more car accidents, definitely encouraging the increased usage of cars adding to the nation's pollution problem.

People in state institutions aren't receiving the treatment that they need (re: Ricci vs. Greenblatt Federal District Court). Welfare recipients are due to get their budgets cut, and students are finding that a college education is becoming too expensive for them to afford; and our elected officials are directing their energies to get federal funds to "build better roads".

I wonder what interests the Volpe Construction Company has in those roads.

The second point that I would like to address also deals with priorities. Assuming for a minute that the only funding that you could get was for public transportation, why must we keep building roads and encouraging people to drive. A logical alternative to that would be to put that money to a statewide public transportation system. The idea of a State and Federally funded public transportation system seems to be foreign to people in state government. You've voiced your concern against pollution and I'm sure that you are aware that auto accidents are the nation's number one killer. Then can you please explain to me why you encourage people to buy more cars and use the cars that they have more often, instead of presenting them with the alternative of an efficient, inexpensive statewide public transportation system.

I am presently a student at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. I'm working at the Community and Regional Legal Assistance Program, through University Year for Action Program (a federally funded program, a component of Vista). The work that I'm doing brings me in close contact with the Belchertown State School and the Northampton State Hospital. I can see first hand that these facilities don't have the staff and other resources that they need to function efficiently. My work has brought me in close contact with the community run mental health centers and I can see that they are far in need of more community based facilities for treatment and training for mentally retarded and all mental health problems. Other students in this office are working with the Welfare problems that legal services has to handle and they relate to me the problems that the recipients are having with the Welfare Department. I've been a student working my own way through U. Mass. for the past two years and I can tell you about the problems of affording a college education these days. After all that I've seen (which I am sure is just a fraction of the needed human services in the Commonwealth) I just fail to understand how building new roads can be a priority of the state. You claim to be sensitive to the needs of people, you claim to be interested in fighting pollution; then why don't you demonstrate this concern and work for the best interests of the people that you represent.

Language and Rhetoric

To The Editor:

A language is a means of emotional and intellectual expression. It is the most beautiful and sophisticated work of art on earth. A language is the most convenient manner of voicing ideas based on a people's culture, their morals and social standards. It embodies an entire way of life and thus represents everything that that culture has produced.

Only one who has some special aesthetic soul can master and appreciate this work of art.

Then why a requirement? Most people do not realize the beauty of a language. Most of us probably never realized the beauty of our own language. And most of you who read this do not believe me when I say that language is the most beautiful and sophisticated work of art. For this reason you should not be required to study a language. Only people who desire to view a language as a painting should study it.

We can live without learning another language. We can also live without ever seeing a Renoir or reading Pushkin. Therefore, a foreign language is not a necessity and should not be required.

But I think rhetoric should be required. We are all co-artists in the formation of the English language. Most of the creating was done by our English-speaking ancestors. Nevertheless, we are all co-creators, however minor and insignificant. By the actions we perform and the way we do them, we help create the English language, since it embodies our entire way of life. We should see what we are creating. This is a necessity. It is necessary for a creator to view his creation.

I have never taken a rhetoric course. However, judging from what I hear, it hardly helps one see his creation. If this is so, something will have to be changed. I do not know how to expose others to the beauty of English, but perhaps someone in that department does. Perhaps there is a professor in the Rhetoric Department who really wants to show us what we are creating. I ask him to do so because I am unqualified.

I realized the beauty of the English language through a foreign language. I first caught a glimpse of the beauty of Russian, and then I realized how beautiful my own language is. It is very difficult to do it the way I did it. I hope there is some other way.

Easy Journey

To The Editor:

A living being, especially civilized man, has a natural desire to live forever in happiness. This is quite natural because, in his natural state the living being is both eternal and joyful. However, in the present conditioned state of life, he is engaged in a struggle against recurring birth and death. Therefore he has attained neither happiness nor immortality.

The latest desire man has developed is the desire to travel to other planets. This is also quite natural, because man has the constitutional right to go to any part of the material or spiritual skies. Such travel is very tempting and exciting because these skies are full of unlimited globes of varying qualities, and they are occupied by all types of living entities.

The desire to travel there can be fulfilled by the process of yoga which serves as a means by which one can transfer himself to whatever planet he likes - possibly to planets where life is not only eternal and blissful, but where there are multiple varieties of enjoyable energies. Anyone who can attain the freedom of the spiritual planets need never return to this miserable land of birth, old age, disease and death.

One can attain to this state of perfection very easily by his individual effort. We invite all those who would like some guidance back to the spiritual sky to participate in an investigation of "The Sacred Books of India" every Wednesday at 5:00 p.m. in the Pierpont main lounge in Southwest. Everyone welcome to sit-in on the course or take for one credit.

Anti-Poverty Haze

To The Editor:

My mind is in a haze as I ponder the constitutionality of anti-poverty programs. Whereas these programs are structured to uplift the disadvantaged, inadvertently they are creating a mass of disillusioned youth and adults who are denied their rights as American citizens because "equal opportunity" for all is jeopardized by these programs that alienate and promote discrimination.

There are millions of unemployed and underemployed youth and adults who cannot be classified in the category of "disadvantaged". Why? What does the word disadvantaged mean? There are several meanings; handicapped, loss or damage to reputation, credit or finances, an unfavorable, inferior or prejudicial condition. The latter meaning mystifies me as I ask myself who is guilty of allowing this chaos of "limited opportunity". Do we realize that every human being in this over-populated, hysterical mass of society is alone within his boundary of limitation?

Then how can we justify the word "disadvantage", a product of bureaucratic supremacy that inhibits a human beings right to be totally free of any prejudice? It is mockery and we cannot sustain a healthy society within walls that might crumble and destroy the rest of our heritage, each man has the right to the "pursuit of happiness' and he cannot relinquish his life to Caesar.

Free Lectures

To The Editor:

Due to the environment and circumstances of a classroom situation, it becomes difficult for a student to listen to a lecture without the pressures of exams, the retaining of content, etc. How nice it would be to just sit back and listen without having to feed back. Concerned residents of J.Q.A. Tower are attempting to grapple with this problem by setting up a lecture series of strictly academic content. They plan to have competent speakers from a variety of fields, and are interested in suggestions and topics, speakers, or sources of information. The lectures will be held in J.Q.A. Tower and anybody interested in presenting a lecture is invited to telephone Miss Somma at 6-4562 or Mr. Stewart at 6-4523 (a.m. or p.m.).

Editorial Points

The Student Senate is back to their old games again. They wasted over half an hour last night debating the merits of appointments made by a panel that they had agreed upon previously. It seems like they can't even agree on what they legislate. Happy politics, folks.

Speaking of politics, we must say that Shirley MacLaine really did her homework before hitting the campaign trail.

Billy's Crusade

To The Editor:

On the dates of October 18-22 a film crusade is being presented in Greenfield, Mass. This is a Billy Graham Film Crusade which features five movies (The Restless Ones, The Heart Is A Rebel, Lucia, Shadow of the Boomerang, and His Land) with one movie each night. The movies are free and open to the public. All the shows but Thursday's are at the Greenfield H.S. Auditorium (Thursday at Christian and Missionary Alliance church auditorium, at corner of Cleveland and Chapman Sts.) and begin at 7:00 PM. This is something new for the area and offers a message for your total life. If you're searching for the real answer to life and living, this could help you. You are all welcome.

Whitlock's Not The One

To The Editor:

Now that the State Representative race has surfaced in the Collegian ("Whitlock's The One" Friday, Oct. 6), I feel obligated to explain some of the issues I have seen Mr. Whitlock handle in the last year.

I am an undergrad in the Geology Dept. and a resident of the town of Belchertown, where Mr. Whitlock is Chairman of the Board of Selectmen. For the last year I have been involved in an environmental study of the town, and have had many dealings with Mr. Whitlock. I would like to use this letter as a means of explaining to the voters some of the reasons why "Whitlock's NOT The One".

The study I am involved in includes the problem of a high salt content in the town water supply. Our research proved that the source of the salt was the storage pile at the Highway Department Garage, which is directly uphill from the wellfields. Further research brought out the fact that the Mass. Dept. of Public Health had written a letter to the Selectmen a full year before, suggesting that the salt pile be moved. This letter was ignored. Last March, when asked when the pile would be moved, Whitlock (also head of the highway department) "promised" it would be gone before this winter. The salt content of the water is still alarmingly high, and the salt pile is still uphill from the wells. There are no immediate plans to move it.

Lampson Brook begins in a meadow near the intersection of routes 9 and 202. Trout are to be found in the brook, along with the rest of the flora and fauna usually associated with streams. About a half-mile downstream from its source, the brook cannot support a bloodsucker. It has a cloudy brown color, and it stinks. The sewage treatment plant used jointly by the Belchertown State School and the town of Belchertown dumps its treated effluent into the brook at this point. The Division of Water Pollution Control has testified to the fact that the plant is periodically overloaded, and that when this happens, untreated sewage is released into the stream. The water was previously used by farmers downstream for irrigation, but the MDPH will no longer let them use the water. Whitlock is one of the Trustees of the State School, and was quoted in a local newspaper as saying "I'm sick and tired of hearing about pollution at the sewage treatment plant." Solution to the problem? Extra men were hired to keep the grass mowed around the plant.

The Batchelor Brook floodplain might be developed as a source of water for the town. It is supplied by two streams. One flows out of Lake Metacomet, and the other has its source somewhere in the conglomeration of beer cans, Kitty-Litter and orange peels that is the town dump. The dump itself breaks 23 or 54 of the "Regulations For Disposal of Solid Waste By Sanitary Landfill" put out by the MDPH. The entire dump sits in a swamp, which is a flagrant violation of the Hatch Act. In spite of all this, Whitlock has voiced the intention of the town's using the entire 100 acres it owns in the area for the expansion of the dump.

If the problems of a small town like Belchertown can't be overcome by this man, what will he do with the problems of the Commonwealth???

Belchertown

To The Editor:

The Belchertown State School suffers from a drastic lack of facilities, educators, therapists, and effective administration to name only a few of its inadequacies. Many efforts have been made on the part of several organizations to improve these existing circumstances, however, although a great deal of time and effort has been expended little has changed at Belchertown.

The Belchertown Volunteers provide recreation and entertainment for some of the more fortunate retarded residents on Saturday afternoons. These visits have become high points in weeks characterized by incarceration, boredom, and depression for those at Belchertown.

The Belchertown Friends Association, a group of parents and friends of residents at Belchertown State School have acted as a lobbying force attempting to influence the Governor and Legislature to initiate meaningful change in the Department of Mental Health and at Belchertown. Unfortunately, despite their efforts improvements have not come.

Finally, last February, Dr. Benjamin Ricci, chairman of the Exercise Science Department at the University of Mass., organized and brought suit against the Mass. Commissioner of Mental Health, Dr. Milton Greenblatt, in Federal Court for providing inadequate care and treatment of his son, a lifetime resident of the school and 28 others named in the suit.

A spontaneous reaction in support of Dr. Ricci came from a group of interested students at the University. It became their objective to raise money for the legal proceedings, the cost of which has been estimated by Mr. Beryl Cohen, Attorney for the plaintiffs, as possibly exceeding $100,000.

This Thursday, at 7:30 PM in room 910 CC the Belchertown Volunteers and Students Offering Support will meet together to discuss the feasibility of merging as mutually supporting organizations. It is hoped that all members of both organizations will attend so that a representative determination may be reached.

Cranberry Pond Reclamated

By SHELLEY SACK
NANCY BASMERJIAN

The trees of autumn, gold and orange hued, line the banks of Cranberry Pond. Their colors reflect in the clear waters in which, on October fifth, floated thousands of glassy-eyed fish waiting to be netted. Thirty people, including two state biochemists, two scuba divers, students, and members of the Massachusetts Cooperative Fisheries Unit gathered here at the University of Massachusetts owned Mount Toby Reservation.

Wielding nets and tanks of Rotenone, they had come to reclaim the pond. Reclamation is a process by which "junk" fish, those considered worthless by fishermen, are eliminated from the pond population. This is important since Cranberry Pond is primarily a recreational facility and is open for public use. Bluegill, punkinseed and chain pickerel are considered undesirable, according to Dr. J. McCann, in charge of the University Fisheries and Game Department.

Their demise was brought about through the application of the chemical Rotenone, known and used since the time of the Aztecs as an easy way to catch fish. The chemical was sprayed on the surface of the pond, which had been previously drained to a level of about nine feet below normal. This suffocated the fish by constricting the capillaries in their gills. The fish died within a few hours of the application, thereby creating a veritable "fish graveyard" on the surface of the pond.

From this point on, it was a fisherman's dream. Dip after dip the nets came up full of fish to be weighed and measured, under the supervision of Dr. Roger Reed, an associate of Dr. McCann. This measurement data is to be used in conjunction with Dr. Reed's researches on the pond population and growth.

The Rotenone is used in a ratio to one part per million and it detoxifies through dilution and exposure to sunlight within three to five days, leaving no lasting effect. After this period, the pond will be restocked with the highly desirable small and large-mouth Bass, and in the spring, with Rainbow Trout from the state.

The state also provides the Rotenone and some of the equipment, and the venture in whole is financed by the sale of fishing licenses and taxes collected from the sale of other items such as rods, reels and outboard motor gasoline.

This same process of reclamation, conducted five years ago on Cranberry Pond, failed due to an oversight in restocking. A number of trash fish were included in the New stock and grew in such numbers as to threaten the existence of the Bass. Hopefully, this year's venture will prove successful in eliminating the undesirables because, as Dr. McCann put it, they are going to check "every single stinking fish"!

Administration Admits Civilian Bombing

WASHINGTON (LNS) - In what was believed to be the first public admission by the Nixon Administration that it has bombed civilian targets in North Vietnam, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State William H. Sullivan admitted in Congressional testimony recently that U.S. war planes have hit non-military targets.

In his testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Refugees Sullivan attempted to justify the strikes by saying that "these happenings do not constitute a pattern of deliberate terror directed against civilians." The simple admission of the bombing of North Vietnamese civilian targets was, though, in direct contradiction to the previous Nixon policy of denying that such strikes were occurring. Moreover, the admission verifies reports that the North Vietnamese News agency has been making for some time.

Senator Kennedy (D—Mass.), chairman of the panel, requested numbers of pictures "in order to evaluate whether the military gains have been worth the civilian costs." The State and the Defense Departments said they do not keep figures on civilian losses, however, which prompted Kennedy to criticize the Pentagon for having accurate data on bombed "trucks and bridges" but none on "schools and hospitals." The Pentagon further refused to give the committee, either in public or in private, aerial photos of civilian damage in the North.

Sullivan tried diligently to explain away the bombings by saying that such happenings are "the regrettable by products of the violence which is the essence of warfare". But one thing he cannot explain away is that the admission of the bombings increases the gap between what Nixon says and what actually does.

Aid To Indochina Week In Progress

NEW YORK (LNS) — Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark and Cora Weiss of the Committee of Liaison with the Families of Men Detained in North Vietnam, launched plans for a National Medical Aid to Indochina Campaign at a press conference in New York last week.

Medical aid to U.S. bombing victims seems to be becoming the thrust of the fall's anti-war activity and thus October 8th-14th has been proclaimed Medical Aid to Indochina Week.

During the press conference Cora Weiss talked about one particular hospital.

She then discussed the importance of medical care and talked about how every hamlet, district and province considers medical care most important.

The Vietnamese have responded to the increased danger due to the bombing by decentralized medical care, realizing that hospitals are a main bombing target. Each hospital completely evacuates to underground shelters at each bomb alert.

Besides the projects specifically organized for the week of the 8th--long term ones are being set up in different cities. Fund-raising is being done through blood donations, concerts and food services.

For donations and more information write to Medical Aid to Indochina, 146 - 6th street, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 02142. Phone #(617) 492-0205.

Anti-War Activities Planned

NEW YORK (LNS) - Responding to a plea by the Union of South Vietnamese Students in the U.S., anti-war activities have been planned in several cities for October 14. This will be the culmination of National Medical Aid to Indochina Week, which coordinators say will set the tone for the fall anti-war activities.

The Union of South Vietnamese Students requested the action to commemorate the death of Nguyen Van Troi, a Vietnamese who tried to assassinate then-Secretary of Defense Robert McNamera on October 15, 1965 in Saigon. They also called for the demonstration at this time in anticipation of a mid-October renewed offensive towards Saigon, which was born out by the just-released news of a strong communist force just 12 miles from the South Vietnamese capital.

All the planned activities are around the double issue of support for the 7-point Peace plan and denouncement of Nixon.

The October 14 Coalition in New York has planned a rally at the Nixon Re-election Headquarters at 1:30 p.m. followed by a march to Central Park. In the Central Park Sheep Meadow there will be a people's fair from 3 to 11 pm to educate people about the 7-point Peace plan and the Nixon doctrine in Indochina.

In San Francisco there will be a rally at 10 am at Delores Park with a march to Golden Gate Park where a rally will start at 1 pm.

Actions are also planned for Philadelphia and Boston. An extensive day is planned in Ithaca, New York where the Indochina Peace Campaign will be that day.

Internships Offered Abroad

Mount Holyoke Community College has pioneered in offering students opportunity to work as volunteer assistants to officials of the United Nations, its specialized agencies, regional organizations and private international associations, wherever they may be located. Students may also work abroad as assistants to government officials or to leaders of groups seeking to influence foreign policies. Students are placed according to their particular interests and training. Normally the internships offer no stipend. Internships are available for January 1973 and the summer of 1973.

Inasmuch as these opportunities exist throughout the world, a student may combine professional experience in policy making and implementation concerning international matters with first hand observation of political activities in Europe, Southeast Asia, Latin America, the Middle East or Africa.

An intern in an international organization has access to meetings of assemblies, councils and committees, thus enriching his/her experience of direct participation in the international political process. An intern assisting a foreign government official or a leader seeking to influence foreign policies may also expect to participate in conferences and official interviews as part of the work assignments or in pursuit of individual interests.

The International Internship Program is open to non-majors in Political Science as well as to students majoring in this department. Applicants should have had a course in International Politics. Depending on the kind of international organization with which the student wishes to intern, other courses are recommended. When pertinent for work abroad, knowledge of a foreign language is required. Non-Mount Holyoke students who fulfill comparable requirements are welcome in the program.

Application forms are available in the Political Science Department Office, 320 Clapp, Mount Holyoke College. They should be returned to Miss Lawson, Director of the Program, as soon as possible but no later than November 1 for the January Term and no later than December 1 for the summer program.

Program To Be Held For UMass Women

A new program is being initiated for the non-professional (classified) women at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst by the Everywoman's Center.

Services will include the exploring of educational opportunities, information on degree programs, workshops, and academic, vocational and personal counseling. Guest lecturers will be invited to participate in programs and activities on and off campus will be discussed and arranged.

The aim of the new program is to develop personal growth and personal involvement of the non-professional woman who has not had such opportunities on campus before.

The coordinator is Ms. Mary LaSota, with offices in Munson Hall, telephones 545-0865 or 545-0883. Calls or visits by non-professional women are welcome. Ms. LaSota has already received many suggestions and ideas from some of the 2000 non-professional women employed by the University at Amherst.

In the planning stage is a 10-week stenography course, a five-week lecture series, and a four-week workshop on educational opportunities for the non-professional woman.

I Want My Bad News

By TONY GRANITE

GOOD NEWS IS BAD NEWS. That's what Diane Almquist found in researching a piece for the Midland (Nebr) Lutheran College Midland, recently.

She cites the example of a New England radio station that excluded all "bad" news from its broadcasts for a 24-hour period. The result was a bombardment of complaints that listeners were being fed only one side of the news.

MA BELL HELPS TO A DEGREE. When MS-candidate K.M. Gupta of Mankato (Minn) State found himself on the job in Montreal, Canada, in the face of a required appearance for oral examination, he had a choice. Several hundred dollars for air fare and lost time on the job, or a large phone bill for a conference call to his three-man committee.

The result was a story in the Mankato State Daily Reporter, headlined "Grad student takes orals by phone."

Orally, no doubt.

STUDENTS CHEAT, according to a piece in the UTexas Daily Texan, in more ways than using note-taking services and term paper ghosts.

The student newspaper cites the example of a UT prof who had his class grade its own test paper. He had actually graded the papers, but was testing the honesty of the class. He found that 60 per cent changed their answers to up their grades.

UTexas rules define "scholastic dishonesty" as including "but is not limited to, cheating on a test, plagiarism and collusion."

The Daily Texan does not accept ads for theme-writing services because of the "collusion" ruling. The University has no rule against note-taking outfits.

CONVERSATION PIECE - the yearbook of Washington (DC) Missionary College is named the "Book of Golden Memories." Heavenly, eh?

CATCHING UP - We missed it, when it first appeared in the B:igham Young U. Daily Universe, Spring 1971: the headline on a feature by Chris Fite about the campus gymnasts - "Those Daring Young Maids In Their Skin-Tight Capris."

Notice To Veterans

It is essential that veteran students who are eligible for educational benefits under the G.I. Bill and "War Orphan" students to re-enroll annually at registration on a V.A. form in order to insure continuation of these benefits.

If you have not yet re-enrolled with the Veterans' Office please do so at once. Our office is located in Room 239 Whitmore Administration Building.

The Certification of Attendance card (blue-green stripe across the top) for your last period of enrollment must be completed and returned to the Veterans Administration if you expect to receive education assistance for the current school year. (for most students this card will be received in the spring.)

If you have misplaced the card, contact the Veterans Administration.

Peace Campaign Planned

Meetings are currently being held on campuses throughout the country to launch the national "peace action campaign" which has been called by the Student Mobilization Committee for this fall.

The purpose of this campaign is to inform the American public about the government's latest escalations of the war and to transform the antiwar sentiments of the majority of Americans into visible antiwar actions.

"The latest atrocities committed by the U.S. government make it crucial that we respond by making the fall antiwar activities as large and successful as possible," explained Fred Lovgren SMC National Coordinator. Latest facts reveal that in the month of July alone, American B52 bombers flew 900 missions over South Vietnam - 111 more than in all of 1971; and for the first time in the war the densely populated Mekong Delta has been heavily bombed. Also, millions of lives are being threatened through the bombing of the dikes and civilian population centers.

The main antiwar activities this fall will take place on October 26 and November 18. These dates were chosen by a national antiwar conference it was decided that the most important task for the antiwar movement this fall is to stay visible and out in the streets. While many of the individuals at the convention supported various candidates running for public office, it was felt that the antiwar movement would have the maximum impact, power, and unity if it remained non-partisan. The convention also decided that the central demands of the antiwar movement should continue to be "stop the bombing now" and "immediate, unconditional withdrawal of all U.S. forces from S.E. Asia."

The activities mapped out by the convention for Oct. 26 will focus on picketlines to be held at Federal Buildings and war corporations throughout the U.S. In addition, many campuses are planning teach-ins, actions against campus complicity with the war, and other forms of antiwar activity.

The major action of the fall will take place on Nov. 18 when peaceful mass demonstrations will take place internationally and in cities across the country. Demonstrations are already planned for 18 cities: Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Denver, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Portland, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, and Washington D.C.

An important part of the fall antiwar campaign will be the SMC's educational activities. These will highlighted by a nationwide speaking tour by Fred Lovgren and a special enlarged edition of SMC's newspaper, The Student Mobilizer, focusing on the escalated air war and repression in South Vietnam under Thieu.

Bumps and Bruises Are Their Only Reward

By MARTY KELLEY

For most normal college football players, the gridiron is an even-steven 100 yards long. But when your football life style is congregated around a sixty yard terrain, you tend to be a bit stubborn when it comes down to giving up footage, and maybe a bit insane to even be in that predicament.

And what a predicament it is. No recognition, plenty of responsibility, and all the extra bumps, bruises, and all the physical aggravation that one could ask for. And for New England's best college football team, there is a service group that fits this description. And without the integrity of captain Dave Butterfield and his Merry Monster Men on the kickoff suicide squad, UMass would surely not be where they are today.

"We realize we have a job to do, it's not a pleasant one but still I feel we're as important to the team as anyone", says Butterfield. This hard nosed character is the captain of the derelect unit that contains on the kickoff. "My main job," says Dave, "as team captain is to organize the unit and get everyone ready to go before the kickoff and basically keep things as organized as possible."

For the Monster Team you have to have a coagulation of speed, heavy metal, brains, discipline, guts, and a short life expectancy plan.

"You know, I really like being on the team," adds junior wide receiver Ed Hadjusack. "This is my second year doing it and I really enjoy the challenge. I play the wing and I have to roll with the flow and turn the ballcarrier into the middle and then pursue".

Well, Ed, I'm glad you like it because being a Monster Man is something our generation of football player would stay away from...We all like to look forward to the future. But for hellions like Jimmy Mahaney, Phil Roland, Mike McNiff, and the likes of Ray Bouchard, Pat Brady, Walt Parker, and Chuck Hamaty, the future is that next kickoff.

McNiff, a talented football player who plays behind Doug Winslow in the middle, feels that filling your lanes is the most essential part of their game plan. "You're going to get burnt if you leave your lane, it's as simple as that", says Mike. "Another major factor is keeping your feet, and that's not always that easy". Mahaney confirms.

"You've got to get there in a hurry and there's always someone there who's trying to blindside you with a block. You're concerned with getting to the ballcarrier and adjucting to the flow. But while you're doing that, someone's trying to get between you and the ball and when they do it usually hurts".

Phil Roland, who's new to the unit and was probably drafted after fumbling the opening kickoff at Burlington, loves his new role. He gets to meet the iron. "We're right in the middle and that's where they try to bust it. We follow the wedge men and move in for the kill. One false move by us and it's six points. Behind us there's just Andy." And it was Dutkanicz who saved a touchdown against Harvard with a shoestring tackle on the Johns' Mark Wheeler.

And when you think of the wedge busters you've got to give some credit to captain Dave and "Luke" (McNiff) for their courage.

Butterfield snickers, "We're usually first to the ball. Somehow we have to get through the maze of people and try to pick our way to the ball and still stay on our feet". McNiff agrees that it's comparable to having the free safety come up to stop the interference on the sweep and let the backwash make the stop. But generally McNiff and Butterfield are there when a stop is to be made.

And if memory serves me right, Mr. Butterfield will get his chargers jacked for what one had to consider a grudge match against Boston University at the Stadium this Saturday.

If you remembered that travesty at good old Nickerson last year, you'll probably recall that Piel took a shot in the shoulder and the diagnosis - a dislocation. But of the seven Terrier touchdowns that day, five were nightmarishly setup by the specialty teams. And a guy by the name of Harmon Hudson who went 93 yards with a kickoff, will be in the lineup Saturday. I didn't think Dave Butterfield will let Harmon get away with that bit of chicanery again.

Well, they won't make the Minutemen Hall of Fame, as a matter of fact you'll forget in time that they every played football for Massachusetts. But when it comes time to hand out the accolades at the end of it all, don't forget Dave and his derelicts, for they did it without your pat on the back.

by SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces has a soft touch but certainly is not a "soft touch." Natives of this zodiacal sign are subtle, mysterious and glamorous. Pisces is of the Water element and these natives exhibit a tendency to easily put on weight. Pisces is associated with the number 7, is related to the planet Neptune and is the natural 12th sign. Pisces persons often play significant roles behind the scenes. The women are sexy and the men have an aura of mystery.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Family member may discuss possible journey. Be diplomatic. Compromise is in order. Don't force your views. By being a good listener, you make ultimate gain. Your own long range program is subject to revision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Problems of estate, joint funds tend now to dominate. Maintain realistic outlook. No one is going to hand you anything on silver platter. Know this and check legal agreements. Refuse to be painted into corner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Lie low. Play waiting game. There are numerous barriers. Know it and examine various aspects of any proposal. Past commitment affects current action. If you don't know what to do, do nothing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get basic chores out of way. Delay now could result in loss. Aries individual could play prominent role. Grasp potential. Don't be discouraged by associate who sings blues. Obstacle can be overcome.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Young person may confide problem. Don't cast first stone. New approach is necessary. Creative effort which had been blocked could find new outlook. Stress greater independence of thought, action.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Change scenery. Routine now can become slightly intolerable. You need to let up, to relax. Emotions may be bruised. But you can be on road to recovery. Don't chase losing proposition. Welcome lure of adventure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Relative could be interfering in your personal life. Key is to have sense of humor but to know when to draw line. You are not trapped. Know it and act like you know it. Timing improves and you get proverbial "break".

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Conserve and consolidate. Take inventory. Tighten budget. Be thorough. Don't overlook what seems to be minor detail. One who makes promises may be financially embarrassed. Don't expect something for nothing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Rely on your own judgment. Others may be committed in too many directions. Gemini and Virgo could be in picture. Stress independence and personality. Refuse to be tied down with legal tangle.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Domestic adjustment is featured. Find out where it is you want to be--and why. Don't try to fool yourself. Property appraisal may be in picture. Be wary of one who sweet-talks. Look beneath surface.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend may use heavy-handed methods. Be patient. Remember good times of past. Realistic attitude now is necessary. Pisces person plays prominent role. You gain access to information of value.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get favor recently requested. With it, you also have more responsibility. Don't ask for more than you can handle. Applies to personal and professional areas. Capricorn could be in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have fine sense of humor, have natural knack for entertaining. December should be one of your most significant months of 1972. Many persons misjudge your gentle nature. When chips are down, you can be tough.

With Numbers There's Success

By EARLE BARROLL

OK you diehards of the gridiron. Here's a question for you:

What's the one word in the English language that makes coaches wince like they've just sucked on a lemon? (Hint: It has six letters; eight in its plural form.)

And without further ado, the answer: I-N-J-U-R-Y.

They're as about as popular to a football team as Gore Vidal is to William F. Buckley. (Note: There actually is a relationship to sports in this painting. Mr. Buckley had an article in of all places, Sports Illustrated, just recently.)

Now, where does UMass football fit in? Just prior to this season head coach Dick MacPherson issued this edict: "If we're going to be a good football team, we have to avoid injuries."

The record now stands at 3-0. Outside of a few bruises and sprains (up through Vermont) Doctors Ralph and Schnook have had it pretty easy in contrast to last season when their offices resembled Grand Central Station.

Last Saturday at Vermont the streak came to an end, but not in major proportions. The subjects aren't Paul Metallo and Rich Herman who were both knocked into never-never land for a few hours.

Actually the guy happens to be a linebacker named Rich Cronin. If you remember he was called into action last season when every position on the offensive team was filled except fullback. And as MacPherson said at the time, "He played the position like he was a linebacker."

Today he's a hobbling athlete as he reinjured an already hypered knee at Burlington. "I got hit just right," he remembers. "I had a hyper entension on the knee already and the hit sprained it, bruised it and put it through the whole works.

"The sad thing about it though is that it hasn't been responding to treatments," he emphasizes. "The doctor said I should be able to jog straight, but all that produces it nasty little pains."

He's improbable for Saturday.

Tim Edwards is another linebacker. His ankle has been a problem to him in recent weeks. "It's still nasty," he says, "but I'm going to go against B.U. I'll be in and out of the line-up all game. I'll rest and when the pain goes away I'll come back in."

Tim would have had an extra week of rest hadn't Cronin received his injury. "Tim was ready last week (for UVM)," explains defensive coordinator Bob Pickett. "But, we were hoping to keep him out and give him more time to rest.

"But, when Rich got injured we were forced to use him. It didn't hurt him. He has the type of injury that it's up to him to decide on."

So, where does this leave the linebacking corp?

"We're still in good shape," says Pickett, "although we'd be in better shape with Rich and Tim completely healthy. But we'll be alright."

He has Doug Winslow in the middle. There's no problem there.

He has Dennis Kiernan on the outside. He had 15 tackles, one interception and two quarterback traps at Vermont. There's no problem there.

And now he adds the names of Mike McNiff and Dave Butterfield. "They're both real good players. The big thing about them is that they can play both the middle and the outside linebacker positions."

MacPherson probably had a small print clause in his edict: "With numbers there's success."

WILLIE STARGELL plays a piano before Sunday's game in Pittsburgh as jazz musician, Walt Harper looks on. Willie will have all winter to practice as he missed his cue in the eighth inning of yesterday's game. With one out in the eighth and men on first and third, Willie struck out. (AP 'Wirephoto)

Tennis: UMass vs. Mt. Holyoke Today

By STEVE FERBER

Mt. Holyoke, boasting one of the top womans' tennis teams in New England, will decend on UMass, facing the UMass netwomen at 3:30 pm this afternoon. Coach Sally Oglivie and her crew are still smarting from their loss to Springfield, and hope to return to winning form by posting their fourth win of the fall season - against one loss.

Salem State was victim number one, followed by Westfield, and then Fitchburg State.

But Springfield was a different story. A somewhat surprising story, because through the last two matches, Miss Oglivie hadn't even used her best girls. Kathy Morris, her number one player, sat out both the Westfield and Fitchburg matches, and Diane Green, at number two, sat out the Fitchburg match. Yet even with a full squad, Springfield was too strong.

Morris at number one had a tough day, having flown in from Alabama. And as if the transition from 80 degree temperature to the 50's wasn't enough, then her 6-2, 7-5 loss was, Diane Green made it 2-0 Springfield, as she fell by scores of 7-6, 6-0. This was Miss Green's first loss ever in match play.

Ann Foley, who turned out to be the only victorious UMass singles player, did tremendously, winning more convincingly than any of the girls, as she romped by scores of 6-2, 6-1. Tspatsaris was next, and although she captured set number two, she failed to hold on, losing 6-4, 2-6, 6-3.

Although usually not done, UMass-Springfield played a fifth singles position instead of the traditional third doubles. UMass came up short again as Judy Beecy lost the first set to a tiebreaker. Her scores were: 7-6, 6-1.

Doubles found the other UMass point, as Hesland and Trafton, as second doubles won 3-6, 6-2, 7-5, following another Springfield win, that at first doubles against Mottau and Londergan. Their scores were 4-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Thus three three setters--two won by Springfield, and no matter how you could it, it added up to an extremely frustrating afternoon.

Mt. Holyoke defeated the UMass woman's tennis team last year. Not once, but twice, and its a sure thing that Coach Oglivie would like to get some revenge. But in addition, she'd really like to get that awful Springfield match out of her head, and a win this afternoon would do just that.

Desautels Stabs Two

Three University students from the UMass Fencing Club participated this past weekend in an Amateur Fencers League of America Open Foil, Epee, and Sabre competition. Art Stacy and Tom Ebitz fenced in the Foil event and Bernie Desautels fenced in all three events taking two first places, one in Sabre and the other in Epee, and a second place in the Foil event.

Represented in the meet were Colgate, R.P.I., Berkshire Community College, New Paltz State U., Kingston Fencing Club, Dutchess Fencing Club (the last two clubs were from New York State), and UMass.

Koalas, Whalers On Top

Finding itself midway into the season women's intramurals is rounding into some tight competition.

On top in the residence Hall leagues are the Crampton Koalas and the Melville Whalers. The Koalas defeated the Dupas 14-6 to remain unbeaten in the Aquarius League.

After three weeks of action and confrontation with three strong teams, the Whalers are still living up to their name and last years Residence Hall title. A strong defense has prevented any team from scoring against the Whalers, while their versatile offense is racking up the points.

Karen Fruzetti, the Whaler's star offensive player, had scored 40 of their 68 points to date on reverses, pitch outs, and according to Karen their best play, "the long bomb."

In the Sorority Theban League the Tri Sigs are fighting through some tight squeezes. This past week they slipped by the Alpha Chi Beavers 8-6 on a make-up of a protest game.

Other sorority action the same week saw the Gammies beat the Kappa Crushers for the second time around 20-12. A 16-6 Chiotee victory stunned the Gamma Sigs during their second meeting. Hindered in their Minoan League campaign by the injury of outstanding quarterback, Diane Janvier, the Si Sigmas had a hard time getting the rest of their team together.

Stickmen Prepare For West Point

As fall lacrosse at UMass winds down, Garbers Gorillas get ready to check sticks with the Cadets of West Point. Head Coach Richard Garber and his assistants, Russ Kidd and Roger Farrar, are pleased with the progress made during the fall workouts. "The team is quite impressive in terms of depth at each position," stated Coach Garber, as he reflected on the past three weeks of practice.

On paper, the Gorillas are prepared for the clash. Jim Haddad and John Rutledge should anchor the net duty with Bill Blaustein, John MacCarthy, Russ Incorvia, and Rich Lally packing the starting defense. The attack has jelled somewhat during the fall practice and Coach Garber has Fred Michels, Pete Connolly, Frank Garrahan, Andy Chefer, and Kevin Bush scheduled to play against the Point. The Midfielders are led by the All-American co-Captains Dwight Blomquist and Hirsch Seidman backed by Joe DeRiso, John Martin, Bruce Sibson, Jack Moran, Gene Hardiman, Tom Bock, Steve Crimmins, Pat Walker, Bob Gormley, and Larry Knowlton.

The Cadets should be their usual strong team backed up by a strong experienced Defense. Probably the single outstanding factor swaying in favor of the Point will be conditioning. The Gorillas have not really concentrated on conditioning whereas the Cadets are always in excellent shape.

In spite of the Point's outstanding conditioning and good defense and the idea of a scrimmage as a form of finding the weakness and the strength of a team, this reporter has to go with the UMass depth all around.If the Attack can get it all together:

Red NL Champs Tigers Tie It Up

CINCINNATI (AP) - Brawny Johnny Bench walked to the plate, thinking "home run" all the way.

The Cincinnati catcher then translated his thoughts into action with a game-tying shot in the ninth inning that helped the Reds win the National League pennant Wednesday in a tense 4-3 struggle against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I didn't go up there to go for a base hit-I was going for the home run," said Bench who tied the game 3-3 with his right field blast. Then George Foster scored the winning run on a two-out wild pitch by Bob Moose.

Bench, the National League home run champion who hadn't homered in the four previous playoff games, first hit a long foul down the left field line off Pittsburgh's ace reliever, Dave Giusti. He then drilled one into the right field seats off Giusti while the hometown crowd of 41,887 whooped it up along with the jubilant Cincinnati dugout.

The cheers of the Riverfront Stadium crowd became a storn as Tony Perez singled up the middle and Denis Menke followed with another base hit off Giusti, who saved 22 games for the Pirates this year.

Pittsburgh Manager Bill Virdon pulled Giusti from the game when the right-hander went to a 2-6 count on Cesar Geronimo.

Moose came in to face Geronimo, who had hit a home run in the fifth inning.

Geronimo drove a deep fly to Roberto Clemente near the 375-foot sign in right center field, allowing pinch-runner Foster to reach third.

Foster remained on third momentarily and the crowd quieted dramatically as Darel Chaney lifted a short pop to left which was caught by Pittsburgh shortstop Gene Alley.

Hal McRae came in to pinch-hit for pitcher Clay Carroll and the count on him went to one ball and one strike before Moose fired a ball that dipped under the glove of catcher Manny Sanguillen.

Foster raced home with the winning run while the fans went wild and flooded the field to congratulate the Reds.

The Reds had missed an opportunity to score a run in the eighth when they had a runner on second base with one out. But Pittsburgh reliever Ramon Hernandez protected the 3-2 lead by getting the next two outs.

The Pirates also missed a chance to score in the eighth inning when they had runners at first and second with one out. Tom Hall stopped them by striking out Willie Stargell and getting Sanguillen on a bouncer.

The dramatic come-from-behind victory, which gave the Reds their second National League flag in three years, was fashioned despite another fine performance by Pittsburgh ace Steve Blass.

The victory gave the Reds a 3-2 edge in the best-of-five National League playoffs and earned them a berth in the World Series, which starts Saturday. The Reds will play the winner of the American League playoff between Oakland and Detroit.

DETROIT (AP) - Detroit and Oakland will decide baseball's American League pennant Thursday, but here's a word of caution.

Don't turn off your television set until the last man is out. Dramatic comebacks have become routine in this battle of the AL division champions, now tied at two victories apiece. The game began as a pitcher's duel with Catfish Hunter of the A's and Mickey Lolich of the Tigers matching zeroes.

McAuliffe gave the Tigers the lead with a third inning home run.

Lolich made that single run stand up until the seventh when Mike Epstein drilled a line drive homer.

The A's snapped a tense 1-1 tie with two runs in the top of the 10th in a rally touched off by pinch hitter Gonzalo Marquez' single.

Marquez scored the tie-breaking run as Alou doubled off the left field wall.

Next, Ted Kubiak singled to right, scoring a run that the A's thought certainly would clinch it.

It didn't.

Dick McAuliffe opened Detroit's last chance with a single to right and old pro Al Kaline followed with a single to left, sending McAuliffe to second.

Joe Horlen came in to relieve Bobby Locker. He wild-pitched the runners along and pinch hitter Gates Brown drew a walk, loading the bases.

With the crowd of 37,615 roaring on every pitch, Bill Freehan grounded to third baseman Sal Bando. He threw to second. Gene Tenace, dropped the ball and everybody was safe.

McAuliffe scored on the play, making it 3-2, and Dave Hamilton relieved for the A's.

Norm Cash walked, forcing home Kaline with the tying run and leaving the bases still loaded with none out.

The hit set off the explosion of emotion on the field as the stunned A's walked off silently. This was a game they thought they had won for sure.

By BILL BALLOU

After the luncheon, I walked up to big Chuck Hamaty, who was still wiping lasagna from his face. I wanted to find out what had happened.

I held his strong bicep and asked him "Chuck, what happened when you drew the number. Why didn't I win that door prize?" Chuck and I are good friends and I thought for sure he'd come through for me. But no, I was 33 digits off and again I went home thirsty.

That was about the most exciting thing that happened at this week's football follies. Hamaty and Jim Queeney gave everyone an overview of the offense and defense while head scout Bob Harris talked about BU.

There really isn't that much you can say about a team that hasn't won a game all year, but Harris was pretty nice to them.

The rest of the entertainment centered around this week's edition of the "Dick Page Show". Dick put on the usual display that thus far this year has been all UMass, the game film.

Steve Schubert, Peil Pennington, and Dennis Kiernan were the "stars" of the film but Page provided most of the chuckles with his narration. Best of all was his attempt to locate the point in the film where Mark Palau hit an upright on a point after attempt. It went like this: film rolls, Page says "and here's where Mark misses his extra point. There's the ball hitting the upright and; well I guess it's the next one."

More footage of UMass marching in for a score, Page says "and here's where Mark misses his extra point. There's the ball hitting the upright and; geez, I guess it must be the next one."

More footage of UMass marching for a score, Page says "this is the play where Mark misses that kick. There's the ball hitting the upright and; oops, it wasn't this kick, oh yeah, there was a flag on the play and he's gotta kick it over. There it goes, off the upright."

Anyway, Page's film is really the highlight of the fall luncheons and seeing as Orson Welles isn't around to give him a hand, small mistakes can be tolerated.

Especially when UMass wins.

Court Closes, Decision Next Week

By STEVE SECHE

The General Court, after determining in recess that official records of last month's student elections would not be supeoned, ended its hearings last night on the constitutionality of the Undergraduate Student Senate's apportionment of 15 seats to Third World representatives.

The official decision of the court will be released early next week.

The session had begun several hours earlier with both sides waiving opening statements. Plaintiff Advocate William Spinn then explained that he would bring no witnesses, because "the people most knowledgable of the constitution are members of the student senate, and I feel they would be hostile to our position."

Spinn, representing Matt Tackeff, who brought the suit against the senate, did question extensively witnesses called by Student Attorney General Bert Emmons however, causing one witness, Speaker of the Senate John Hogan to accuse Spinn of trying to "trap" him.

Spinn later responded that "getting straight forward and honest answers from the witnesses seems to be as hard as pulling teeth from a barracuda."

Hogan, called as a witness by Emmons, who is representing the student senate, was pushed by Spinn to explain several points of the reapportionment bill, specifically, the designation of New Africa House as a "residence area with zero population"; and the equity of designating 15 senate seats to a constituency that according to Hogan had less than 200 voters.

Emmons objected to Spinn's continued questions concerning the actual number of Third World students in relation to the seats allocated to them, saying that it sounded like a "combination mathmatics lecture and summary to the court."

The objection was overruled, however, and moments later the court recessed to decide whether it would ask David Booker, chairman of the senate government affairs committee, to turn over to the court the voter registration sheets used to determine residency at New Africa House.

Chief Justice Smith explained that "there might definitely be a question of an illegal election occuring" if the registration by which dormitory residents were allowed to vote as "residents" of New Africa House, was not controlled to prevent students from voting more than once, Smith said that this question was separate from that of the constitutionality of the reapportionment, however.

Tackeff, who was next to Spinn throughout the session, did not offer any comments to the court.

Spinn had earlier questioned Booker, whose committee is charged with election procedure, as to whether that committee had violated the Election Rules Act, by not adhering to that Acts directive that any reapportionment of the Senate be enacted only by an "act of the Senate". Booker, and later Hogan, explained that the language was not clear, and that, in fact, a resolution of a temporary nature–which the reapportionment is–would suffice.

Spinn who several times during the evening spent long moments clarifying terms in the Senate's bill, received from both witnesses an admission that the term "Third World" was ambiguous, "consciously ambiguous" according to Hogan, "to include any ethnic, religious or other group on campus who felt they were not receiving adequate representation in the University's legislative body."

Student Trustees Hit Sarge On Budget

By STEVE TRIPOLI

BOSTON—The six student trustees of public institutions of higher education in the state yesterday issued a statement condemning Governor Sargent for "using students as political pawns" in his dealings with state schools concerning tuition, budgets, and the reorganization of higher education.

In a press conference held in the Statler - Hilton hotel before the cameras of three Boston television stations, the student trustees, including Student Government Association president Larry Ladd of UMass Amherst, and Ellen Kelly of UMass Boston, went on to say in their joint statement that they felt they deserved more careful consideration from the Governor as citizens of the Commonwealth.

Tuition was the chief concern of the student trustees. While recognizing the fact that it should remain a source of revenue for the state, the trustees also cautioned that another raise could be disastrous in view of the fact that the full Board of Trustees had raised the tuition independenly last year.

They stated that as things stand now, the tuition rate is in danger of putting public education out of the reach of many students, saying that they "believe that education should be for all citizens...it is the only logical solution to such deep state-wide problems as welfare and economic stagnation."

The trustee's concern was almost equally strong on the budget question. They cited the fact that in Massachusetts the per capita public spending on higher education was, as of 1970, $19.97, as compared to the national average of $42.51. They also mentioned the fact that for years Massachusetts has ranked 49th in its support of higher education and cautioned the governor not to do anything that would make this "dismal record" even worse.

On the reorganization of higher education in the state, the trustees stated that they would "like to preserve separate and independent boards" because they felt that "any plan to centralize only adds to the growing bureaucracy of the state and further separates the source of decisions from the people who must bear the consequences of those decisions."

In a question and answer period with the press that followed, trustee Lloyd Cutler of Lowell Technological Institute said the major impact of the budget cuts would hit the middle income family. Trustee Ellen Kelly of UMass Boston said some kind of action might be taken on the issues outlined pending the outcome of a meeting of all trustees of State institutions next Saturday in Framingham. Governor Sargent will be in attendance.

Also present at the meeting was trustee Errol Brooks of Southeastern Massachusetts University and a representative of trustee Earl Kelton of the State college system. Ron Robinson of the Community College system was not in attendance.

Sarge Seeks Education Reform At Rally

By JAMES E. GOLD

Both Governor Francis Sargent and State Senator John Barrus yesterday called for a review and reappraisal of continued increases in state spending on public higher education.

They were speaking in the lobby of Hotel Northampton at a campaign rally for Barrus. Sargent gave a 20 minute speech followed by a 15 minute press conference, a fund raising dinner and conversation with reporters and supporters.

Sargent endorsed all the local Republican candidates, praised President Richard Nixon, promoted his reorganization plan and indicated that his forthcoming speech at Framingham State College Saturday will deal with his reforms planned in Massachusetts public higher education.

Sargent said the answer to education problems is "not only to spend more and more." He called for more "flexible" use of facilities.

"I don't think it desirable that each (college or university) has got to have a law school, that each has got to have every type of facility." He said that students should be able to spend two years at one place to get what they want and then be able to transfer to another.

"Per population, we have more law schools in this state than any other state," he said. Sargent again called on the use of the Carnegie Commission recommendations as guidelines in reforming the state's educational system.

When asked to comment about the Carnegie Commission Chairman's statement in the Boston Globe which said that not all the recommendations in that report applied to Massachusetts, Sargent said, "In broad terms it does."

He said the trustees of UMass, who recently returned the fiscal 1974 budget proposal to the governor unchanged after he had asked them to reduce it, "did not really consider the possibilities."

"We can't continue sharp increases," he said. He said that we are in a situation "where the objectives of students must be reviewed."

"I'm not anti-education," he stressed. Sargent said he was looking for new, innovative programs in higher education.

Barrus, commenting later on the same subject said "We are producing Edsels in effect," and that the position of higher education must be reappraised.

He called for a "more relevant, community oriented educational system" which would produce more graduates with meaning. He said that there are "a lot who should not be in college."

Barrus said that it would be "unfair" for him to suggest areas where to cut the University's proposed budget because he wasn't familiar with it, especially the Boston and Worcester elements. He did, however, say that he had a "strong feeling for the University" and that was "pleased we have a great facility."

He confirmed the fact that in the past he had favored more money for the University and had even gone so far as to vote for overriding the governor's veto of the budget last year.

Sargent announced that he had just entered the final phase of his "no-tax strategy" as spelled out in a memo a year ago. He said first there was an austerity program with no new hiring, then an additional fight for the federal revenue sharing program, and now he will see that all the "fat is cut out" concerning uselets state agencies. This will include the layoff or retraining of maybe up to 1,000 state employees.

He stated that the only type of new tax to which he might be agreeable, is one that would go towards lowering the property taxes in the cities and towns.

Sargent also addressed himself to the Presidential elections. He said that in touring the state, he found "support growing to re-elect the president." "They have respect for the ability for this man to make important decisions." He called Nixon's track record "good".

Sargent said that Nixon was turning "away from the concept of Washington solving all the problems." He added that he found a lack of support for Senator George McGovern.

Speaking on local elections, Sargent warned that the Commonwealth was becoming a one party system-Democrat. He said that a two party system should be maintained and that Republicans across the state should be elected to see that this happens.

He praised Barrus as an able leader, especially on the environment issue. He said that Barrus was fighting for the environment before it became an issue.

He greeted each of the local Republican candidates present and endorsed their campaigns. These included Barrus, Representative Louis P. Morini, Hampshire County Treasurer Howard Banner, State Rep. candidates Gerry Whitlock, and Nat Reed, Hampden County Commissioner candidate Don Madsen, and Governor's Council candidate James Mullane.

The governor said that the Watergate incident bothered him and that he hoped that there would be an answer to it coming soon. He said, however, that the public didn't seem as interested in it as did the media.

He stated that no person in his administration had ever received a job because of a campaign contribution. This was in response to recent articles in the Boston Globe concerning the awarding of a construction job to a person who turned out to be a campaign contributor. Sargent claimed that at the time of the contracts awarding, he did not know that the person in question had contributed to his campaign.

Approximately 45-50 people listened to the governor's speech in the hotel lobby while rain cancelled an outdoor appearance. The governor was warmly received by the small crowd.

Attending the dinner were about 30 supporters and 15 members of the press.

Hanoi's Terms Hardening

(AP) - In spite of speculation generated by Henry A. Kissinger's four days of talks with the North Vietnamese in Paris, there are indications that Hanoi's terms for a cease fire actually have been hardening.

It may be part of the bargaining. It may also be an attempt to ferment a yeasty brew from the ingredients in the U.S. political campaign. It may be a case of telling one American one thing and another American something quite different in a deliberate effort to keep matters confused and take advantage of an array of American problems.

About a year ago, Sen. George McGovern was in Paris and talked with Ambassador Xuan Thuy of the North Vietnamese delegation. He said Thuy told him that only two basic issues were blocking a Vietnam cease-fire: withdrawal of U.S. military equipment and release of all Viet Cong prisoners by Saigon.

Thuy had "made it clear," McGovern said then, that such matters could be discussed after the cease-fire.

McGovern's latest statement made no specific mention of Theiu, but he proposed to see to it that the United States would "no longer interfere in the internal politics of Vietnam."

A couple of weeks ago, the Communist party newspaper Hoc Tap said of the peace talks, "The key opposing point lies in the future administration of South Vietnam: Who will retain power in Saigon-the genuine representatives of the South Vietnamese people or the agents of U.S. colonialism." In other words, Thieu must go and this is the most important demand.

A year ago, Hanoi had no idea who might be President of the United States after the 1972 election. Now it has only a short time to wait for that information. Hanoi may seek to develop more leverage.

Some are reading the Kissinger talks with the North Vietnamese as raising a hope of a break in the icejam. At the same time, the North Vietnamese repitition of the stand on Thieu at this time suggests more inflexibility than a year ago.

One thing is certain: North Vietnam is keeping everyone guessing. Possibly Hanoi feels that confusion can be a useful tool at this time.

First Rate Hearing Today

By AVIS YUNI

There will be a preliminary hearing today in the Federal District Court in Boston of the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) and Consum Irate (a committee of businessmen, labor leaders and public officials) suit against the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) and the Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO).

This suit was filed last Friday, October 6th. Nathan Paven, of the Boston law firm of Flamm, Mason and Paven, one of the attorneys representing WMPIRG and CONSUM IRATE (Ronald Bogard, Director of WMPIRG; Dermot Shea, Chairman of CONSUM IRATE; and University of Massachusetts Professors of Legal Studies Ethan Katsh and Peter d'Errico are also representing the two organizations), went to the court and filed papers with the clerk. A judge was then assigned to the case and today's hearing was scheduled.

This judge will decide at the hearing if the case has merit. If he feels it does, a panel of three judges will be chosen. Then the case will go the usual route of any suit.

WMPIRG and CONSUM IRATE are asking the court to declare unconstitutional the statutes under which the DPU establishes rates on the grounds that consumers are not represented at rate hearings.

Dermot Shea stated that the due process of law is violated when consumers are not represented at DPU hearings. Shea is the Former Executive Director of the Consumer Council and currently Consumer Advisor to Speaker Bartley.

Ronald Bogard added that the three Massachusetts agencies responsible for representing consumers at rate hearings - the DPU, the Massachusetts Consumer Council and the Attorney General's Office - have not intervened in the $5.7 million WMECO rate hearings, because of a lack of funds. These agencies did not represent Western Mass. consumers at the last WMECO rate hearings in 1971, when the DPU awarded WMECO a $5.3 million rate increase.

The law suit asks the Court to do seven things. First, to enter a temporary restraining order enjoining the DPU from proceeding further with the WMECO rate hearings.

Second, to declare unconstitutional the statutes under which the DPU establishes rates because the statutes fail to provide adequate notice and adequate representation for consumers at DPU hearings.

Third, to restrain WMECO from pressing its claims for a rate increase until th

Third, to restrain WMECO from pressing its claims for a rate increase until the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts enacts laws enabling consumers to be adequately represented by counsel and experts at DPU rate hearings.

Fourth, in the alternative, if the court decides to allow the WMECO $5.7 million rate increase to go into effect December 1, WMECO must post a bond or other security. The bond shall continue until the General Court enacts laws insuring adequate consumer representation and a fair hearing is held on WMECO's request. When the DPU finally determines the amount that WMECO should receive, WMECO must refund, from the bond, any difference between the $5.7 million collected and the amount awarded by the DPU.

Fifth, if the court allows the current WMECO hearings to proceed, WMECO must pay for reasonable costs, counsel fees and costs of expert witnesses required for adequate consumer representation. Such reasonable costs, counsel fees and costs of expert witnesses to be determined by the DPU.

Sixth, the court should retain jurisdiction of this case until the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts enacts laws guaranteeing consumers adequate representation at utility rate hearings.

Seventh, the court should order any further relief as the court may deem necessary.

Bogard stated that all other remedies had been exhausted before the filing of the suit. "Without this lawsuit," he said, "the $5.7 million rate increase would automatically have gone into effect. We're the only group looking out for the interests of WMECO customers."

Originally, WMPIRG was going to file suit in both the state and federal courts so if their case was thrown out of one court, they would have had recourse in the other. However, stated Steve Ryder, the President of WMPIRG, they feel that they have a case strong enough to be accepted on its merit in the Federal Court, and have thereby decided not to file in the state court.

Wood Asks Student Approval For Tenure, Faculty Moves

By MARIA McNAMARA

UMass President Robert Wood last night called for student approval of all tenure appointments and faculty advancements while speaking with Sylvan area residents at McNamara Dorm.

In what he called an attempt to increase communication and understanding between the administration and student body, Wood spoke to the students there about division of power within the school, the proposed fiscal 1974 budget, and the proposed law center.

Wood pointed out the increased interest of students in who governs a University. Up until ten years ago, he said, no one cared who made policy. Now everyone wants a say in every matter.

He called for a sorting out of interests. Students, he declared, should have a voice in what goes on, especially in matters of day by day living and teacher evaluation. "Does a teacher get through?" he asked. This should be the criteria on which someone is evaluated, not on personality or wit.

Commenting on the division of power within the school, Wood said, "People ask me if the Univesity is a perfect democracy. My answer is no." He went on to state that trustee, faculty member, and student each have roles to fill concerning education, and it would be very difficult for one to concern himself with the roles of the other two.

He added, "I believe the essential question is trying to sort out the relative contribution of each of the participants in education."

In regards to the budget, Wood sees a "tough fight" for the $98 million requested by the school. He justified the request, though, by citing the cost of Columbia Point and the new Medical Science department, as well as the expected enrollment of an additional 1900 students next year.

He urged students and faculty to make others aware of the value and importance of a state run university, stating that student protest and disturbance in recent years has caused many parents and older people in general to distrust this and any large university.

When asked about the possibility of a UMass law school, Wood expressed optimism that such a program will be in operation within two years. A committee headed by Attorney General Quinn has looked into the matter and recommended a "Law Center" rather than an actual school. Wood, however, still sees law as the "major masters degree in the country" and will support the program wholeheartedly, adding that such a school would not be a major expense.

Committee Discusses Tenure

By LAURA DUBOWSKI

The Student Senate Committee on Academic Affairs held a discussion/information session with the new sub-committee on Tenure and Personnel Policy and three faculty members Joe Burrows, John Roberts, and Zina Tillona.

This sub-committee, chaired by Laura Emmons, was formed to look into the student input in determining tenure and personnel policy, along with discovering roles the student can assume in governing this policy.

Different ideas were expressed to find the varied avenues of approach in handling this issue, and to inform the committee on the present tenure and personnel policy. Currently the UMass policy on tenure is that it has no relation with the rank of the faculty member concerned. Personnel committees are involved in determining the competence and value of the faculty member.

These committees make recommendations but no actual decision on deciding tenure.

Among the theories discussed for student participation were a Student Advisory committee which would parallel the current personnel committee, and the feasibility of students participating on the actual committees.

Another alternative was that the different departments could decide on having students on their personnel committees.

Fac-Sen Debates Parking

By JIM DEMPSEY

Several proposals to deal with the parking problem on campus were unveiled at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting by Vice Chancellor Robert Gage and Director of Security Dave Johnston.

Plans for parking meters on campus, additional off-campus buses, and expansion of M lot are being developed now to cope with the crisis.

Gage pointed out that there are 15,500 registered vehicles on campus this year and only 7900 parking spaces. Many people find themselves assigned to lots an inconvenient distance from where they carry on their daily affairs.

Because of the limited University budget, the Administration must find other funds for parking resources. There is also the aesthetic value of the campus that must be considered, Gage declared. "We want to keep it green," he said.

One plan being developed calls for the addition of ten buses to the University line, to be used as a shuttle between the campus and such outlying towns as Belchertown and Sunderland. This would service areas not now being covered by public buses. This could become a reality next semester. Many people who now feel they must drive could then take a bus instead.

However, the problem with the current off-campus to on-campus bus service has been lateness - the buses have just not been on time. Gage said "one reason the buses are late now is because the roads are clogged with automobiles."

M lot is presently in the process of expanding. This should provide 400 more spaces behind the engineering buildings and is expected to be ready in two to three weeks. The only delay is a sewer line that can't be located.

It was also announced that students can expect 254 parking meters in various places around the campus.

Dave Johnston indicated that it is impossible to set limits on the number of cars allowed on campus. Rigid restrictions on who can drive on campus and when would only create another very difficult problem.

He went on to speak of the ticketing of parking violators. The past two weeks, more than a thousand cars have been tagged. A total of $33,000 was raised last year through ticket revenue for the scholarship fund, at a cost of $1 per ticket.

Student Senator Nick Apostola voiced his concern over the touchy issue of weekend car-towing. He cited "many complaints over these obnoxious tow-truck drivers..." and pleaded "can't there be allowances for check-cashing and for just being pleasant - courteous?"

The victims of this practice are for the greater part, students and their weekend guests. Faculty members have little experience with this infrigement, according to Apostala.

Johnston defended his position, indicating that these "obnoxious tow-truck drivers" are not members of his department. They are an outside firm chosen by the Administration.

One other proposal offered to alleviate the parking snarl is a system of student-run information booths at the entrances to the campus. An incoming visitor could then find out exactly where it is permissable to park and where it is not.

Head of the newly-formed Western Massachusetts Public Research Group (WMPIRG), Ron Bogard, announced that 555 of the undergraduate students have supported the group in its first year, providing a total of $18,000 to work with. He explained the purpose of the group and the 11 other PIRG's across the country, as being "public watchdogs."

In other Faculty Senate business - it was announced that Robert Gage was officially named by the Board of Trustees as the new Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

Three new majors have been approved by the Board of Trustees - majors in Afro-American, Judaic and Near Eastern studies.

Olver Asks Participation In Transportation Planning

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

State Rep. John W. Olver, D—Amherst, says citizens should play a more active role in planning for their transportation needs.

"Too often," he said, "the highway planners have given inadequate consideration to environmental and social aspects, as opposed to purely economic aspects, of highway construction."

Olver, who is attempting to unseat John Barrus, R—Goshen, for the state Senate seat in the 2nd Hampshire District, made his remarks in a major policy statement released yesterday on transportation.

The Democratic lawmaker said public transportation is essential to large segments of the population including the elderly, the handicapped, and the poor.

"There is no more critical issue to older citizens than haveing adequate mobility to avoid being trapped in their apartments and homes," he said.

"The fact is that, whether it is the MBTA, Western Mass. Buslines or the Greenfield-Montague Authority, every public transportation system is essential to the people using it and yet," Olver continued, "services are still needed."

The Amherst representative said there is serious need for a more flexible highway fund. He added that Western Massachusetts must get its proportionate share of these funds.

"The inflexible highway fund has led us into a disastrous situation," he said. "Politics dictate that the highway planners allocate half the highway money for the Boston Metropolitan area and half for the rest of the state."

Federal funds, he said, are not being used and recently have been returned to the federal government since Eastern Mass citizens do not want the roads and fight against their construction.

"The gasoline tax is paid by everyone throughout the Commonwealth, but the resulting highway fund can only be used for construction of state or federal highways," he said.

According to Olver, fuel taxes should be used for whatever transportation system makes sense for a particular area.

"Each part of the state must untimately have the needed balance of transportation on a basis of rational priorities and needs," he continued. "No funds should go back to the federal government while our transportation needs remain unmet."

Olver said he would refile legislation for the creation of Regional Transportation Districts that would coordinate the operations of private transportation facilities.

"They would provide a mechanism for the use of the substantial federal funds for public transportation which Massachusetts is not now using fully," he said.

Kissinger Back; To Brief Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's national security adviser Henry A. Kissinger returned to Washington Thursday after an unprecedented four days of secret negotiations with North Vietnamese delegates to the Paris peace talks.

Kissinger was to go to the White House and brief the President on his talks.

On arrival in Washington, Kissinger and his chief assistant, Gen. Alexander M. Haig, got into a waiting car and drove off without speaking to newsmen. A breakfast meeting was planned Friday with Nixon, Kissinger and Secretary of State William P. Rogers.

Earlier, White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler declined to comment on the contents of the talks which have renewed speculation that a negotiated end to the U.S. role in the Vietnam war is in sight.

The latest round of negotiations were the 19th in the secret talks between Kissinger and the North Vietnamese, and the first time the talks have extended beyond two days.

The regular Vietnam peace talks remained deadlocked Thursday.

Kissinger had met previously with the Hanoi Politburo member Le Duc Tho and the North Vietnamese delegation chief Xuan Thuy, but Ziegler said they did not meet on Thursday, Kissinger's fifth day in Paris.

Thuy did not attend the 163rd session of the regular, semipublic talks. A North Vietnamese spokesman said Thuy was indisposed with a sore throat. The North Vietnamese said Le Duc Tho will fly to Hanoi to report on the secret talks, leaving Friday with a stop in Moscow.

U.S. spokesmen refused to comment at all on Kissinger's whereabouts during the day.

At the meeting, North Vietnam's deputy negotiator, Nguyen Minh Vy, said the position of the Nixon administration "prolongs the deadlock of the Paris conference, prolongs the war."

The North Vietnamese spokesman, Nguyen Thanh Le told a news briefing after the meeting that "the Nixon administration still nourishes the illusion it can win a military victory. It pursues the escalation of the war in the two zones of Vietnam. The Nixon administration clings to the position of aggression and neocolonialism."

Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, chief Viet Cong delegate reaffirmed the key points of the Viet Cong demands: a rapid and total pullout of all U.S. and allied forces, an end to U.S. support of President Nguyen Van Thieu's regime and replacement of it by a provisional tripartite government.

Vy sharply denounced U.S. bombing of North Vietnam, particularly attacks Wednesday in Hanoi.

U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter called on the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong to skip their "rituatlistic responses" to allied attempts to clarify their proposals.

He said the Communist proposals "have nothing relevant to say about your side's share in the necessary military measures."

The U.S. spokesman, David Lamberston, said he would be "especially reluctant today" to chacterize the meeting. He said he wanted to be careful of comment about sensitive negotiations.

American Shares Nobel Honors With Englishman

STOCKHOLM (AP)-An American who abandoned a career as a violinist to become a biochemist shared on Thursday the 1972 Nobel Prize for Medicine.

Dr. Gerald Maurice Edelman, 43, of Rockefeller University in New York, and Dr. Rodney R. Porter of Oxford University in England broke down the chemical structure of antibodies that are important in the human body's defense against disease.

Each will receive half of the money that goes with the award-$98,100 this year.

Antibodies is the collective name given to a group of blood proteins that play an important role in the body's defense against infections and against the development of several types of diseases. Up to 1959 they were largely unknown.

The two men did not collaborate but worked independently.

The Royal Caroline Institute here, which makes the annual award for medicine, said the work of Edelman and Porter in explaining their nature of antibodies "laid a firm foundation for truly rational research" in immunology.

Edelman told a news conference at Rockefeller University that he was pleased that the Nobel Prize recognized the necessity for basic research from which practical applications develop.

At Oxford, Porter, 55, told newsmen he had never collaborated directly with Edelman "but our work has been complementary. We have both been concerned with Immunology."

Antibusing Bill Dies In Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) - A bill designed to put an end to almost all busing for school desegregation died in the Senate Thursday strangled by a filibuster by Northern liberals.

The Senate voted 59 to 26 to shelve the bill after a futile, third attempt to muster a two-thirds majority to choke off debate.

The bill passed the House on Aug. 18 by a 282-102 vote, with its toughest provisions written on the floor in a late-night session. President Nixon had called for Senate action before Congress adjourns.

Backers of the antibusing bill predicted the issue would be back before Congress next year, with chances improved for passage of legislation or a constitutional amendment to half what they called excessive, court-ordered busing.

The bill's opponents, led by Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R—N.Y., and Philip A. Hart, D—Mich., said its passage would turn back the clock on the school desegregation achieved since the Supreme Court's 1954 ruling striking down the doctrine of separate-but-equal schools.

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D—Mont., moved to put the bill aside and take up other legislation after the Senate defeated, for the third day in a row, an effort to close out the debate.

The vote was 49 for invoking the Senate's anti-filibuster rule and 38 against, or nine short of the required two-thirds majority.

With the defeat of the bill in the Senate, talk sprang up among House members of trying to revive a constitutional amendment to bar busing for school desegregation, but nothing materialized.

The bill set aside by the Senate would have barred busing for school desegregation except as a last resort. And even then it would have forbidden busing a child beyond a school next nearest to his home.

It also would have permitted the reopening of court orders for school desegregation to bring them into conformity with the bill's restrictions on busing.

House Passes Revenue Sharing

WASHINGTON (AP)-The House passed legislation Thursday to carry out a major proposal of President Nixon by directing more than $30 billion in federal revenues to states, cities and other local governments.

The bill for a five-year revenue-sharing program sent to the Senate by a 265-110 vote is a compromise between versions earlier passed by the two chambers and approved by a conference committee.

The Treasury is geared to release within a few days of Nixon's signature half the first year's allocation, or $2.65 billion. The other half would be disbursed about Jan. 1.

One-third of the funds would go to the states themselves, two-thirds to the cities and local governments.

The states could use their share without restrictions. The local governments would be required to use theirs for specified purpose, including public safety, environmental protection, transportation, health, recreation and ordinary and necessary capital expenditures.

Distribution among the states and within the states to the subordinate governments would be determined by complex formulas taking into consideration population, tax effort and need as measured by per capita income.

The amount allocated for sharing begins at $5.3 billion for the calendar year 1972 and increases by stages to $6.4 billion in 1976.

After this year, the revenue is to be distributed quarterly.

After passing the basic revenue-sharing bill the House by a separate 281-86 vote approved a controversial accompanying provision.

It would set a $2.5-billion annual limit on the federal funds available for matching state spending for social services, especially for welfare recipients at a ratio of 3 to 1. The ceiling would apply to the states according to their population.

Its effect would be to cut back the federal funds available under this program for some states, such as New York, which have greatly expanded their use of the matching provision.

In Brief...

Senate Clears Bill for Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Finance Committee cleared for floor debate Thursday the bill giving President Nixon unlimited power to hold federal spending to $250 billion ceiling.

The Senate is expected to debate the bill Friday.

Vermont Nuclear Plant at Full Power

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Atomic Energy Commission's Appeals Board Thursday ruled that the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corp. generating facility on the Connecticut River could operate at 100 per cent of capacity under its temporary license.

A commission spokesman said the decision meant the current temporary license would be amended immediately to allow the Vernon, Vt., plant to produce its full 513,000 kilowatts of electricity.

U.S. Restricts Hanoi Air Attacks

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird points to a chart showing the administration's Vietnamization record Wednesday during a news conference in Washington. During the conference Laird conceded that American bombs may have struck the French diplomatic mission in Hanoi, but said U.S. air strikes will continue over North Vietnam. (AP)

SAIGON, Oct. 12 (AP) — U.S. planes attacked North Vietnam again on Thursday but they were reported to be restrictions governing raids in the vicinity of Hanoi after the heavy damage to the French diplomatic mission there.

U.S. Command sources confimred that the air blitz was continuing despite the international storm whipped up by damage to the French, Algerian and Indian missions during a bombing raid Wednesday.

The targets will not be disclosed until Friday. The U.S. Command refused to say whether any were in the Hanoi area.

While conceding that Navy planes from the carrier Midway attacked targets on the fringe of Hanoi, the U.S. Command has implied that damage to the foreign misions may have been caused by stray enemy surface-to-air missiles.

He reported six SAM missiles were fired at the Navy raiders. The command has said the missiles may have impacted on the ground after missing the American jets.

Michael Maclear, a Canadian correspondent, reported from Hanoi that he had seen two bomb craters at the French mission, and the evidence was "overwhelming" that it had been hit by bombs.

"Virtually no diplomats here believe the stray-missile story theory," he added.

President Nixon sent a personal message to President Georges Pompidou of France expressing regret at damage to the French mission headquarters and the injury to French delegate-general Pierre Susuni.

Susini was severely wounded in the head. His condition was improved Thursday, the French Foreign Ministry reported.

Reports in Saigon said a varying buffer zone has now been placed around Hanoi by the U.S. Command. It was understood that all potential targets in the immediate Hanoi area will require clearance from the Nixon administration.

In Saigon, President Nguyen Van Thieu told a crowd of 10,000 that he still believes in a military solution rather than a negotiated peace settlement.

"We shall have peace only with victory," declared Thieu. "We have to kill the Communists to the last man before we have peace."

Thieu's armed forces regained control of another hamlet 22 miles north of Saigon and recaptured Ba To, a district town in Quang Ngai Province far to the north. Ba To fell to a North Vietnamese attack Sept. 17.

The U.S. Command announced 21 Americans were killed in combat and 53 wounded last week - the highest weekly total in more than a year.

Most of the casualties resulted from an explosion Oct. 1 in a gun turret of the cruiser Newport News that killed 20 Sailors and wounded 37.

Although attributed to an accident, the casualties were listed as combat losses because the vessel was firing at enemy positions in Quang Tri Province at the time.

The allied commands have reported these total casulaties for the war.

American - 45,882 killed in action, 303,457 wounded, 1,690 missing or captured, 10,280 dead of non-hostile causes.

South Vietnamese - 156,761 killed in action, 412,671 wounded.

Viet Cong and North Vietnamese - 897,460 killed.

Business Strikes Hit Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) - Chile's leftist government, already faced with a crippling nationwide trucking strike, received another blow Thursday as representatives of small business, retail shops, the construction industry and private farmers announced a sympathy strike.

Jorge Fontaine, president of Chile's Confederation of Production and Commerce, speaking on behalf of all the sympathy strikers, said the walkout will begin Friday for an indefinite period despite a state of emergency declared by the government in Santiago and a large part of central Chile.

He said in a radio announcement that the strike was called because of "repeated attacks against freedom to work and freedom of expression and to express our irresistible solidarity with the national trucking movement, the object of suffocation by violent acts."

The truckers' strike, which began late Tuesday after talks between the government and the Confederation of Truck Owners broke down on higher cargo rates, forced a number of service stations and bakeries to close down because there were no deliveries of gasoline or flour.

Daniel Vergara, undersecretary of the interior, announced the state of emergency over nationwide radio. He said it extended from Valparaiso Province, 85 miles to the north of the capital of Bio Providence, 315 miles to the south. It is in this central region that most of Chile's 10 million inhabitants live.

Under the state of emergency, a form of martial law, the Chilean armed forces become directly responsible for public order.

When the talks between the truckers and government broke down, 160 drivers and owners, including the confederation president, Leon Vilarin were arrested and charged with breaking Chile's internal security law.

Vergara announced Thursday immediate rationing of gasoline in Santiago by a special government committee set up to control distribution.

By early Thursday, some Santiago service stations had already run out, as long lines of motorists sought to fill their tanks.

There were several incidents reported Wednesday, including the fatal shooting of a truck driver during an argument.

Compromise Bill Approved For Consumer Protection

WASHINGTON (AP) - Over objections of the Nixon administration, congressional conferees have approved a compromise bill creating a federal agency to protect consumers against death or injury from everyday products.

Administration sources suggested Thursday that the legislation could be vetoed if backers get it through Congress during the dying days of this session. A chief sponsor, Rep. Bob Eckhardt, said senate-House conferees agreed on terms of a compromise and he looks for congressional approval before adjournment, probably this weekend.

The legislation would set up a five-member independent federal commission with authority to protect the public against unreasonable hazards in thousands of consumer products.

Abrams Approved As Chief of Staff

WASHINGTON (AP) - Gen. Creighton W. Abrams received Senate approval Thursday to become Army chief of staff by an 84-2 vote.

The nomination had been held up since July pending a Senate committee investigation of unauthorized bombing strikes against North Vietnam while Abrams was commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam. Afterward, the committee cleared Abrams' nomination.

However, before Thursday's vote, several senators said that in light of issues raised in the probe, the military should do something to reorder its own house.

The votes against Abrams were cast by Sens. Frank Church, D—Idaho, and William Proxmire, D—Wis.

Proxmire said during debate on the nomination that it has been seven months since Air Force Gen. John D. Lavelle was relieved of his Vietnam command because of the bombings and the Pentagon had done nothing about issues raised in the committee investigation.

Lavelle was Abrams' deputy for air operations.

At a news conference before the vote, Sen. Harold Hughes, D—Iowa, said many questions remain about the bombings, "including the growing evidence of allegedly improper activities by the Navy."

He said that the Air Force and Navy should begin a thorough investigation and court of inquiry with authority to recommend court martial concerning the bombings.

Overall, Hughes said, "the deliberate and widespread policy of concealment revealed in the Lavelle case should be a vivid reminder to all of the everpresent danger to a free society of a military establishment that operates day in and day out under a blanket of secrecy that goes far beyond any justification on the grounds of protecting national security.

"Indeed, such secrecy jeopardizes, rather than assures, the national security," Hughes said.

Radio City Reopens For Week

NEW YORK (AP) - Radio City Music Hall agreed yesterday to a week's temporary reopening, after a contract dispute with musicians led to the first closing in its 40-year history.

It has played host to more than 230 million visitors, drawn by its precise Rockettes, its graceful ballet and its Hollywood movies.

Opened in 1932 in the depths of the Depression, the world's largest indoor theater went dark for the first time after Wednesday night's final show. The mechanics of recalling its 600 employes was expected to delay the reopening until Saturday.

Urged on by Mayor John V. Lindsay, state mediation board chairman Vincent McDonnell was able to announce at mid-day that Music Hall management had agreed to reopen for at least a week, while continuing negotiations with its 77 musicians.

McG Charges Nixon, Business Collaboration

BOSTON (AP)-Democrat George McGovern accused the Nixon administration Thursday of collaborating with big business on a calculated policy to fight inflation by increasing unemployment.

The Democratic presidential candidate leveled the accusation in an off-the-cuff breakfast speech to several hundred New England labor leaders who back his campaign.

Casting aside a prepared text, McGovern said "this administration sat down with the top economic planners" of major corporations and decided "the best way to bring down inflation is to increase unemployment."

The South Dakota senator said the decision was made at a meeting of the Business Council at Hot Springs, Va., early in 1969.

"This is not political rhetoric," said McGovern. "It is economic history.

McGovern also talked about Nixon's pledge to avoid tax increases, saying, "This is some more Nixon demagoguery."

If Nixon is re-elected, McGovern said, "I think what he has in mind is a national sales tax" in the form of a value-added levy.

The Democrat said such a tax would add $200 a year to the federal tax bill of the average citizen and said it would represent "the most reactionary, most regressive tax we could put on the books."

At the outset, he said he has given up on the idea of enticing Nixon into face-to-face debate.

But McGovern said he is confident "there is still enough justice, still enough common sense in this country" to win Nov. 7 by taking his case to the people.

Referring to Nixon's infrequent campaign forays, which the President has explained as necessary because of his official duties, McGovern declared:

"He says he's standing on his record. I think he's standing on it so nobody can examine it."

The Democrat nominee taped two local television and radio interviews before meeting with the labor leaders.

In one of his Boston interviews, McGovern said he would, if elected, strengthen the hand of the State Department and downgrade the National Security Council apparatus now directed by Henry A. Kissinger. He said he believes Kissinger wields too much power for one who is not subject to congressional questioning.

McGovern also said the reaction to his Tuesday night television speech on the war has been "really enormous" and the speech "has changed many people's minds."

"I was not prepared for the impact," he said.

Gerry Whitlock, Republican nominee for state representative recommends a computerized system for eliminating fraudulent welfare claims.

Whitlock Knocks Welfare

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Republican nominee Gerry Whitlock says the main problem with welfare in Massachusetts is that it "represents the taxpayer's major tax burden."

Whitlock, candidate for state representative in the 2nd Hampshire District in a major policy statement on welfare, stated this week that too great a percentage of the urgent total state budget is devoted to welfare.

The Belchertown resident said recent figures put welfare at $912 million, or 42 per cent of the total $2.16 billion state budget.

"The recent 'Shepard Amendment' to the state budget attempted to solve the problem by cutting agency operating accounts," he continued. "However, the cure may be worse than the disease."

Whitlock said there are some welfare programs that are "good and are necessary," but "we know there are individuals on welfare who do not deserve to be there and these people must be rooted out."

Whitlock's recommendations for welfare reform include:

—A computer system that would eliminate "referencing and cross-referencing, duplication, fraud and double entries."

—Computer studies to insure that the state pays a fair price for everything from medical help to perscription costs.

—A complete survey of those on welfare to determine the ones who are able and capable of working.

—An education program for welfare recipients, "designed to re-motivate them, instill confidence and pride and slowly bring them back from the attitude of defeat."

—An education program for employers and fellow employees that would "encourage them to help and respect the welfare worker for having the willingness to help himself."

Whitlock added that his program does not offer an overnight cure-all and that it will take years to solve the welfare problem.

"It is a problem that has been growing for generations, and to fail to address it now only postpones the successful conclusion," he said.

Atlanta Greets Nixon Warmly

ATLANTA (AP) - President Nixon rode down Peachtree Street Thursday through a torrent of confetti and a huge midday campaign throng and declared that his is not a Southern strategy but "an American strategy."

Nixon said the current presidential campaign marks the beginning of a new era of political alignment of the South and the nation.

"Neither party is going to take the South for granted, neither party can afford to write it off," Nixon said. "This is going to be good for the South, it's going to be good for the nation."

Later Thursday night, Nixon flew back to Washington where he was to confer with foreign affairs adviser Henry A. Kissinger, who had just returned from four days of secret Vietnam peace negotiations in Paris.

Nixon at first described the motorcade crowd along Atlanta's main street as "the biggest one we ever had," but later he tempered that to say it was the biggest he's seen in Atlanta.

At a reception for campaign and Republican party leaders from 10 Southern states, Nixon said that what was the solid Democratic South will be no more.

Indeed, Nixon campaign strategists believe they can approach or score a sweep in the region which began to break loose from its Democratic tradition in the presidential election eight years ago.

"It has been suggested that my campaigning in the South....means that we have, I have, a so-called Southern strategy," Nixon said. "It is not a Southern strategy, it's an American strategy. That's what it is and that's what the South believes in and that's what it is and that's what America believes in."

The mission to Atlanta was Nixon's first political journey in two weeks.

The Peachtree procession took about a half-hour.

"It was very warm, very friendly, as Atlanta crowds always are," Nixon said.

There was in the crowd a liberal scattering of anti-Nixon placards and of signs urging the election of Democratic Presidential nominee George McGovern.

But the motorcade crowd was overwhelmingly a Nixon turnout.

Campaign '72

The midday motorcade along the main street of Atlanta was the chief event of Nixon's brief trip.

The White House claimed crowd estimates of up to 700,000 by police and fire department observers.

As Nixon's motorcade entered the heart of Atlanta, the presidential limousine stopped and a panel in the roof was rolled back so that the President and Mrs. Nixon could stand and acknowledge the cheers of the crowd.

High school bands and cheerleaders were positioned along the route.

Nixon said he was not yet decided whether there will be more campaign trips to the South.

The odds are that there will not; Nixon strategists believe the President is far ahead of McGovern in the region. And in a limited Nixon campaign, what personal vote-hunting there is, will likely be aimed at other areas.

"Milhouse" Shown Tonight

Milhouse, a satire on President Richard Milhous Nixon, will be shown this evening in Mahar Auditorium at 7 and 9 pm.

Sponsored by the UMass McGovern for President Committee, the movie will serve as both a fund-raiser, and entertainment.

Rein Fishman, a coordinator for the McGovern Committee said that Nixon, Schmitz, and Jenness supporters were welcome to attend the film. "Disrespect", he said, "has been a fundamental tenet of American democracy ever since the rebels overturned statues of George III and Thomas Nast depicted Boss Tweed as a vulture."

Chadbourne Now Has Co Carpets, Kitchens

By SUSAN HABEEB

Students living in Chadbourne now enjoy the comforts of a modern apartment complex since renovations made in the dorm last semester. Along with wall-to-wall carpeting, each room is equipped with wood-grained modular furniture, designed especially for maximum efficiency in a minimum of space.

The rooms also include executive swivel desk chairs, waste paper baskets, large comfortable cushions, and telephones. Kitchenettes can be found on all floors (including the basement) except for the first floor, due to lack of space. Along with being an added convenience to the students, the kitchenettes help to reduce the fire hazards of hot plates.

In the basement, an old janitor's apartment was remodeled into two useful and attractive Seminar rooms. These two rooms are wood-panelled with comfortable cushioned chairs. Different meetings and classes are held in these rooms.

Next to the Seminars there is a study with a wall desk surrounding the room-giving ample area for students to study. The study which was once an unused student's room is also wood-panelled. An old trunk room has been changed to a game room and will eventually have ping pong, weights and other activities. The Recreation Room has been with a T.V., pool table and card tables.

Along with the visible effects of the renovations there was also much electrical and plumbing work done. The whole building was rewired and has new electrical and overhead fixtures.

Although this renovation was extremely expensive, the students had a say in all decisions of the change. They could pick carpeting, furniture, and colors. The whole project, funded by student rent fees, caused a slight inconvenience to students last semester. Chadbourne was closed and 100 of its students lived in Hamlin House during those months. 81 males and 60 females share the house now, in Chadbourne first year being co-ed.

In an interview with Marcus Buckley, head of Residence at Chadbourne, he stated that there hasn't been any specific problems other than normal ones of an all male dorm going co-ed. He said that most of the male students from last year came back and that now the dorm holds mostly older males.

Buckley went on to say that although the room fee at Chadbourne is now the same as Southwest or Orchard Hill Residential areas, Chadbourne has many more conveniences. Buckley was very enthusiastic about the newly renovated dorm and said that it had proved very successful so far.

He hopes that next semester they can even off the ratio of men to women and get a few more females living at Chadbourne to make it an all-around excellent living experience.

Honeywell Protests Planned

By BARBARA VOORHEES

In a continuing effort to end the war in Vietnam, antiwar groups from the five colleges will join with other groups from across the state in a demonstration against the Honeywell Corporation on Wednesday, October 25.

"Honeywell is the nation's main supplier of a small "anti-personal" bomb which is being used extensively by the U.S. in Vietnam," said Jim Matlack, Associate Professor of English and member of the anti-war movement. "These bombs are too small to damage cars, trucks, guns or even thatch roofs, but they rip apart human flesh," said Matlack. "We hope that through our efforts Honeywell will stop producing these bombs as Dow stopped producing Napalm."

On October 25 members of the anti-war movement will distribute leaflets on college campuses and attempt to dissuade students from taking jobs with Honeywell. Some type of anti-war activity will also take place at all Honeywell plants.

At UMass, anti-war movement members hope to dissuade the University from buying a new computer from Honeywell.

Anti-war movement members continue to demonstrate daily at Westover Air Force Base, where last spring hundreds of students, faculty, and residents of the five-college area were arrested for blocking the entranceways to the base. Some forty people were arrested on October 2.

"Westover is the third largest strategic air command in the country," said Matlack. "Last April the number of B-52's sent out from westover multiplied tour or five times. B-52's are bombing South Vietnam and parts of North Vietnam hour after hour, day after day. The impact of their bombs is like a sledge hammer," said Matlack.

All of the demonstrators at Westover use civil disobedience. "It is important to have a sense that you're not protesting against the police," said Matlack.

In Chicopee, where trials for those arrested at Westover are still being held, members of the anti-war movement distribute literature to and talk with Chicopee residents in an attempt to educate them about the war and the Westover situation.

On October 12 movement members will talk with inductees leaving for Springfield from Northampton.

Anti-war discussions and workshops are held each week at one or more of the five colleges.

Veterans' Notices

It is essential that veteran students who are eligible for educational benefits under the G.I. Bill and "War Orphan" students to re-enroll annually at registration on a V.A. form in order to insure continuation of these benefits.

If you have not yet re-enrolled with the Veterans' Office please do so at once. Our office is located in Room 239 Whitmore Administration Building.

The Certification of Attendance card (blue-green stripe across the top) for your last period of enrollment must be completed and returned to the Veterans Administration if you expect to receive education assistance for the current school year. (For most students this card will be received in the spring.)

If you have misplaced the card, contact the Veterans Administration. Report promptly any change in dependency or training status.

Senate Seats Open

Student Senate seats are still open in the following dorms: Dwight, Gorman, Mary Lyon, Chadbourne, Wheeler, Crabtree, and Field.

In Southwest, openings still remain in JQA upper and lower, Melville, Mackimmie, James, Crampton, Thoreau, Coolidge upper.

Two people are needed to fill the Sorority Senator seats also.

Nomination sheets may be picked up outside the Student Activities area on the first level of the Campus Center. They must be returned to the same place by 5 p.m., Friday, Oct. 20.

Elections for these spaces will be held on October 28.

All of the demonstrators at Westover use civil disobedience. "It is important to have a sense that you're not protesting against the police," said Matlack.

In Chicopee, where trials for those arrested at Westover are still being held, members of the anti-war movement distribute literature to and talk with Chicopee residents in an attempt to educate them about the war and the Westover situation.

On October 12 movement members will talk with inductees leaving for Springfield from Northampton.

Anti-war discussions and workshops are held each week at one or more of the five colleges.

Veterans' Notices

It is essential that veteran students who are eligible for educational benefits under the G.I. Bill and "War Orphan" students to re-enroll annually at registration on a V.A. form in order to insure continuation of these benefits.

If you have not yet re-enrolled with the Veterans' Office please do so at once. Our office is located in Room 239 Whitmore Administration Building.

The Certification of Attendance card (blue-green stripe across the top) for your last period of enrollment must be completed and returned to the Veterans Administration if you expect to receive education assistance for the current school year. (For most students this card will be received in the spring.)

If you have misplaced the card, contact the Veterans Administration. Report promptly any change in dependency or training status.

Anticipation

Great revelations, we have been told, will be made tomorrow morning at Framingham State College when Governor Francis Sargent makes a two-hour address before the Trustees of the state colleges and universities.

In this speech, according to one of his aides, Governor Sargent will be announcing some of his reforms he included in his greetings to students letter of September 19.

In that letter, Sargent said the time has come for "setting aside hoary pedagogical anachronisms and replacing them with institutions and courses of study that incorporate the very best and most innovative of modern educational thinking."

He also referred to the Carnegie Commission reports for "a series of far-reaching reforms". He said then that he will propose changes and in the structure and organization of higher education in order to reduce duplication, waste, and boredom.

Ever since then, many persons have felt impending doom approaching. Others have looked upon the whole affair as a step forward in higher education. Whatever, speculation has increased over the specific proposals the governor will make.

Tomorrow, a different aide said last week he will tell what he is for and against in higher education. Yesterday in Northampton Sargent refused to comment any further than to say the speech is still being worked out.

We anxiously await the words of the governor and hope that any feelings of impending doom will be swept away by his speech.

A Waste Of Time?

By DAN CARUSO

It's nice to see that the Student Senate is living up to its reputation, isn't it? After all, what could be more foolish than debating for an hour and a half over some petty thing like the appointments to the Athletic Council? What right does the Senate have to waste so much time on such trivia when there are so many important issues to consider?

So maybe the Senate doesn't have any real right for such foolishness, but it most certainly has a duty to those it represents to give these appointments the critical scrutiny they require. The Athletic Council is no small thing, since the athletic fee is a thorn in everyone's side, and the Senate has a mandate to be sure qualified, concerned people are appointed to it.

This brings about the whole question of trust. Should the Senate, without questions, trust the findings of its own appointed selection committee report and make its own judgement?

When the Senate debates the merits of the nominees, for no matter how long, it is not expressing a lack of confidence in the person or persons making the nominations. It is just recognizing the fact that, though the selection committee be conscientious, it is limited in its findings to the number and kind of people who chose to apply. The committee's nominees may have been the best qualified of those available at the time, but that doesn't necessarily mean that they are the best the campus has to offer.

Is an hour and a half of debate really so long when you consider how much longer an appointment to the Athletic Council, or any appointment for that matter, remains in effect?

It's a lot easier to let the Senate indulge in a little rhetoric than it is to tolerate a screwed-up Athletic Council for a year or more. Indeed, in retrospect, if the Student Senate had spent more time reviewing SUG Board appointments, it most likely would not have had a revise its consitution as extensively as it did.

As to the excessive use of parliamentary points, consider, once again, what the debate would have been like if the Senators had decided to dispense with parliamentary procedure. There is no doubt that the debate would have lasted much longer than it did, and those few appointments which were accepted might still be undecided. In spite of public opinion, Senators are only human, and reason and self-control are often strained after lenghy deliberation.

The right to dissent and disagree with another's judgement or opinion is not only a right guaranteed by the Constitution, it is a necessity if we are to make the University a more viable institution.

Blow For Freedom

Today, I am writing this article to attempt to strike a blow for academic freedom. It appears that all too often the students of this university become so paranoid of the administration that they are afraid to take a stand on those matters which really concern them.

I am not, however, attacking students for their laxity, but rather, I am attacking the College of Arts and Sciences (in which I am enrolled) for requiring that which students perceive to be a waste of time. I am referring to the language requirement, which dictates that anyone in the College of Arts and Sciences must attain a passing grade in some language course at the 140 level, if they have not previously taken four or five years of language in high school.

It seems to me that the apparent reason that these students (myself included) had not taken four years of language in high school was that either they didn't like it or they couldn't do well in it, so to force these same people to take language is equivalent to putting a fish on dry land and telling it to walk. In forcing a student to take a course, it must be assumed that that student will object to being forced and therefore dislike the course. Having already formed a negative judgement about this course, the student will probably not concentrate on the course, and therefore, the course will have been a hindrance, rather than a help, to his academic progress.

The argument in favor of this and all requirements is that they help to make the student a more well-rounded individual, and the mere possession of this storage of all-around knowledge will someday be useful to that student later in life. However, the language courses at this school up to the 140 level, especially those rounded-off courses (for instance; 120, 130, 140), do not teach you anything about language except how to pass the language requirement, which would not be necessary where there no language requirement. As I experienced the other day in my French 130 exam, what is on the tests bears little or no resemblance to what is taught in class, for departmental exams leave no consideration for the fact that some classes are faster than others as are some students quicker to learn than others.

If being a well-rounded individual is being able to say:

Je parle	nous parlons
tu parles	vous parlez
il parle	ils parlent
elle parle	elles parlent

then the language requirement has succeeded. In that case, however, I, myself, would prefer not to be well-rounded.

Requirements are created because the university is afraid that if certain courses were not required, then nobody would take those courses. This deters from making the courses more appealing to students (which would be the logical alternative) because the departments feel that the students will take them anyway, no matter how bland the courses may be, to fulfill certain requirements. Required courses, therefore, act as a substitute for departmental initiative, and both the students and the teachers wind up being tremendously bored and uninterested with the course. This, then, appears to be more of a deterrent to education and academic accomplishment than anything else.

I'm certain that my words will go unheeded unless those that agree with me (and I'm sure there are many) get up and do something about it. One person alone can do nothing but speak. Ten people together can organize, one hundred people can request change, and one thousand people can demand it. If there are truly one-thousand people on this university who are opposed to the language requirement and required courses as a whole, (which I am certain there are) then let us demand change. Let us demand that those teachers who agree with us stand up and register their protests. Let us group together with the rest of our required class and voice our opinions, and let us see if the students really do have some control over the academic workings of their university.

VALUES TO CHOOSE BY IN 1972

The fate of men and nations is determined by the values which govern their decisions.

(2) In 1972 let us choose Truth as the keystone of society.

Attitudes of selfishness and separateness lead inevitably to a distortion and a denial of truth. A society so blinded degenerates into dishonesty, corruption and cynicism.

Mankind has developed the tendency to take and not to give, to grasp and not to share. But the human race is one and the world is interdependent in fact. So the condition of dishonesty and corruption in some eventually weakens the whole fabric of society and all suffer.

Basic to all truth is the fact of the one humanity. Honesty and fair dealing must result from the realization that in cheating another we cheat ourselves; sharing with others increases the general well being and enriches the quality of all life.

Let us seek for those who fearlessly support the truth and act on principle instead of expediency.

Serving the Truth is a value to live by.

Jim Lavrakas

Jim Nardelli and Friends double check equipment before a flight; is the excitement due to "the terror" of it all?

Those Daring Young Men and Their Amazing Umbrellas

By Jim Lavrakas

The most fantastic experience imaginable has to be the sensation of weightlessness. Feeling free of the earth's pull and rising into the air is such an awesome sensation that there are just not enough adjectives in the English language to describe the experience satisfactorily.

It has been said, with such off hand indifference, that Man has always wanted to fly. He has wanted to feel the wind rushing across his back, so they say, and has craved to be a loft under his own power. These statements have usually been made in a detached manner, and for so long, that most people who have not experienced the sensation of unprotected "free" flight have accepted these irritating statements as verity. They have accepted them without attempting to prove or disprove them, even in a subjective fashion.

Two weekends ago I got the chance to find out for myself when I accepted an invitation from a friend to go parasailing. This newly developed sport (so new the word has been coined) lets the flier experience the most fantastic of sensations, weightlessness. It tricks the flier into believing that he is winging it under his own steam.

I took the invitation to fly from a friend, Jim Nardelli, from the second floor of JFK Tower. Jim is one of the originators of the sport. He and a friend came out of the Air Force three years about with six or seven parachutes. They were stationed in Alaska at the time and since his discharge Jim has resided in Girdwood, Alaska when not here at school.

Jim and his friends are ski fanatics. Yet, even in Alaska the ski areas close down for the summer season. The fellows had to come up with another sport with some excitement to it to wile away the leasure hours. They developed the sport of parasailing, dragging a parachute and chutest behind a towing vehicle. The sport is less dangerous, than skiing. Jim says that learning the sport from scratch was a shakey business and ended many times with a flier running into trees and other obstructions not seriously accounted for beforehand. Jim has grown with the sport from it's birth, and, has himself, suffered the growing pains.

The basics of the sport are quickly enumerated. The victim is strapped into a regular parachute harness. Two straps come over the shoulders. Each strap restricts the movement of the two main risers on each shoulder, and also, come together in front of the flier and are clipped to the towing rope. The towing rope is therefore, indirectly attached to the chute. The flier is suspended between a number of forces. When all looks in readiness, two fellows open up the chute and fill it with air. The wind should be running directly into the chute. When the chute is filled the driver moves the truck forward. As soon as the rope is taut and pulling the chute the chute resists forward motion and moves back and up.

The chute has been modified to take off from the ground and to climb quickly. All the flier has to do is to keep his feet underneath him. It is at this point that the flier can begin to imagine the sensation of weightlessness. Contact with the ground becomes lighter and lighter. The flier should not try to jump in the air to help take off. Most of the time the chute is not ready to go up, and the flier comes back down on his feet, loses balance and gets dragged across the field, as an added bonus.

I could hear the whole club of people "

Woman's Notes
Fatales And Boy Wonders In Need

By Shelley Bakst

Women In Need

James Trussell Jr.
Robert A. Hatcher, M.D.
The Macmillian Company, New York 1972

Approximately 20% of all the babies born in the United States are unwanted at the time of birth. It is to this atrocity that Women In Need calls our attention.

The name of the book holds no honors in comparison to the titles of two of it's shelved brothers: HogMeat and Hoecake and Microstudies in Community Development and Pan Chayati Rah and Cooperation. However, the book does have merits and they lie in its message and style where they belong. (sorry you femmes fatales and boy wonders, no pretty pictures)

The foods for thought In Women In Need concern themselves with sex education, birth control and overpopulation. These topics are not unique in the medium of literature, nor are they in any of the mass media. Is this then just another book on sex? Not so. The topics covered by Trussell and Hatcher are presented in a concise, well documented, and easily comprehended manner. But don't be fooled by the facility of the style as the messages of the authors are real and must be confronted by both sexes. Men are in need too.

The book is not "for women only" as the poor title would have all believe. The plight of the five characters and their case histories are representative of the problems of thousands. Apathy (alas, here too) is the villian.

The format of Women In Need is perhaps what sets the book apart for the others dealing in the same subject. There are five chapters each including a case history concerning the chapter topic, a documented discussion of that topic, and practical questions which are designed to activate the reader into learning what he can do to alleviate the crisis of overpopulation.

Women In Need relates to the reader many interesting and comprehensive surveys. One, students in particular may find worthwhile.

The survey on coed sexual activity was conducted at Oberlin College in 1967 as a part of a general survey on health. Check the date. The question asked was, "Have you ever engaged in sexual intercourse?" Of the 1,349 unmarried women who answered the survey, 474 admitted that they had. Percentages were as high as 53.1 in the senior class and as low as 20.6 percent in the incoming freshman class.

Trussel and Hatcher believe that there are several reasons for the belief that the rates of premarital intercourse have increased. Today there are over 200 million whereas fifty years ago there were about half that many. When more people do the same thing, it seems that the percentage of the people involved in the given activity has also increased. Secondly, sex is more openly discussed. Thirdly, people now enter sexual relationships by different standards. Lastly, there is the revolution in the sexual role to consider.

Other interesting surveys which have been recently taken indicate that the increased availability of contraception does not lead to increased premarital sexual intercourse. The 20's could not boast the effective contraception, sterilization, or the more liberalized abortion laws that are available today (rah modern scicnce rah social revolution). Yet those were the days my friends that, according to research, a major rise in the percentage of nonvirginity took place.

Have you been laboring under the false illusion that the concept of birth control clinics is new? If so, let Women In Need turn you on to the fact that the first clinic in the United States was opened in 1916. Ten days later, Margaret Sanger, its founder, was arrested and sentenced to thirty days in jail.

Did you know that in the most recent Harris poll, 41% of those asked believe that abortion is murder, 48% believe that it is not murder and 11% are unsure. (perhaps more indication of apathy??)

In the chapters discussing contraception, sterilization and abortion, each method is described in detail. This includes the use of the method, its availability, precise costs, advantages and disadvantages of each.

Trussell and Hatcher do not coldly state the uses only. They present the known alternatives, the research and surveys done in their effective qualities, and how and when the methods will be improved upon in the future. Also given is the legal position and the public view. Often, as the book points out, public opinion is what reforms the legal facts.

There are people who truly believe that the United States is still sparsely settled, that a strong economy depends upon a growing labor force, and that our natural resources will last forever. (oh, dream on!) They do not see overpopulation as a crisis.

The last chapter of the book is, appropriately called, "An Epidemic of Unwanted Babies." It is within this last chapter that you realize that the authors have made things simple. They have given you the knowledge and the answers. But suddenly they belt you in the gut with the ultimate: "Is quantity of life or quality of life which we should pursue?"

And finally:

> That which is maximal is not always optimal. . . The ideal population size is that which allows the highest standard of living in terms of the quality of life of the average citizen. The population of the United States can continue to grow regardless of whether or not growth enhances the quality of life of the individual–but it cannot continue to grow forever. (p.126)

Poor Richard's

Vol. II number five

Co edited by Bob Nesti and Ken Sulin

This week's staff:
Shelley Bakst, Jim Lavrakas, Howard Bloom, Steve Ferber, Reid Fishman, Ed Bryant, Carl Greenburg, Frank Johnson, Don Glickstein, Mike Kostek, Jeff Clayton, Rich Bean, Steve Feld and Katrina Zukel.

Poor Richard's is the weekly magazine of the MDC. Contributions and comments may be delivered to the MDC office.

What's Inside

For those of you who are the curious, the column on your left was a bastard to typeset and a bitch to copy edit and if Jeff Clayton were a gentleman, he'd send a bouquet to the hardworking girls in the Palmer Print Shop and place a public apology here for ever having conceived it in the first place. Since the issue has nowhere to go but up, look above and find a book review in this week's "Woman's Notes". Opposite this page is a guide to which State Reps to vote for this November. On page twelve are the reasons why Richard Nixon is not the best possible choice for a second term. On page thirteen is an analysis of how a superstar boosted the ailing McGovern campaign here in the Connecticut Valley. Shirley MacLaine was articulate, but why did she come? Books reviewed are "The Summer Game", and Philip Roth's latest (and shortest) "The Breast", both on page fifteen. How to deal with wine dealers on page sixteen. Page seventeen is an interview with Oswald Tippo by Don Glickstein. Albums reviewed include the latest by Rod Stewart, Elton John, and Harry Nillson, plus a look at last year's disastrous Rock Festival, now an album, Mar-Y-Sol. On pages eighteen and nineteen, a background look at Fellini Satyricon and a swipe at The Ruling Class fill our Film pages, twenty and twenty-one. What's up on the tube on twenty-two. The Philadelphia Orchestra, on campus next week, are on page twenty-three, and Weekend at the back.

The Tin Woodman, indignant at the poor girl's plight, proposes to conquer King Krewl and make Gloria Queen.

State Reps-The Cream Of Their Crop

By Howard Bloom
and Steve Ferber

Now, if you've been following the op-ed page we've already got your head straight as far as the Presidential election goes. Yet there is more than one election being held on November 7th. Of particular interest are the races for State Representative here in Massachusetts. Becuase of the paucity of information available to most of us, about the incumbent State Reps, we have compiled a list of the men running for re-election who have been found to be the most competent legislators. This study was put together by Leslie Arden of Boston Magazine. From her critiques we have selected those representatives who we think deserve another term in office.

Of course not everyone got gold stars. So first we'll tickle your funny bone with the ratings of some of the weaker men in the House. Then we'll tell you who the best representatives are and why they merit re-election.

MALDEN-William R. Callahan (D). And old-time pol (14 years on the City Council) whose IQ is the subject of occasional unflattering comments in the corridors of the State House. Callahan is a chronic parade and wake-goer, and hits three different masses every Sunday morning. He's such a lightweight he'd float away if he didn't have rocks in his pockets. Easily the most dispensible member of the legislature.

REVERE-Joseph Del Grosso (D). At 67, Del Grosso is completely out of it. He never says a word or does a thing.

BOSTON-Francis X. Coppinger (D). Coppinger sits in his seat day after day, but still doesn't know what's going on. He's big on constituent service, but couldn't care less about important issues. Coppinger is a total zero.

BOSTON-Francis K. Dwyer (D). Dwyer is proof that one need not be old to be a poor legislator. At 27, he has absolutely no sense of why he's in the House or of what he wants to do there. He used to teach school, and maybe he did a better job at that.

ABINGTON-John Buckley (D). If everyone in Massachusetts got the job he or she was qualified for, Frank Sargent would be back selling fishing tackle and Jack Buckley would be governor. As chairman of the Public Service Committee, much of Buckley's work is done very quietly, but he is one of the most effective House liberals. He was the floor leader of the House cut drive in 1969 and is among the best legislators on the Hill.

ACTON-Chester G. Atkins (D). The youngest member of the legislature, Atkins is a comer. He has become very knowledgeable in the area of correctional reform and has led the fight for abolition of the medieval county training schools. Chet is bright, hard-working and totally independent. He maintains constituent contact with an excellent newsletter.

BROCKTON-Robert S. Creedon (D), Creedon entered the House in 1969 as a flaming liberal, but seems to be cooling off a little as his race for the State Senate heats up. Nonetheless, he is gutsy, a bit of an iconoclast, and retains a good measure of the anti-establishment feeling he came in with. He is a lawyer and has worked especially hard on issues related to land use and zoning-unglamorous but important problem areas.

BROCKTON-Paul M. Murphy (D). Murphy is a bright guy who tends to vote with the liberals, but knows how to play the game. He maintains a thriving law practice, and seems to keep his clients in mind when it counts. He is very effective when it comes to getting favors from the leadership.

BURLINGTON-Robert A. Vigneau (D). Vigneau, the archetypal moderate, is quiet, very conscientious and hard-working. He is one of a group of Reps who keeps the Local Affairs Committee on the level. Also a former Selectman.

HINGHAM-William J. Spence (D). Spence is a reasonably bright moderate-to-liberal Rep who generally votes his conscience. He is not active in any special area, but he tends to be turned on by certain problems that he will follow year after year, like the top-heavy budget of the State House's Sergeant-at-Arms office and union feather-bedding on the MBTA.

LYNN-James E. Smith (D). Smith is one of the legislature's most outstanding freshmen. A member of the State Administration Committee, he has devoted his first term to making life miserable for the Port Authority and the supporters of a highway which would run through his district. He is bright, able and energetic. His workday is longer than some Reps' workweek. In a rare act of political self-denial, he stepped aside for his colleague from Lynn, James Carrigan, when a State Senate seat was vacated, rather than split the liberal vote and help elect a conservative. He's a man to watch.

METHUEN-Nicholas J. Buglione (D). Buglione is hardworking and quite capable. He spends much of his time working on issues related to education. He's the best of a decidedly undistinguished lot of Lawrence area legislators.

NORWELL-Roger Sumner Babb (R). Babb is an attorney who, like some other legislators, is serving in the House at a considerable financial sacrifice to himself. He is capable, hardworking, progressive and totally frustrated because of his party.

NORWOOD-David C. Ahearn (D). Ahearn is a genuine and staunch liberal who can always be counted on to come through on a tough vote. He is independent and does not bend to pressure. He would make a fine State Senator, an office he is now running for. Ahearn has been particularly active in the area of lobbyist controls and regulation of political campaigns.

PEABODY-John Ed. Murphy (D). Murphy comes from a strong political family (his father was a judge) and is a lawyer. He tends to vote liberal, and is very much his own man.

SCITUATE-George C. Young (R). Young is a capable Rep who is boxed at the State House because of his party. He is prominent back home and spends time working on educational issues.

SHARON-Robert S. Aronson (R). Aronson could not be described as a liberal, but he is tough and outspoken. He is a successful businessman, and a very on-the-level legislator. During this year's abortion debate, he proposed that the issue be put to the people as a referendum, a proposal that made enough sense to be soundly defeated.

WAYLAND-Ann C. Gannett (R). By far the best of the five female legislators, Mrs. Gannett is the only one of the five whose voting record shows any concern for women. She is rather liberal, and active in the League of Women Voters and other pro-women groups. She's big in Republican circles.

ARLINGTON-Edward J. Dever, Jr. (D). As chairman of the Insurance Committee, Dever has developed a competency in that area. He is close to the leadership, but works hard and seems to be gradually improving his undistinguished voting record.

BOSTON-Michael F. Flaherty (D). As House chairman of the Special Drug Commission last year, Flaherty was partly responsible for the enlightened legislation that came out of that panel. He is a former insurance adjuster who has close ties to the leadership. He is hard-working, and loves to talk.

BROOKLINE-John A. Businger (D). Businger is a young, earnest and hardworking legislator who has specialized in electoral affairs since his election in 1970. Some of his colleagues wonder if he's really all there, but he is bright and he does his homework. He served as an aide to the late Representative H. James Shea of Newton. He is very responsive to Citizens for Participation Politics, some of whose members working in his campaign.

CAMBRIDGE-Charles F. Flaherty, Jr. (D). Flaherty, the newly named Democratic State Chairman, keeps one foot in the liberal camp (he was the leader of the initiative petition drive to free highway funds for mass transit) and one foot in the "Establishment" camp (he opposed the House cut in 1969). He is very ambitious, does his homework, and is always well prepared. He is a loner in the legislature and the owner of a considerable ego. Presently chairman of the Committee on Counties.

MALDEN-David S. Liederman (D). Liederman is a former social worker who teaches social work at BU. He is a leader in the field of social welfare legislation and is the author of the most sweeping housing reforms enacted into Massachusetts law in decades. Although he is very progressive, he is able to get along with the powers that be in the House. Despite impressive qualifications-or perhaps because of them-he was passed over for the Communities & Development slot in Governor Sargent's cabinet. Liederman is a hardworker and a genuine polulist, one of the most outstanding members of the legislature.

NEWTON-Paul H. Guzzi (D). A freshman with good potential, Buzzi works hard and is reasonably bright. He is a former teacher and is interested in election laws. He offered a sensible compromise bill during last year's fight for a new Presidential primary law, but nobody paid him much attention.

NEWTON-David J. Mofenson (D). Another young freshman, bright and hardworking, who has some potential. He is a lawyer, but hasn't found his field of interest in the legislature yet.

WELLESLEY-Bruce H. Zeiser (R). Zeiser is sincere, dedicated, competent and rather liberal, especially on housing issues. A lawyer, he stood up for the anti-snob zoning bill when some of his suburban colleagues were hiding under their desks.

Woman's Notes
Fatales And Boy Wonders In Need

By Shelley Bakst

Women In Need

James Trussell Jr.
Robert A. Hatcher, M.D.
The Macmillian Company, New York 1972

Approximately 20% of all the babies born in the United States are unwanted at the time of birth. It is to this atrocity that Women In Need calls our attention.

The name of the book holds no honors in comparison to the titles of two of it's shelved brothers: HogMeat and Hoecake and Microstudies in Community Development and Pan Chayati Rah and Cooperation. However, the book does have merits and they lie in its message and style where they belong. (sorry you femmes fatales and boy wonders, no pretty pictures)

The foods for thought In Women In Need concern themselves with sex education, birth control and overpopulation. These topics are not unique in the medium of literature, nor are they in any of the mass media. Is this then just another book on sex? Not so. The topics covered by Trussell and Hatcher are presented in a concise, well documented, and easily comprehended manner. But don't be fooled by the facility of the style as the messages of the authors are real and must be confronted by both sexes. Men are in need too.

The book is not "for women only" as the poor title would have all believe. The plight of the five characters and their case histories are representative of the problems of thousands. Apathy (alas, here too) is the villian.

The format of Women In Need is perhaps what sets the book apart for the others dealing in the same subject. There are five chapters each including a case history concerning the chapter topic, a documented discussion of that topic, and practical questions which are designed to activate the reader into learning what he can do to alleviate the crisis of overpopulation.

Women In Need relates to the reader many interesting and comprehensive surveys. One, students in particular may find worthwhile.

The survey on coed sexual activity was conducted at Oberlin College in 1967 as a part of a general survey on health. Check the date. The question asked was, "Have you ever engaged in sexual intercourse?" Of the 1,349 unmarried women who answered the survey, 474 admitted that they had. Percentages were as high as 53.1 in the senior class and as low as 20.6 percent in the incoming freshman class.

Trussel and Hatcher believe that there are several reasons for the belief that the rates of premarital intercourse have increased. Today there are over 200 million whereas fifty years ago there were about half that many. When more people do the same thing, it seems that the percentage of the people involved in the given activity has also increased. Secondly, sex is more openly discussed. Thirdly, people now enter sexual relationships by different standards. Lastly, there is the revolution in the sexual role to consider.

Other interesting surveys which have been recently taken indicate that the increased availability of contraception does not lead to increased premarital sexual intercourse. The 20's could not boast the effective contraception, sterilization, or the more liberalized abortion laws that are available today (rah modern science rah social revolution). Yet those were the days my friends that, according to research, a major rise in the percentage of nonvirginity took place.

Have you been laboring under the false illusion that the concept of birth control clinics is new? If so, let Women In Need turn you on to the fact that the first clinic in the United States was opened in 1916. Ten days later, Margaret Sanger, its founder, was arrested and sentenced to thirty days in jail.

Did you know that in the most recent Harris poll, 41% of those asked believe that abortion is murder, 48% believe that it is not murder and 11% are unsure. (perhaps more indication of apathy??)

In the chapters discussing contraception, sterilization and abortion, each method is described in detail. This includes the use of the method, its availability, precise costs, advantages and disadvantages of each.

Trussell and Hatcher do not coldly state the uses only. They present the known alternatives, the research and surveys done in their effective qualities, and how and when the methods will be improved upon in the future. Also given is the legal position and the public view. Often, as the book points out, public opinion is what reforms the legal facts.

There are people who truly believe that the United States is still sparsely settled, that a strong economy depends upon a growing labor force, and that our natural resources will last forever. (oh, dream on!) They do not see overpopulation as a crisis.

The last chapter of the book is appropriately called, "An Epidemic of Unwanted Babies." It is within this last chapter that you realize that the authors have made things simple. They have given you the knowledge and the answers. But suddenly they belt you in the gut with the ultimate: "Is quantity of life or quality of life which we should pursue?"

And finally:

> That which is maximal is not always optimal. . . The ideal population size is that which allows the highest standard of living in terms of the quality of life of the average citizen. The population of the United States can continue to grow regardless of whether or not growth enhances the quality of life of the individual–but it cannot continue to grow forever. (p.126)

Poor Richard's

Vol. II number five

This week's staff:
Shelley Bakst, Jim Lavrakas, Howard Bloom, Steve Ferber, Reid Fishman, Ed Bryant, Carl Greenburg, Frank Johnson, Don Glickstein, Mike Kostek, Jeff Clayton, Rich Bean, Steve Feld and Katrina Zukel.

Poor Richard's is the weekly magazine of the MDC. Contributions and comments may be delivered to the MDC office.

What's Inside

For those of you who are the curious, the column on your left was a bastard to typeset and a bitch to copy edit and if Jeff Clayton were a gentleman, he'd send a bouquet to the hardworking girls in the Palmer Print Shop and place a public apology here for ever having conceived it in the first place. Since the issue has nowhere to go but up, look above and find a book review in this week's "Woman's Notes". Opposite this page is a guide to which State Reps to vote for this November. On page twelve are the reasons why Richard Nixon is not the best possible choice for a second term. On page thirteen is an analysis of how a superstar boosted the ailing McGovern campaign here in the Connecticut Valley. Shirley MacLaine was articulate, but why did she come? Books reviewed are "The Summer Game", and Philip Roth's latest (and shortest) "The Breast", both on page fifteen. How to deal with wine dealers on page sixteen. Page seventeen is an interview with Oswald Tippo by Don Glickstein. Albums reviewed include the latest by Rod Stewart, Elton John, and Harry Nillson, plus a look at last year's disastrous Rock Festival, now an album, Mar-Y-Sol. On pages eighteen and nineteen, a background look at Fellini Satyricon and a swipe at The Ruling Class fill our Film pages, twenty and twenty-one. What's up on the tube on twenty-two. The Philadelphia Orchestra, on campus next week, are on page twenty-three, and Weekend at the back.

The Tin Woodman, indignant at the poor girl's plight, proposes to conquer King Krewl and make Gloria Queen.

State Reps-The Cream Of Their Crop

By Howard Bloom

Now, if you've been following the op-ed page we've already got your head straight as far as the Presidential election goes. Yet there is more than one election being held on November 7th. Of particular interest are the races for State Representative here in Massachusetts. Becuase of the paucity of information available to most of us, about the incumbent State Reps, we have compiled a list of the men running for re-election who have been found to be the most competent legislators. This study was put together by Leslie Arden of Boston Magazine. From her critiques we have selected those representatives who we think deserve another term in office.

Of course not everyone got gold stars. So first we'll tickle your funny bone with the ratings of some of the weaker men in the House. Then we'll tell you who the best representatives are and why they merit re-election.

MALDEN-William R. Callahan (D). And old-time pol (14 years on the City Council) whose IQ is the subject of occasional unflattering comments in the corridors of the State House. Callahan is a chronic parade and wake-goer, and hits three different masses every Sunday morning. He's such a lightweight he'd float away if he didn't have rocks in his pockets. Easily the most dispensible member of the legislature.

REVERE-Joseph Del Grosso (D). At 67, Del Grosso is completely out of it. He never says a word or does a thing.

BOSTON-Francis X. Coppinger (D). Coppinger sits in his seat day after day, but still doesn't know what's going on. He's big on constituent service, but couldn't care less about important issues. Coppinger is a total zero.

BOSTON-Francis K. Dwyer (D). Dwyer is proof that one need not be old to be a poor legislator. At 27, he has absolutely no sense of why he's in the House or of what he wants to do there. He used to teach school, and maybe he did a better job at that.

ABINGTON-John Buckley (D). If everyone in Massachusetts got the job he or she was qualified for, Frank Sargent would be back selling fishing tackle and Jack Buckley would be governor. As chairman of the Public Service Committee, much of Buckley's work is done very quietly, but he is one of a group of Reps who keeps the Local Affairs Committee on the level. Also a former Selectman.

HINGHAM-William J. Spence (D). Spence is a reasonably bright moderate-to-liberal Rep who generally votes his conscience. He is not active in any special area, but he tends to be turned on by certain problems that he will follow year after year, like the top-heavy budget of the State House's Sergeant-at-Arms office and union feather-bedding on the MBTA.

LYNN-James E. Smith (D). Smith is one of the legislature's most outstanding freshmen. A member of the State Administration Committee, he has devoted his first term to making life miserable for the Port Authority and the supporters of a highway which would run through his district. He is bright, able and energetic. His workday is longer than some Reps' workweek. In a rare act of political self-denial, he stepped aside for his colleague from Lynn, James Carrigan, when a State Senate seat was vacated, rather than split the liberal vote and help elect a conservative. He's a man to watch.

METHUEN-Nicholas J. Buglione (D). Buglione is hardworking and quite capable. He spends much of his time working on issues related to education. He's the best of a decidedly undistinguished lot of Lawrence area legislators.

NORWELL-Roger Sumner Babb (R). Babb is an attorney who, like some other legislators, is serving in the House at a considerable financial sacrifice to himself. He is capable, hardworking, progressive and totally frustrated because of his party.

NORWOOD-David C. Ahearn (D). Ahearn is a genuine and staunch liberal who can always be counted on to come through on a tough vote. He is independent and does not bend to pressure. He would make a fine State Senator, an office he is now running for. Ahearn has been particularly active in the area of lobbyist controls and regulation of political campaigns.

PEABODY-John Ed. Murphy (D). Murphy comes from a strong political family (his father was a judge) and is a lawyer. He tends to vote liberal, and is very much his own man.

SCITUATE-George C. Young (R). Young is a capable Rep who is boxed at the State House because of his party. He is prominent back home and spends time working on educational issues.

SHARON-Robert S. Aronson (R). Aronson could not be described as a liberal, but he is tough and outspoken. He is a successful businessman, and a very on-the-level legislator. During this year's abortion debate, he proposed that the issue be put to the people as a referendum, a proposal that made enough sense to be soundly defeated.

WAYLAND-Ann C. Gannett (R). By far the best of the five female legislators, Mrs. Gannett is the only one of the five whose voting record shows any concern for women. She is rather liberal, and active in the League of Women Voters and other pro-women groups. She's big in Republican circles.

ARLINGTON-Edward J. Dever, Jr. (D). As chairman of the Insurance Committee, Dever has developed a competency in that area. He is close to the leadership, but works hard and seems to be gradually improving his undistinguished voting record.

BOSTON-Michael F. Flaherty (D). As House chairman of the Special Drug Commission last year, Flaherty was partly responsible for the enlightened legislation that came out of that panel. He is a former insurance adjuster who has close ties to the leadership. He is hard-working, and loves to talk.

BROOKLINE-John A. Businger (D). Businger is a young, earnest and hardworking legislator who has specialized in electoral affairs since his election in 1970. Some of his colleagues wonder if he's really all there, but he is bright and he does his homework. He served as an aide to the late Representative H. James Shea of Newton. He is very responsive to Citizens for Participation Politics, some of whose members working in his campaign.

CAMBRIDGE-Charles F. Flaherty, Jr. (D). Flaherty, the newly named Democratic State Chairman, keeps one foot in the liberal camp (he was the leader of the initiative petition drive to free highway funds for mass transit) and one foot in the "Establishment" camp (he opposed the House cut in 1969). He is very ambitious, does his homework, and is always well prepared. He is a loner in the legislature and the owner of a considerable ego. Presently chairman of the Committee on Counties.

MALDEN-David S. Liederman (D). Liederman is a former social worker who teaches social work at BU. He is a leader in the field of social welfare legislation and is the author of the most sweeping housing reforms enacted into Massachusetts law in decades. Although he is very progressive, he is able to get along with the powers that be in the House. Despite impressive qualifications-or perhaps because of them-he was passed over for the Communities & Development slot in Governor Sargent's cabinet. Liederman is a hardworker and a genuine polulist, one of the most outstanding members of the legislature.

NEWTON-Paul H. Guzzi (D). A freshman with good potential, Buzzi works hard and is reasonably bright. He is a former teacher and is interested in election laws. He offered a sensible compromise bill during last year's fight for a new Presidential primary law, but nobody paid him much attention.

NEWTON-David J. Mofenson (D). Another young freshman, bright and hardworking, who has some potential. He is a lawyer, but hasn't found his field of interest in the legislature yet.

WELLESLEY-Bruce H. Zeiser (R). Zeiser is sincere, dedicated, conpetent and rather liberal, especially on housing issues. A lawyer, he stood up for the anti-snob zoning bill when some of his suburban colleagues were hiding under their desks.

BROCKTON-Paul M. Murphy (D). Murphy is a bright guy who tends to vote with the liberals, but knows how to play the game. He maintains a thriving law practice, and seems to keep his clients in mind when it counts. He is very effective when it comes to getting favors from the leadership.

BURLINGTON-Robert A. Vigneau (D). Vigneau, the archetypal moderate, is quiet, very conscientious and hardworking. He is one of a group of Reps who keeps the Local Af-

He was the floor leader of the House cut drive in 1969 and is among the best legislators on the Hill.

ACTON-Chester G. Atkins (D). The youngest member of the legislature, Atkins is a comer. He has become very knowledgeable in the area of correctional reform and has led the fight for abolition of the medieval county training schools. Chet is bright, hard-working and totally independent. He maintains constituent contact with an excellent newsletter.

BROCKTON-Robert S. Creedon (D), Creedon entered the House in 1969 as a flaming liberal, but seems to be cooling off a little as his race for the State Senate heats up. Nonetheless, he is gutsy, a bit of an iconoclast, and retains a good measure of the anti-establishment feeling he came in with. He is a lawyer and has worked especially hard on issues related to land use and Don't Like George? Well, Remember Dick?

By Reid Fishman

"Those who have had a chance for four years and could not produce peace should not be given another chance." These immortal and somewhat prophetic words were spoken on October 9, 1968, by the man who was destined to become the next President of the United States of America, Richard Millhouse Nixon. Here I shall attempt to point out some of the more apparent mistakes and ambiguities of the Nixon administration, and examine the policies and prospects of the McGovern campaign.

First, to examine the Nixon administration, we must go back to the beginning of 1969, when a former loser and a household word ascended to the two highest positions in the land. It was on February 6 of that year that Richard Nixon made the statement: "I do not want an American boy to be in Vietnam for one day longer than is necessary for our national interest." However, as is apparent, many more were forced to endure the cruelties of the Vietnam War for many more than one day.

On October 3 of that same year, the president was asked by a number of prominent anti-war Senators of both parties (one of which was Senator George McGovern) to commit himself to a definite withdrawal schedule. One month later, in a speech to the nation about Vietnam, he said, "I have not and do not intend to announce the timetable of our program." It seems rather unusual that a president won't tell the citizens of his own country what he plans to do with thousands of their lives.

However, along with Nixon's gradual plan of withdrawal came a gradual increase in monetary and logistical support, a support which has increased to the point that there are now 162 B-52 Bombers in Vietnam. Furthermore despite the claim that there are only 39,000 American combat troops still in Vietnam, there are also 150,000 Naval troops still in and around Vietnam, not to mention those troops in Laos and Cambodia.

During the Nixon administration, we have seen such momentous events as the invasions of Laos and Cambodia, and the My Lai massacre. It is a fact that there has been more tonnage of bombs dropped on North Vietnam during the Nixon administration than was dropped in all of World War II. If the president's idea of an "honorable" settlement to the Vietnam War is to bomb the hell out of the country, than he has succeeded. In that case, one can ask what makes our crimes any better than those involving the Nazi concentration camps during World War II, for we too are trying to exterminate a group of people. Who will be to blame when the dikes collapse and drown millions of innocent women and children during the course of an undeclared war? Those who claim that the Vietnam War is no longer an issue had better look around again.

However, the war in Vietnam is far from Nixon's only mistake. The president, during the course of his economic policy made continual blunders, starting with Phase I, which put millions of Americans out of work. If you ask some economists, they will tell you that this is sometimes a good way of ending inflation, but if you ask the man or woman that's hungry and out of work, he or she will tell you differently.

Then there was Phase II. Never before has so little done so much for so few. I am referring to the wage and price freeze, in which the former was enforced and the latter was forgotten. During this freeze, the people were not allowed to increase their incomes, but the corporations were rarely stopped from raising their prices. However, even in theory this plan was not acceptable, for if the people aren't making any more money, then where are all the profits going? You guessed it—— to Tricky Dick's old buddies, the major corporations. Most economists will tell you that a true wage and price freeze also calls for a freeze on corporate profits. I wonder why this was missing from Phase II.

However, let us not forget Richard Nixon's startling attempts at defacing justice in this country with the attempted appointments of Haynsworth and Carswell to the Supreme Court —— two attempts that were so distasteful to the ideas of liberty and freedom that even the simple approval of the Senate, which is usually only a formality, was not achieved. Let us not also forget his stand in favor of wiretapping, a technique antithical to any semblance of freedom and privacy. This was exemplified by his appointment of William H. Rehnquist to the court. It appears as though the progressive reforms of the Warren court will now be but a thing of the past.

However, the president's interference with justice came to a head in the case of the My Lai massacre. On February 6, 1969, Richard Nixon said, "That's why I'm going to do everything... to see that all the facts in this incident (referring to the My Lai massacre) are brought to light and that those who are charged, if they are found guilty, are punished!" It was this same man that later allowed a convicted murderer to return to his bachelor quarters and promised to review the case.

Whether or not Lt. William Calley was guilty is not in question here. What is in question is the right of the executive to interfere with the judicial process in order to curb public opinion. In this case, we lose all semblance of the "checks and balances" system on which our country was built. If this act is to be deemed "kosher", then where was Nixon during the Angela Davis case?

Further examining the Nixon administration record, it is astonishing to find the President's blatantly racist attempts to halt the execution of busing. How a person can say that he is for equal education and then oppose the concept of busing seems rather unusual. Busing to achieve racial balance is wrong, but one must realize that the only way to make white upper-middle class Americans take heed to the serious lack of education in the ghettos is by putting their children in the same boat. Then maybe we'll see the money to improve those schools.

However, we must not disregard sexism. When asked at a press conference on February 6, 1969, about the fact that there were only 3 women out of 200 appointees within his first month of office, President Nixon, with his tremendous sense of humor, replied to the female correspondent, "Would you be interested in coming into the government?"

These are just a few of the apparent contradictions of the Nixon administration. To discuss all of its faults would employ more space than is allowed for this article (or, in fact, for the entire magazine), so we therefore must turn to the policies and prospects of the Senator from South Dakota George Stanley McGovern.

Senator McGovern's campaign has been plagued by accusations of inconsistency. However, these accusations are generally baseless and thin. In fact, George McGovern has been known throughout his Senate career as one of the most consistent, both in his viewpoints and his voting record.

His opposition to the Vietnam War, for example, is far from new-founded. On September 24, 1963, Senator McGovern said, "The current dilemma in Vietnam is a clear demonstration of the limitations of military power. Our policy there is a policy of moral debacle and military defeat." This speech was the first ever given on the Senate floor in opposition to the War in Vietnam, and it would be some time before it was matched. Throughout his Senate record, he never voted for one military appropriations bill directly aimed at escalating the Vietnam War.

Many people attack his economic policies as being inconsistent. However, this could not be farther from the truth. In fact, it was back in 1963, that Senator McGovern first introduced the "Economic Conversion Act", which is the policy he still advocates. In affect, this policy would cut the military budget by approximately 30 billion dollars, which would be used for more serious domestic problems here at home. For instance, if you were to take 3 billion of the total 30 billion, you could build a million-dollar enterprise (school house, health care center, day care center, etc.) in each of the three thousand counties of this country. This would still leave $27 billion to be used on other programs such as ending hunger or stopping racial inequality. These projects and programs would then be a prime source of employment, and the building of these enterprises would then provide for the transition from an economy based on destruction to one based on construction.

Further federal income would come from tax reforms which would eliminate all tax loopholes and lessen the tax burden on the common man. This would account for the tremendous amounts of unpaid revenue that go by in loopholes each year.

His fight against all forms of discrimination have also been far from inconsistent. He has consistently come out in favor of the California farm workers who have suffered tremendous discrimination as far as both working conditions and income are concerned. As the former Chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Subcommittee, he has consistently helped the American and Alaskan Natives. As a staunch supporter of the concept of busing, he has been a leader in the fight to achieve equal educational opportunities.

As far as the rights of women are concerned, he has consistently taken a strong stand in favor of complete equal rights for women and has pledged to appoint women to spots on the Cabinet and the Supreme Court. It was George McGovern that headed the Commission on Delegate and Party Reform and it was that commission that tremendously changed the Democratic Party to allow for equal representation for everyone in the ranks of that party.

Of course, everyone knows that George McGovern doesn't have a chance. WRONG!! George McGovern has widespread support across this country. Those who disagree and point to the polls should be pointed to the poll which gave McGovern 18 percent among Democrats in New Hampshire one week before he scored 37 percent in the primary of that state. In his book, The Election Game, Joseph Napolitan wrote, "There is only one good reason to take a political poll: to help win an election. If a poll won't do that, it's not worth taking."

One must remember that the president of this country is not elected by the people, but rather by the Electoral College. If one goes down the list of states in the union, he or she will find that George McGovern could very easily acquire enough electoral votes to win this election. Through the same personal contact that won Senator McGovern the nomination, he could easily sweep to the presidency.

One must also remember that Richard Nixon is an established loser and that if it weren't for a bungling Hubert Humphrey in 1968, he would not currently be our president. He will stay out of this campaign as long as it is possible, but soon he will be forced out of hiding. The people of this country want a president that's not afraid to come out and meet them on their own grounds. They want a president that is honest and straightforward. George McGovern will win this election and go on to be the next President of the United States, but he needs help. If you truly want to see a change in America, if you are fed up with Tricky Dicky and his whole way of doing things, if you want to see George McGovern elected president, then get out and do something about it. This might be our last chance before the Spiro of '76.

"To remain silent in the face of policies that one believes to be hurting the nation is not patriotism, but moral cowardice. Backing our soldiers in Vietnam does not mean cheering them on to their deaths in aquiescence to what one regards as a dangerously ill-conceived course. Criticism of public policy does not weaken the nation; rather it serves to refine, correct, and strengthen our national course. If the policy is sound, it will become better understood and therefore more effective under the searchlight of honest debate; if not sound it can best be remedied by constructive examination and frank discussion."

Maybe They Just Like Massachusetts

By Ed Bryant

The Student Union Ballroom was presumably given its name because people were supposed to dance there. Most of the time it is used to show movies, and the only dancing occurs when people hold meeting with other people with whom they agree in order to give each other a song and dance. These meetings are always political. Wednesday's McGovern rally is a case in point. This time, however, the only non-negotiable demand was that Richard M. Nixon be removed from office.

Why was there a McGovern rally in the Ballroom Wednsday? Certainly McGovern has to assume the support of Massachusetts on election day. The candidate's day has twenty-four very finite hours to it, and at this late date, it may appear silly to waste one's time in one of the few states sure to go for McGovern. If George MoGovern cannot carry Massachusetts, he will not carry any state. Why was the McGovern campaign in Massachusetts Wednesday?

There are reasons, most presumable among them the possibility of obtaining campaign workers, and of presenting the CBS Seven O'Clock News with a less embarrassing view of McGovern's somewhat maladroit campaign in quest for the Presidency. A lot of politics is perception, and McGovern needs badly to change America's perception of his candidacy in the next month if he is to stand a chance of election. Wednesday can perhaps be seen as the beginning of "the big push" of the McGovern campaign. If so, he may be in serious trouble, but then again, he may be the first iceberg elected to the Presidency since Dewey Defeated Truman in 1948.

How many of the audience will work as canvassers for McGovern remains to be seen. If enthusiasm at rallies means anything, there were some people in the crowd who will go out to work for George in Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New York. There were few in the crowd who will not vote for McGovern; except for the Linda Jenness table and the ubiquitous Matthew Tackeff, there were few opponents of the rally's purpose in evidence. Distaste for Richard Nixon runs deep on this campus; if the students were polled, Nixon would lose badly. Unfortunately for McGovern, American policy is hardly ever shaped according to the dictates of the students of the University of Massachusetts. As a rule of thumb, the influence of decisions made by UMass students in the Ballroom has been known to spread as far as Beacon Hill, but never to Washington. The rally was a success only if those who attended will go out and work for McGovern in other states.

There were several major differences between the McGovern rally and a strike meeting. The podium had more control over the crowd, as there was but one view being advanced. Where at a strike meeting one has to endure the YSA's haggling over whether or not it has the superior radical credentials, yesterday the speakers were all supporting the same course of action, the same principles: vote for George. In keeping with what she considers the real issue of the campaign, namely Richard Nixon, Shirley MacLaine spent most of her time attacking Nixon. Her attacks on Nixon were perhaps more fair than her praise of McGovern, and they drew wider applause. Her final comment was an exception to this, when the audience gave her her biggest ovation. Quoting Robert Kennedy on the night of the assassination of Dr. King, Shirley concluded that what America needs is compassion, love, and wisdom, and that they are to be found in George McGovern. Whether or not she meant to imply it, Shirley was saying that maybe next year we will have a Good Big Brother, not the Evil Big Brother we have now. Or perhaps compassion, love, and wisdom come down from the White House the sam way bombs of Indochina do.

Gib Fullerton

Jim Rowan was the most convincing of the three speakers. Lacking both the snide "I'm a heavy liberal" attitude of Shirley MacLaine, and the nervousness before an audience that plagued his wife (the Senator's daughter), Rowan spoke better than the other two speakers. In fairness, it should be said that readers of the daily newspapers should be aware of the circumstances which lead to the charges. Rowan's accusations were also different from those of the others in that he introduced two examples which were new to the audience, the bombing of the French and Algerian Embassies in Hanoi, and the imprisonment of Peter Bridge for refusing to disclose sources before a Grand Jury in New Jersey. In contrast, Miss MacLaine referred to Bridge as "Peter Bridges", and didn't seem to feel there was any need to explain why "Peter Bridges" went to jail, as though everyone in the audience could be expected to know of him. If the audience knew of Bridge, then it would follow that the audience was already sewn up for McGovern. Perhaps Miss MacLaine assumed this, and was after campaign workers, not individual votes. This still leaves the question as to why the University of Massachusetts should be the site of such a rally. Why not the University of Connecticut, if Connecticut is a state so badly in need of a canvass?

McGovern has been slowly changing several of the stands that first won him the support of places like the University of Massachusetts. Now that Shirley MacLaine is proclaiming the McGovern is not a radical, she really should be doing it somewhere else. Lack of radicalism itself is not a virtue in Amherst; it is in many other places.

The questions asked of the speakers provided a focus for the event. Shirley had earlier proclaimed that the McGovern campaign was doing a lot for proclaimed that the McGovern campaign was doing a lot for women, and that the McGovern Presidency would be one of the greatest things ever to happen to the women of this country. It was strange to hear Shirley MacLaine saying that, after her efforts in Miami Beach to forestall a fight on the abortion plank of the platform. Sissy Farenthold, who "discovered an appointment" in Texas that kept her from appearing, is one of the many women active in politics who haven't forgiven Shirley MacLaine for placing MCMcGovern's chances to be elected over the right of the women of this country to vote according to issues that effect them directly. A reliable source informed me that the UMass McGovern organization had a choice as to who should "discover another appointment", and chose to have Sissy split rather than Shirley. When questioned about McGovern's stand on abortion, Shirley spared the crowd of an account of her role in Miami Beach on the topic of abortion. The answers provided to the touchy questions were anything but satisfactory. This didn't really matter, however, since as one questioner put it, "I can't tolerate Richard Nixon, so I'm going to vote for McGovern." Nixon has two or three strikes against him; his personality, his poor performance as a domestic President, and most importantly, his war. McGovern, on the other hand, has one thing in his favor; he will end the war. This describes, I think, the attitude of the crowd at the rally.

Nineteen seventy-two has been the year of George McGovern. His candidacy has stayed the hand of many who seek revolution in this country. As the year has progressed, the enthusiasm McGovern generated has faded as his position vis-a-vis the left had become obscure. As Shirley MacLaine said, perhaps thinking more about the readers of the Springfield Union than of her immediate audience, "George McGovern is no radical." He is the alternative to the Presidency of Richard Nixon, however, and 1972 has become an election year, rather than a year in which the struggle was continued. For the "revolution", working for McGovern is one step backward. His election would probably be two steps forward, and make the whole thing worthwhile. The "revolution", whatever its strength, is not going to elect George McGovern, and it seems to me to be a waste of time for Shirley MacLaine to gloss over George while castigating Nixon in front of an audience which already knows all about Nixon, and too much about McGovern to believe he is the Second Coming.

For the sake of Vietnam, if not of America, George McGovern should be elected. In the Waring Blender that is American politics, George McGovern is the best man to run for President, without being murdered, since the Second World War. The end of the war would be more than enough to justify McGovern's election; the removal from office of the Kleindiensts and Kissingers is frosting on the cake. George hasn't much time left, and he has a long way to go. The University of Massachusetts will go for McGovern, as will the Commonwealth. No persuasion, no gloss-coating is needed. McGovern Day should take place in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in California, in Wisconsin. He should no be wasting his time in Massachusetts, nor should Shirley MacLaine. Her perceptions are more needed elsewhere.

had turned out for the afternoon's event, most of them Second Floor Crazies, yelling at me as I jumped defiantly into the air on the take off of my second flight. I had felt the chute was ready to take me off the ground and I knew that my next step would be the last, and I jumped. I didn't come back down for another two minutes.

As most of us were beginners Jim decided to try 235 feet of rope to start us off. The rope is a strong mountaineering rope of nylon material. The take off was quick with such a short rope; my first landing was hard. With the addition of another 150 feet the experience heightened. Take off was much more awesome. The ground rolled away beneath my feet, my judging of depth of field died and the horizon swung around me as though I was inside a great egg shell with painted panorama. There is a giant silence from within and without. I had little sense of movement.. My landing was on the nose, so soft that I just had to bend my knees on touching the ground, and, standing up right away, I unclipped the rope from the harness.

The velocity and direction of the wind are important factors which influence the success of each flight. The wind has to be reasonably parallel to the road on which the pick-up truck is doing the towing. If the wind blows in at an angle the chute has the tendency to swing with the wind on take off. The flier has the capability to steer the chute back towards the truck, and, at the time of descent can steer the chute into the neighboring field for a softer landing. Jim says that there are several tricks to making the chute respond quicker and with better accuracy.

If the wind is fairly strong take off is usually much quicker. The chute climbs faster, and the landings are invariably slower and softer. If the breeze is weak the descending flier comes crashing his way down at about 14 feet per second. The driver watches the descent. At about thirty feet above the ground the flier signals to the driver to gun the engine, by rapidly kicking his feet. The signal has a "Jesus, I'm coming down tooo fast" atmosphere about it. When the driver guns the truck the burst of forward motion brakes the descent of the chute and the flier drops easily to the ground. It takes a while for the driver to get the knack of judging the movement involved.

With 385 feet of rope, a good breeze, and the pick-up accelerating to 25 miles an hour, the flier can reach maximum height of 300 plus feet, heigher than a Southwest high-rise. At this height, the flier get "the big picture", feels quite isolated from the tiny figures below him, yet has great faith in the chute and the rope. The idea of risk at this point never enters his mind.

The take off and landing are the high points of the flight. Even with the concentration involved somehow shreds of "the terror of the sport" manage infiltrate the mind. The flier's faith in the rope and the chute is not taxed so much as is his faith in his own ability. The flier has misgivings towards what he is doing during the take off and the landing. Jim himself says that he doesn't have the urge to fly again until he is actually in the process. One female member of the club had second thoughts as she was being strapped into the chute for the first time, and trembled for twenty minutes after she landed. In what has turned out to be a typical paradoxical statement she asked Jim immediately after she landed, "Why didn't you tell me it was fun?"

The more one parasails the more addictive it becomes. In attempting to bring the sport on campus as a learning experience for a Southwest Colloquium, Jim Nardelli received enthusiastic support from one-time fliers. From the outset he found himself bogged down in red tape and sent on a long and frustrating wild goose chase. The chase ended with the woman involved with approving the colloque denying his application. The reluctant and evasive decision came after almost three weeks of constant pressure by the parasail fans on the Colloquium office. The woman has prejudged the viability of the sport as a colloque because of what she termed "the terror of the sport."

I think that her statement is only partially correct. Obviously there is a risk involved in the sport, as is true with all others. When the equipment is checked out before each flight, as Jim has made it a rule to do, then the possibility of equipment failure is very slim. Each member of the "club" knows the importance of making sure the shroud lines are straight and the tow rope is not wearing. Everyone checks and double checks. The group works with an enthusiastic and serious efficiency.

Yet, there is always that small percentage of risk playing tag with your mind. The magnitude of the physical things and the physical forces involved creeps up one the fliers confidence. He goes into momentary shock when he loses the confidence he has built up to guard against "the terror" of it all. Then, suddenly, the flier realises that it is these quick glimpses of "the terror" that, far from discouraging him to try it again, fascinates and helps him into that harness once again.

Books: "The Summer Game" And "The Breast"

By Carl Greenberg

The Summer Game by Roger Angell
303 pages $7.50

Roger Angell is possibly the most intelligent sports observer around. I gather that he writes about his specialty, baseball, about once a year in his column for the New Yorker magazine. The Summer Game is a collection of his New Yorker essays of the past ten years.

The book is well-filled with humor, baseball politics, approximations of Shakespearean drama, and nostalgia. The younger reader will be especially struck by Angell's considerations of how the game has so tremendously changed in the past ten years.

Angell points out that baseball is a very different kind of sport. First of all, there is no clock. The game is not over until the losing team gets its last chance, no one can sit on the ball til the clock runs out. The baseball season is a long one. It takes more than several games to determine the quality. There is also something attractive about the statistics of baseball. A game can be almost entirely recreated by its box score. A player's career can be called back to mind with all its slumps and peaks, just from his yearly records of hits, home runs, earned run averages, strikeouts, etc.

Funny things can happen in baseball; there are so many different types of plays that can be made. Angell tells of the time Marv Throneberry (remember him?) of the early Mets tripled, only to be called out when he got to third because he had failed to touch first base. The Mets didn't even bother to complain terribly loudly as almost any team would have in the situation, because Marv has also not bothered to touch second.

Then there's the time that the Tigers had just lost a game to the Cardinals in the 1968 World Series by the discouraging score of 10-1. Hubert Humphrey (we know that all politicians are great sports fans) walked into the Tiger's dressing room and with bursting enthusiasm proceeded to congratulate the Tigers on their great game.

While Angell's book does not pretend to be a history of baseball during the sixties, it does illuminate some of the basic changes in the sport. First of all, there was the expansion which added so many new teams that it is no longer possible to get an overall feel of what's happening during the summer. Where there were only eight teams per league before, there are now two divisions per league and six teams per division. And the East and West divisions don't really help to clear things up because Chicago is West in the American League and East in the National League.

Angell also analyzes what happened to the game itself because of the expansion. He makes it clear that baseball suffered since the available talent was spread so thin.

The Astrodome was also a result of the expansion and the Astrodome is a child of a Judge Roy Hoffheinz who owns 86% of the Astros. Hofheinz apparently conceives of the Dome as an entertainment center. He even says "we're in the business of sports entertainment", and then goes on to say that the type of fans who attend games at the Dome are a far better crowd than "those rowdies or semi-delinquents who follow the Mets."

Among the attractions at the Dome are skyline restaurants and clubs, motel-type accommodations and a multi-million dollar scoreboard which attracts more attention to itself than the action on the field possibly can.

Another owner Angell tells us about is Charles O. Finley. He owns the Oakland A's, has a scoreboard to compare with Hofheinz's and has urged for such things in the past as multi-colored bases and for a base-on-balls to be awarded after three balls instead of four.

Occasionally, the descriptions of a game or series of games gets confusing, but for the most part the reading is light and interesting. Perhaps the best moment in the book is Angell's discussion of Tom Seaver as he pitched for the Mets in 1970.

1969 was the year the Mets won the Series and it was also the year in which Seaver came to within two pitches of a perfect game, and had a record of 25-7. Angell eloquently describes how a great pitcher can defeat himself by striving for more than is possible. We are made to understand that Seaver, consciously or unconsciously was trying to get back that perfect game. He tried harder and harder to strike out his opponents, and set records doing so. A better pitcher will try to get outs from pop-ups and grounders, it's less exhausting.

Angell then poignantly describes Seavers loss to the Braves in Atlanta late in the season. The Mets were ahead by one run in the ninth, the Braves had bases loaded. Seaver threw a called strike three, but it was a fast ball and not the curve that the catcher had signalled for. The pitch got by and two men came in to win the game. Seaver had tried too hard and Angell says that this was possibly Seaver's "first true defeat of his life."

Somehow, The Summer Game goes beyond baseball and makes us aware of some its very special characteristics which even men like Hofheinz and Finley will never be able to touch.

The Breast by Philip Roth
Holt, Rinehart & Winston
78 pages, $4.95 $4.95!?

I hope Roth is making money on this one. Somebody is. If it's not a best-seller yet, it soon will be for several reasons. It's getting plenty of publicity and it's by Roth.

It's tempting to say that it is simply and primarily a money-making scheme cooked up between Roth and his publishers, but Roth is basically a good writer and so there must be something we can say about The Breast as a book on its own merits. Indeed it is more probable that Our Gang, last year's spoof on Nixon and his crew, was the money-making scheme.

The Breast is a better book than Our Gang because it at least examines some real human psychology. Our Gang seemed to be simply an overextended Woody Allen type of joke. True, Nixon would look funny in a football uniform, but Roth is just not at his best trying to make a novel out of it.

Almost the same with The Breast (oh, yeah, that's what this review is supposed to be about. . .well it is probable that The Breast will get as much attention for the fact that it was written and published as it will get for it's content.)

The Breast is, as the jacket says, "The story of the man who turned into a female breast." Roth makes sure we make the connection to Kafka's "Metamorphosis", and Gogol's "The Nose".

While Roth does treat us to some serious considerations of what it would all be like (the hero undergoes various stages of paranoia; he thinks that the whole world is watching on TV - and various sexual crisis; he wants to fuck with his nipple and can't stand to be washed by the male nurse - and a mental crisis; he wants to believe he has gone insane), there is still a great deal of the joke in the book. Not that the joke of a man being turned into a breast isn't a good one, not that Roth isn't funny, (the transformation is described as "an endocrinopathic catastrophe); but Roth had something to say and told a joke instead.

It is evident that he had something to say because he ends the book with a poem by Rilke ("Archaic Torso of Apollo") saying that the story we have just been told should illuminate the poem in a fresh way. The story does not at all illuminate the poem, in any way whatever and it must be assumed that either Roth is making another joke or his story is not what he intended it to be.

Well, anyway, read it, it's funny.

His platform is only six inches off the ground, so no one falls off.

Wine And Price: Ways To Avoid Hassles

By Frank Johnson

In the last article we looked at the ways wines are classed according to alcoholic content and discussed appropriate terminology to use when tasting and evaluating wine. To make tasting and evaluation easier, a few words about wine selection are in order.

Anyone familiar with wine prices these days should realize that jt is fairly easy to invest a small fortune in wine, especially imported wines. As consumers, Americans are very accustomed to buying goods by price, using the formula which stipulates "you get what you pay for": in other words, the more expensive a wine is, the better it is.

However, this formula is not valid when we consider many expensive, imported wines, and for several reasons. First, unprecedented world demand for well-known French and German vineyards has put a strain on the supply, forcing the price of these wines up far in excess of their actual worth. Second, due to the monetary crises of 1970-71, the dollar buys far less than it used to. While $2 used to buy a well-known, good-quality imported wine from France about 19 years ago, $6 might be needed for that same wine today. Finally, many New York-based shippers have decided to embark on what I consider a dangerous, needless speculation, in which wine is now being treated like art and jewelry, not like the very enjoyable food it is. A jeroboam (equivalent to 4 bottles) of Mouton-Rothschild 1929 was recently sold for about $9,000, and to importers and producers, this means that the customer will now be willing to invest such astronomical sums in wine. Cashing in on the fad, the shippers have held back on their supplies and have put well-known wines out on the market with incredibly large price tags. Many shippers invested heavily in good vintages about 5 years ago, and are now selling their wines for 5-10 times the amount they paid when the wine was young.

Because of these distressing developments, I will urge interested consumers to abandon their requests for the very best imported wines, because not only are they outlandishly expensive, but additional demand for them will be enough to take them off the market forever. Instead, I advocate the wise selection of lesser known, more reasonably-priced wines that in 99 cases (no pun intended) out of 100 will eminently satisfy all but the most persnickety palates. In these columns, I will outline some of the best of these little-known wines that are available in shops in this area.

What many Americans do not realize in their fever for well-known European wine is that Californian wines can frequently be among the very finest in the world. In fact, if it were not for American root stocks, there might not be any European wine at all. In the 1870's a very prolific plant louse (Phylloxera Vastatrix) suddenly began to devastate all the European vineyards, and the only way that total disaster was avoided was to grant the remaining European vines on imported American root stocks that were resistant to the louse. The wine snobs did not take kindly to grafting, thinking that the quality of the resulting wine would suffer, but the truth of the matter was that there existed no other way to prevent extinction of Europe's vineyards for all time.

This is not to say that California always makes the best wine, and it is also not to imply that California's superb agricultural climate is best for every variety of European grapes; despite the constant, favorable climate and long growing season, California cannot produce certain grape varieties as consistently and as expertly as can the French, Germans, Italians, and Portuguese, due to climate differences and also because wine-making in California is less than 100 years old, while in Europe wine-making dates back to before the age of Christ. Centuries of careful cultivation have adapted European vineyards perfectly to grape production, while it will take time to work the soil in many Californian wine-producing areas so as to exactly reproduce what lies across the ocean. However, the prestigious agricultural school at the University of California at Davis not only has produced some excellent American hybrids of European grape varieties, but has modernized the age-old techniques of Europe and is actually teaching many European growers the demanding technology of production. It is clear that California's "place in the sun" is not very far off.

With these thoughts in mind, I advocate the beginning wine drinker to first investigate better-quality Californian wines before taking the plunge on the risky European wine market. I will devote appropriate attention to European wines in due course, partly due to the fact that California wines are descended from their European counterparts, but the emphasis will again be on the more economical wines of Europe rather than the overpriced "snob growths".

There are many ways to buy wine inexpensively. One of the easiest is to simply make a quantity purchase. Wine retailers, at their option, usually give a 10% discount off a case of 12 bottles. If the wine inside the case is reasonably-priced to begin with, the buyer may be assured of getting a good bargain (plus hopefully good wine) in a large allotment.

However, there are several drawbacks to buying wine by the case, not the least of which is the high initial financial outlay. Most people seem to like to pick up a bottle of wine on their way home, and usually do not have about $30 to plunk down for a case of wine. Also, drinking only one brand or type of wine restricts one's palate. True knowledge of wine is not knowledge of one type of wine, but appreciation of many kinds of different wines, white and red, and to know about the foods with which to serve them. It would be foolish to buy 12 bottles of red wine when seafood is served often, for instance, because red wine does not go well with fish.

Instead, proper wine selection should be made leisurely, and slowly. Go to several liquor dealers in the area with a notebook or pad of paper and get the prices of each wine. Compare them before you buy. While retail prices on wine are very strictly controlled by the State Liquor Commission, a dealer, at his option, may sell at the established minimum rather than at a price more appropriate to a larger profit. The lowest price is the one for you.

Also, if you have the money and the interest, get some friends together and pool a few different bottles of wine for a group wine tasting party. Buy a well-known, "prestige" bottle and compare it to some lesser-known wines. Cover up the labels so no one knows exactly what wine he's drinking. If a new discovery takes place, it can only be of benefit. Have wine-tasting parties often; much cameraderie results, and they are educational as well. (Remember to save a few bottles for the following meal.)

In addition, certain popular wines are offered in sizes other than the standard 24 oz. (about 75 cc) bottle. Both ranges of the scale can be of benefit. If you like to serve a good deal of wine with dinner and foresake the cocktails, consider buying wine in magnum (48 oz.) sizes, half-gallon or gallon jugs. Larger sizes, especially the gallon containers, save money in the long run. However, if you buy a gallon of wine and don't finish it right away, remember to store it in the refrigerator and always keep the bottle tightly corked, because wine can spoil very easily. Information on storage will be given later on.

On the other hand, if cocktails are being served, or if one only desires a little wine with his meal, a half-bottle (12 oz.) is ideal. Wine is a bit more expensive this way, but it is much handier. For wine tasting parties half-bottles are especially recommended, for variety and not necessarily quantity is important. Half bottles don't demand much initial capital and they don't take up space either on the shelf or in the refrigerator. It is harder to get them from a dealer because a case of half bottles comes in lots of 24, and frequently the dealer has to buy several cases just so they will be shipped to him. Nevertheless, request half bottles from a dealer, and if he is truly interested in his customers, he will get them for you.

Finally although it may be a great temptation to do so, don't order fancy wine in a restaurant. A restaurant usually charges at least 50% in excess of the going price (retail) for the wine when serving it. Buy the better-quality, more expensive wine yourself and drink it at home; get a reasonably-priced regional when eating out. There may be exceptions to this rule; I have occasionally discovered them myself, and there is a great eagerness to get the best wine with the best food. If you must, there are some restaurants which will allow you to bring in your own wine under the condition that you pay them a small corking fee. Providing that the restaurant will do this, brining in your own wine is a way of getting the best of both worlds for less.

Poor Richard's Interview: Oswald Tippo

By Don Glickstein

(Editor's note: Don Glickstein interviewed former Chancellor Oswald Tippo on October 4, 1972. Tippo was born in 1911 about 30 miles north of Bangor, Maine. When he was 10 or 11 years old, his family moved to Boston. He attended Jamaica Plains High School, and began study at the Massachusetts Agricultural College in 1928. Four years later, he graduated and went to Harvard University for graduate work in botany. He received his Ph.D. in 1937 from Harvard. That same year, he became an instructor in botany at the University of Illinois for $1800 per year, stayed there for 18 years, and "went through the ranks" as an assistant professor, associate professor, full professor, head of the botany department, and dean of the graduate school. Tippo left Illinois in 1955 to become chairman of the Yale University botany department. After five more years, he became the provost at the University of Colorado. New York University welcomed him as the Executive Dean of Arts and Sciences in 1963. The next year, Tippo returned to the now University of Massachusetts as Provost, and in February, 1970, Oswald Tippo became the first Chancellor of the Amherst campus of the University. He resigned a little more than a year and a half later to devote more time to teaching.)

DG: It's been almost a year to the day since you stepped down from the position of Chancellor. What have you been doing since then?

TIPPO: The first few months I spent reading, in preparation for the courses I was going to teach–Botany courses and also courses on the University. I was able to read scores, if not hundreds of books that I haven't been able to read in many a year.

Since September, I've been giving three different courses. One is Botany 101 which is a general introduction to botany for people who are not majoring in science. It's called "humanistic botany" or "botany for poets". I'm giving a course on the origin and development of universities in Europe and this country, and am giving consideration to the major problems such as academic freedom, tenure, governance, teaching, etc. I'm also giving a freshman seminar. A group of about 16 freshmen meet once a week–Tuesday night–and we start with a consideration of how universities started, how they spread to this country, how they're organized, and we'll be taking up various problems connected with the universities. Also, we're discussing career opportunities for students in the sciences. These happen to be all science majors, so we're considering what training students should have, what the job opportunities are in various sciences.

DG: Do you have any regrets about stepping down?

TIPPO: No, no, not at all. I'm enjoying myself immensely teaching and having the close contact with students. Although I met some students (as Chancellor), I didn't see the rank and file. Now I have that opportunity.

DG: Have you had any trouble adjusting from the frenetic pace of Chancellor to the relative anonymity and obscurity of a botany professor?

TIPPO: Not really. As a matter of fact, as far as the pace is concerned, it's almost as hectic. If you're giving three different courses like I am, that means I have to prepare something like 4 different lectures each week and (prepare for) a couple of other classes. Where I have to do so much in the way of reading, I wouldn't say it's been hectic, but it's been just as busy.

DG: Would you ever like to return to college administration?

TIPPO: I don't think so. I don't think so. I was in it for about 30 years, and I think that's enough in various jobs as department head, and dean and provost and chancellor. I've had my stint. I want to spend the rest of my life teaching, which I originally wanted to do when I entered the profession.

DG: There's been a lot of debate about what is a university and what it should be. Some say that it should be an academic haven, an ivory tower; others say that it should be expanded to include public service. What do you think a university should be?

TIPPO: I certainly wouldn't pick any one of those extremes. I don't think you can say it should be an ivory tower. If it were that, then it would be nothing more than a medieval university, with emphasis on the classics, the liberal arts, possibly some of the philosophies. That would be absolutely unthinkable in this day and age. There's got to be some scholarship, there's got to be some service, some recognition of contributions to the community. You'll never get support from the State or any other source if you don't recognize that there are some obligations to the community, and the civilization that you live in.

The thing to do, of course, is to strike the proper balance. I'm a little afraid that with all this talk about service we might swing a little too far, just as several decades ago universities swung too far in the way of research. A lot of people are saying that we're nothing but a research institution and that we've sold our birthright for research money. I'm afraid that some people might bring us down the garden path, except in the area of service, that professors will go out for the service dollar which will be easy to get. I think we may have the same sorts of abuses, the same extremes.

DG: What are your views on core requirements?

TIPPO: I'm pretty well convinced that we have to leave it up to the student, and leave it free and open, pretty much on an elective system, but I hope, with a very good advising system. Students (should) be told, "Look. Sure, you can go through the university and pick the easy courses, but you won't have much in the end. You won't have an education." (Students) must be told very, very explicitly what will be required (in their field). We ought to leave it up to students to choose. They ought to be told and they ought to understand that here are the opportunities, and this is what they'll need, and there shouldn't be any complaint afterwards if they don't have it.

DG: What is your opinion on the letter grading system?

TIPPO: I would leave this up to the student. I think the idea of having a pass-fail option is good. I think the device of not recording failing grades is a good thing; there's no point in recording the failures on a young person's record so early in life which will follow him throughout his life.

But on the other hand, I think if any student wants grades, he ought to be able to get them. They ought to be given that opportunity, if they think it will strengthen their case for medical school or graduate school.

I would again, leave it as a matter of choice.

DG: As a member of the faculty, how do you feel about faculty organizing into unions?

TIPPO: That question itself doesn't appall me. Everybody has to be reminded that universities started as unions, trade unions, guilds. University originally meant "a guild of masters" or "a guild of students".

I think it's almost inevitable when you have these very large universities, especially multi-campus universities, where the system is so big, faculty really feel that they're not involved too much, therefore, they've got to have some sort of organization. That doesn't frighten me at all.

The thing that does concern me is that I would hope that in the university we would never square off and say "This is management" and "Here are the employees". I think the idea of sitting down with administrators and faculty and students and saying "Now, look. What's best for the faculty? What's best for the students" –I hope we'd always have that open sort of system.

The idea of having a guild or a union doesn't frighten me at all, because that's the way we started. But I just hope it will be a guild with a conscience, and that we'll consider the best thing for the university, the best thing for the students, the best thing for education.

DG: Do you still favor a University Senate governance?

TIPPO: Oh yes. In the matter of governance, I think it's absolutely clear that we've got to come up with something.

I think it's rather interesting that we've had some universities governed by students –in the medieval period, the University of Bologna–we've had some governed by masters or teachers as at the University of Paris, Oxford and Cambridge, and in this country, we have a system of having external trustees.

I think what we need is a system of a single Senate or a single council which is made up of both students, faculty, administrators, and possibly even alumni, and possible even external people, people appointed by the state. I notice that the University of Toronto has just recently given up its trustees and all its other governments; they have one large council which is made up of students, faculty, administrators alumni and some people appointed by the state. You've got to have all those components.

I think it's just bound to come.

DG: Does that imply a quota system?

TIPPO: I suspect that you'll never get (a university senate) through without some sort of system. I think it might very well be backed up with some sort of caucus system, whereby certain things which are only of interest to students would be handled by that caucus of students. Certain other elements might be handled by a faculty caucus, and so on. But then there would be this general senate which would handle university-wide matters.

DG: Listening to you speak right now, and also from listening to your class lectures, it's evident that you have read more than just botany books. You've quoted James Thurber in your lectures, and Ambrose Bierce, and even unknowns, such as Mrs. Almira Lincoln in 1828. What kind of reading do you like to do?

TIPPO: All my life I've read a good deal. As a matter of fact, for a long time, I was rather tempted to become an English or history major. The real reason I probably didn't go into history was that when I was a student here, there wasn't a history department. There wasn't a full time historian, believe it or not. There were some history courses given, but they were given by, for example, an economics teacher, who gave a course in English history, I think if we had a full-time historian, I might have gone into history. Similarly, I was very much drawn into English. I took a lot of English courses. I actually had a very strong minor in English. So all my life I've been very much interested in reading in history and in the arts, fiction, poetry and things of that kind. In connection with administration, I've always tried to read quite widely in the area of education.

DG: What are the changes that have impressed you the most since you were a student here, and since you were a Chancellor here–changes among students and changes in the University itself?

TIPPO: As far as students are concerned, the first point would be the tremendous growth of the student involvement in their own affairs. They've practically taken over the extra-curricular activities, the management of their dormitory life, the various outside activities, the student newspaper, the Student Senate and the tremendous budget they operate on, but lines, all that sort of thing.

But beyond that, the involvement of students in various University-wide committees, in the selecting of Presidents and Chancellors and Deans, the involvement of students on practically all committees–academic affairs–almost everything that concerns the University, even on an environmental level. That's one of the tremendous developments.

Another thing that I take great pride in is the development and growth of the library. We had a very poor library. Now, I think we have a fine library building, and eventually we'll have a fine collection. That's very significant. That's the center, at the core, the heart of the University.

On the faculty side, I'm proud of the very fine faculty that we've recruited and built up over the years. We have an outstanding faculty. They're people who are very much interested in teaching and they're those interested in scholarship and research. That required much higher salaries. I take pride in that–the fact that we were able to raise the faculty salaries to a level at least roughly comparable to some of the better state universities. We're still not in the first league, but we're up there.

DG: What are your opinions on tenure?

TIPPO: The more I read, the more I think, and the more I experience it, there's no question that some sort of tenure must prevail. The mistake is not tenure. I come to that conclusion when I see what happened in the past when there wasn't tenure, when wives of trustees and trustees themselves would say "Fire that man. Fire that man because I don't like him."

The mistake is that the faculty just doesn't live up to its responsibility. It must, somehow, come up with a system whereby it culls out the people who are not competent, and just sees to it that those people don't get tenure. It must come up with a system whereby you retire early some of the people who become incompetent.

But I don't like the idea of giving up tenure. If we ever do that, faculty will be at the mercy of trustees, legislators, all sorts of powerful groups. I think that would be unthinkable. You've just got to have tenure, because of the kind of business the faculty is in–finding truth and then disbursing it. It's a condition of employment, really, You can't be a good professor unless you have tenure, unless you're certain that whatever you say won't lead to discharge.

DG: You resigned because of, among other reasons, a dispute over the budget. Currently, President Wood is having his own dispute over budget matters with Governor Sargent. What advice can you give President Wood for his dilemma?

TIPPO: We've got to present the best possible case for the University. After all, we have these thousands and thousands of students and somehow, they've got to be educated. The only advice I can give is present the best possible case.

I might include, by the way, that I prefer a very low tuition. It's a mistake to raise the tuition, because you'll never get that money in scholarship. If the tuition is raised, you've got to battle to get the financial aid so that students who come from low-income families can come here.

DG: You're teaching a freshman seminar. What advice do you give freshmen and new students on surviving at UMass?

TIPPO: I really haven't taken up that question; I'd rather have it come from them, if they're disturbed. They don't seem to be disturbed. I've been watching that. I wonder if that isn't something that people indoctrinate them with, because so far, these people have not mentioned the difficulty. They rather like being in a large place. But as soon as it comes along, we'll tackle it. I don't think I ought to bring it up unless they bring it up.

DG: Thank you Dr. Tippo.

Mucho Malo Dooko Disco Atco

by Mike Kostek

Mary Sol
Mary Sol, The First International Puerto Rico Pop Festival with J. Giles Band/The Mahivishnu Orchestra featuring John McLaughlin/Dr. John/B.B. King/Osibisa/Cactus/The Allman Brothers/Emerson, Lake & Palmer/-Nitzinger/Johathan Edwards/John Baldry/Herbie Mann Atco SD 2-705 two records time: 88:56

This is a lame concoction of "representative" performances from the Mar y Sol (Sea & Sun) festival held last April in Puerto Rico. To say this record is forced and artificial is to be lienient. The premise for packaging this is to capture the festivities on record, a memorial, a souvenir of sorts. Now ordinarily I am benign towards a new release, any new release, even the seventh Greatest Hits of the Rolling Stones, because I know that you don't have to buy it, and besides, there must be somebody out there who needs this particular collection. So who does it hurt? What does it matter? But Mar y Sol is different. It looks like it might be pretty good. Caveat emptor. Uneasy lie the grooves that capture Cactus next to B.B. King. How? Why? What? The folks at Atco can't be that stupid. How can they possibly expect those who respect and admire the Mahivishnu Orchestra to be able to tolerate dreck like Nitzinger?

Instead of something for everyone, Atco has blown it up into too little for all. There is some good music here, but you'll have to dig to find it. Just like Woodstock 2 and the Isle of Wight/Atlanta Pop Festival messes, this is a dud, that has set its sights on a far wider audience than it could ever hope to attain.

Side One is the best here and it's actually pretty good. J. Giles kicks things off well with "Lookin' For A Love", which is frenetic, but Magic Dick's harp is mixed down too low, and somehow the whole thing never drops into place as a cooker. Nice to hear Peter Wolf howling the "Lookin' in the MOWN-in', lookin' at night" chorus over and over again.

The Mahavishnu Orchestra with John McLaughlin is next and is a disappointment. Since their live performances often leave the stage and the audience wilted, I had high hopes for "The Noonward Race" done in thirteen minutes here. Well, it's not bad, and the Orchestra certainly puts any of the other bands included here to shame, but I've high standards for John & company, and "The Noonward Race" is disjointed, disheveled and a struggle throughout. Jan Hammer gets some nice hard electric piano in here, and Billy Cobham is, as always, superhuman on the drums. However, McLaughlin's solo is muddy, and the band is just not playing well together on this cut.

Closing this first side is Dr. John and "Wang Dang Doodle". This old Howlin' Wolf workhorse has been taking a lot of abuse lately from such desperados as Savoy Brown, but here Dr. Jawn rolls it to us just right. He certainly has the voice for it, and he's given fine chorus backup. All night long.

It's almost all downhill from here, so...

Side two is mildly amusing, but totally irrelevant, with B.B. King starting off with "Why I Sing The Blues", a tune he's been kicking around for some five years now. I've heard him play this exactly the same way four different times now. Good show Riley, but something new perhaps? Maybe?

Osibisa begins with their lead singer yelling to the crowd "Right on, yeah, get it together" before beginning a performance that is as stilted, lame and boring as these cliches. "Do You Know" features horns blatting out of tune, some nonsense guitar noodlings, and the usual spread-out percussion that never builds into anything solid or imaginative or exciting. Again I had high hopes, for I'd heard that they were great live and escaped all the stiffness of their albums. Not here. Even the crowd snoozes through this one.

Anytime you seek a five minute irritant, put Cactus and "Bedroom Mazurka" on your turning table. Once is enough. Anti-social behavior has been known to florish after more than one listening. So many broken records... However, this is not quite as bad as Cactus' efforts on the Isle of Wight/Atlanta Pop Festival affair. That recording has to be the absolute worst live performance ever captured on record. Let it loose, please. "Bedroom Mazurka" is, fortunately, at the end of the side, making for easy rejection. Write that down, 'Side Two, Easy Rejection'.

Side Three. The Allman Brothers Band. Yay, right? Hold it. One sodden runthrough of "Ain't Wastin' Time No More", played exactly as on E Day Peech (as Gregg Allman calls it) is not a great plum. However, for the musically starved listener who has just sat through side two, it is an oasis.

Emerson, Lake & Palmer are up next with a passable medley of two of their better songs (least bad songs?), both from their first album, "Just Take A Pebble/Lucky Man". Seven minutes of niceness. Shelley likes them. A welcome relief from the pompous foolishness that has plagued their recording efforts since their first album.

The Low Point Award is awarded to Nitzinger, under Cactus by a close fret. A nine minute performance of something called "Texas Blues/Jelly Roll" combines all the grace and taste of Cactus, the blues power of Led Zeppelin, the singing brilliance of Grand Funk, the artistry of Black Sabbath with the sensitivity of Uriah Heep. With his idiot cops from Dylan and an entire last verse stolen from Aretha Franklin's "Dr. Feelgood", Nitzinger is a classless band that sounds just plain ugly. Not Zappa ugly, but hopeless ugliness. Talentless. Being at the end of the side, it again affords for easy rejection. Write that down, 'Third Side, Easy Rejection'.

Side Four. Last chance. Jonathan Edwards and his urbanity sing two delicate, quivering songs that are mildly interesting, but not very meaty.

Long John Baldry rushes into the gap with six minutes of "Bring Muh Baby Back" that has some fine slide guitar, some nice low horseness by Baldry and not much else. Bland raunch blues.

And what to pick to end this motley assembledge? How about nine minutes of Herbie Mann? Sure! "Respect Yourself". Toodle tootle. Put your hand over your mouth when you play, Herbie, that'll help the solution. Respect yourself, Herbie.

As for the festival itself, there is no trace of it on here save for some smatterings of genuine Puerto Rican crowd response. This could have been recorded at the Bluewall as far as local flavor goes. The sound recordings are all well done, but that does little to save this mess.

Looking back on this collection, it would seem that Atco would be smart to sell this for $2.00 by mail to fifteen-year olds who've never heard of B.B. King or to those who refuse to blow seven bucks on Eat A Peach, or to those who actually survived the affair. At least that way they would save some prestige. However, selling this in record stores with a $9.96 list price (= $7.50 appr.) is a cruel joke. On us too, you know.

Son Of Schmilsson

By Steve Feld
Son of Schmilsson: Harry Nilsson (RCA Records)

There are plenty of reasons to justify shelling out the four bucks for this record. First of all, there are some dynamite graphics. The cover art is a fascinating lesson in photography and the use of lighting to enhance a mood. Nilsson spoofing Bela Lugosi, using blood-dripping letters only to remind us on the back that he's quite harmless. The cover pic is also a poster inside along with the lyrics to all the songs (including the notorious "You're Breaking My Heart", which we'll get to later). The inside covers are loaded with some great shots, too.

So even if you detest everything on the record (which you won't), you'll still have some compensation.

Son of Schmilsson is obviously a companion piece to Nilsson Schmilsson. They are similar in several ways and reveal essentially the same scope of his abilities. Whereas Nilsson Schmilsson marked the emergence of the neo-Nilsson (i.e. now a rock star), Son of Schmilsson further elaborates on this idea (with the help of George Harrison, Ringo and others to reinforce it.) Both albums were recorded in London (The London Harry Nilsson Sessions, if you will) and both are elaborate production jobs.

Since Nilsson insists on showing us his several sides, he is forever destined to receive mixed reviews. His puerile, singalong children's songs (holding on to his roots) are overly offensive and musically worthless, yet they continue to perk up ears on AM radio. "Coconut" from Nilsson Schmilsson and "I'd Rather Be Dead" from Son of Schmilsson mark the nadirs of their respective albums. But to those Nilsson cultists who salivate at the mention of his movie, The Point, and his earliest record albums, Pandemonium Shadow Show and Aerial Ballet, the contrary will most likely be true. Oh well.

Other Nilsson songs rely on a musical mise-en-scene which, at best, is unstable. "Early in the Morning", "Let The Good Times Roll" (from the first), and "At My Front Door" and "Joy" from Son of create an atmosphere upon which the success of the song hinges. In the end, it comes across as a musical cop-out.

And that's the trouble with Nilsson — inconsistant material. Taking the best songs from both albums would make a short, but amazing record. From Nilsson Schmilsson there's "Gotta Get Up", "Without You" and "The Moonbeam Song". And on Son of Schmilsson the high quality includes my favorite, "The Lottery Song", "Turn on Your Radio" which resembles McCartney's "Blackbird" (same guitar style) and "You're Breaking My Heart", America's love song of the seventies-"You're breaking my heart/You're tearing it apart?-So Fuck You!"

The rest of Son of Schmilsson comes across in various shades of grey. "Spaceman" has a neat arrangement and "Take 54" tears things apart for awhile. But shit like "Joy" and "Remember" there's no excuse for.

Relying heavily on parody, Son of Schmilsson is a true extension of its cover. Nilsson must have had fun making the record, and he's at a point, now, where he's capable producing a monster records. The outcome will depend on his outlook on his music. Lack of direction always amounts to wasted energy. With a commitment to a valid, more consistent style, Harry Nilsson will then record the masterpiece he has within him.

Honky Chateau; Elton John
Never a Dull Moment: Rod Stewart

Elton John and Rod Stewart, the two foremost artists to emerge from the second wave British rock and roll invasion, released albums late this summer and though neither can be viewed as significant breaks from the past, they both succeed.

Both albums are extentions of carefully crafted and nurtured success stories with firm foundations.

Rod Stewart has ventured upon a dual rise to superstardom, being the central figure of four excellent solo albums, while anchoring that most successful band of punk, Limey rockers known as Faces. Bearing the major responsibility for seven good-to-exceptional records in three years is no mean trick, but Rod the mod shows no signs of strain as he delivers another solid effort with the substantial aid of his many cohorts...

"Never a Dull Moment" opens with "True Blue", a jaunty little piece that brings to fore the basic Rod Stewart paradox. While reflecting the very essence of trendsetting, velvet-encrusted stardom, Stewart has still chose to infuse his music with a humanistic self-effacement that provides a mysterious contrast to his onstage effervescence. Unlike Jagger or Daltrey, we can imagine Stewart abandoning his strutting - rooster posture upon returning home at night, and pondering the craziness of the rock and the roll over tea and muffins. "True Blue" tells a delightful tale of unwanted wealth and fame, complete with a dad who has "a lot more money than sense" and "wants him back at any expense". Catch the guitar/bass interplay between Ron Wood and Ronnie Lane on this tune for further example of why those sleepy Stones had better put an extra guard on the Crown Jewels.

"Mama, You Been On My Mind" is the by-now standard Dylan interpretation and it fares very well, thanks in great part to some superb country ramblings by Gordon Huntley, Dick Powell, and a chap known only as Brian on steel guitar, violin, and accordion, respectively.

Side Two is more solid, opening with Hendrix's "Angel", which is given a pleasant if unaltered treatment. "You Wear It Well" is a restyled "Maggie May" with gentler and snappier lyrics than its top-of-the-pops ancestor.

"I'd Rather Go Blind" and "Twistin' the Night Away" are superb examples of the facility and expertise with which Stewart handles rythm and blues, both the tender, dying-romance type of the former, and the all-out bandstanding of the classic Same Cooke rocker.

The album fits fairly neatly into the proven Stewart formula and takes no chances, but only diehard resistors to his shaggy charm will be disappointed.

Elton John's talents, especially in regard to recorded works, have been greeted with less general acclaim than Stewarts, complaints being directed mainly toward Paul Buckmaster's massive string arrangements on all three previous albums.

Elton has nonetheless shown to be the possessor of a very strong and expressive singing style, and, when coupled with the occasionally interesting lyrics of Bernie Taupin, has produced some exciting and unique music.

His new album "Honky Chateau" is what a lot of people have been waiting for, that being Elton John adorned only with spare and tasteful arrangements.

Like Stewart, Elton has surrounded himself with fine musicians who know him and his music, and it pays off. There are very few weak spots on this album, but I am going to content myself with pointing out the obvious standouts, which rank not only among the finest but the most popular of this year, thanks to AM radio.

"Mona Lisas and Mad Hatters" is my fave, thanks to some genuinely pretty melodies and lyrics such as these: And now I know, Spanish Harlem/Are not just pretty words to say/ I thought I knew/ But now I know that rose trees never grow/ In New York City.

"Rocket Man" is prototype space rock with brilliant synthesizer work from David Henschel. "And all this science/I don't understand/It's just my job, five days a week/A Rocket Man."

"Think I'm Gonna Kill Myself" is Elton in Randy Newman territory, exploring the "state of the teenage blues" and is a delight.

Two fine albums from artists who appear to be in artistic holding patterns, but, like the Dead and the Band, holding patterns loaded with good music.

Suschil Mukherjee & Friends, Saturday October 14 at the Amherst Folklore Centre. This Indian quartet begin their performances with an explanation of exactly what the music is about, there on the listener can appreciate an understanding and enjoyment of the so-called Indian Raga. The creativity and complexity of the music all but entrances one to a meditative silence. A wide variety of instruments are mastered by Mukherjee and Friends such as the tabla, Bamboo flute, marimba, etc., all perfectly coordinating with the emission of their jazzlike structure. Joan Baez is also enthusiastic about their music and has ideas of an A&M recording session.

Fellini's Journey Through Antiquity

The following article is an excerpt from the book On The Set Of Fellini Satyricon: A Behind The Scenes Diary, by Eileen Lanouette Hughes. The article offers interesting background to the film to be screened twice this evening. The book itself is fascinating reading about how the film was put together. Editor.

During the course of his twenty-five-year career, Federico Fellini's gargantuan fantasy and soul-searching autobiographical themes have earned him international recognition as one of the world's greatest and most sensitive film directors. La Strada and Nights of Cabiria, both starring his wife, Giulietta Masina, won him two Oscars, but the pinnacle of his success was reached with La Dolce Vita, a scathing dissection of modern society, and 8 1/2, a penetrating and anquished analysis of a man in crisis.

In 1965 Fellini made his first color film, Juliet of the Spirits, again with his wife in the principal role, and though the director displayed his customary flair for fantastic symbolism and psychological probing, the film was received with mixed critical reactions. A long period of creative uncertainty and personal crisis ensued, and Fellini fans wondered if the director's fabulous talent had dried up. Some even doubted that he would ever make another film.

Fellini's stubborn insistence on making his films the way he wants to make them has sparked legendary feuds with his producers. After Juliet the director became involved in a lengthy battle with Dino De Laurentiis, the producer of his two Oscar-winning films, with whom he had signed a contract for a picture to be called The Voyage of G. Mastorna. The producer insisted upon having Ugo Tognazzi, a popular and talented Italian actor, in the role of Mastorna but the director did not want him under any circumstances, preferring Laurence Olivier or Marcello Mastroianni. The preparation was completed and sets were built but the shooting of the film was delayed by months of discussions, recriminations, and litigation, culminating in the director's near fatal malady in April, 1967.

As Fellini tells it, "De Laurentiis forced me to take Tognazzi for Mastorna but I never wanted him. I was in a state of confusion and went to the hospital with a strange disease. I called it 'Tognazziitis,' but five top Italian doctors diagnosed it is inoperable cancer of the pleura. By that time, they had already taken five hundred Xrays and all showed the same thing.

After his recovery, the director was rescued from his dilemma by Alberto Grimaldi, a young Neapolitan producer, who got Fellini released from the contract with De Laurentiis by paying three-quarters of a million dollars to cover the expenses already incurred on the film. Meanwhile, Fellini continued to nurture his intention of making Mastorna but decided to shelve the film for a less taxing project. In less than two months, in November and December of 1967, the director filmed an episode, Toby Dammit, or, Don't Bet Your Head with the Devil, based on a short story by Edgar Allan Poe. An Italian-French coproduction with Grimaldi as the Italian producer, the episode was for Fellini an act of liberation. "I tried to make fun of myself," he declared, "to throw myself into the sea, to exacerbate my style to the point of parody and grotesqueness in such a way that I could never go back to it."

In the beginning of 1968 Fellini returned to Mastorna but still seemed unable to begin the actual filming. "It made me nervous and suffocated me so I decided to put an end to it once and for all, a little like the scorpion which kills itself."

Having eluded death himself and with Mastorna interred, the director, then forty-eight years old, embarked on another voyage, a trip back into time to disinter the Dolce Vita of the ancient Romans, an idea that, he sometimes claims, had been germinating in his fertile imagination since he first read Petronius' Satyricon in 1939 and wanted to stage it as an anti-Fascist parody. In more whimsical moments, Fellini explains, "I decided to make the Satyricon because it was the only name that came to my mind when I signed the contract and had to fill in the name of the film."

On November 9, 1968, after six months of intensive research and preparation, Federico Fellini began filming his eleventh film, the Satyricon, or "Fellinicon," as it came to be called. It was the director's first full-length film in four years, his first in costume, the most costly film he had ever made, and the first with foreign financial backing. Alberto Grimaldi, the film's Italian producer, had made a deal with United Artists whereby the American production company would provide a minimum guarantee to finance the film in return for world distribution rights exclusive of Italy.

Satyricon was shot in Rome, often described as "Hollywood on the Tiber," at Cinecitta, a nondescript complex of ochre-colored studios, offices, and workshops built on the outskirts of the city in 1936, during the heyday of Fascism. Not far away, ironically enough, is the old Appian Way where the crumbling ruins of ancient Roman mausoleums and aqueducts and the labyrinths of Christian catacombs still entice thousands of tourists. During the war, Cinecitta was bombed out and after the liberation of Rome served as a refugee camp. It was reactivated as a film center in 1947 and, by 1969, in its twelve studios—two of which are the largest in Europe—545 films had been shot, including such colossal depictions of ancient Rome as Quo Vadis, Ben Hur, and Cleopatra. The fact that they were all filmed in the same studio is the only similarity between Fellini's vision of ancient Rome and the previous portrayals of that dead civilization, distorted and romanticized by the enshrouding layers of two thousand years.

The Fellini Satyricon, to give its full title necessitated by copyright conflicts, is inspired by, rather than based upon, the Satyricon of Gaius Petronius, a courtier in the entourage of Nero whose refined tastes and pleasure-loving habits earned him the title of "Arbiter of Elegance." In A.D. 66, Petronius, through a plot devised by a jealous rival, incurred Nero's wrath and ended his life before the emperor could do it for him. With his customary savoir faire, the courtier calmly opened his veins, rebinding them to chat with friends, reward or punish his slaves, eat a good dinner, and write out a detailed description of the debauched emperor's novel sexual propensities, before finally perishing as elegantly as he had lived.

But Petronius was more than an imaginative pacesetter of erotic pleasures and stylish pastimes. The Roman patrician was also a gifted and perceptive satirist of the mores and morals of his time, which he wittily and acerbically chronicled in perhaps as many as twenty volumes of satires. Unfortunately only three of them have survived, and those only in fragmentary form. Nevertheless, what remains of the Satyricon is a vivid, explicitly bawdy, and often very entertaining account of the life and licentiousness of Neronian times, centered around the picaresque adventures and escapades of three surprisingly modern hippie-like characters "doing their thing" in pre-Christian Rome.

Encolpius and Ascyltus, whom Fellini describes as "two breakneck kids with completely unhinged lives and pan-erotic dreams," are friends and rivals for the affection and favors of Giton, a beautiful young boy, whose name means "neighbor" in Greek. As in Petronius' Satyricon, the youths encounter many characters as uninhibited and unscrupulous as they are: Eumolpus, a jaded old poet who begins as a freeloader, becomes rich, and dies stipulating that, to claim their legacies, his heirs must first eat his body; Lichas, a sadistic shipowner who scours the world for monsters and beauties to titillate the emperor's inexhaustable appetite; Tryphaena, Lichas' lascivious companion in orgiastic pleasures; Trimalchio, a rich and vulgar ex-slave with a fondness for young boys; Fortunata, his greedy and voluptuous wife; Habinnas, Trimalchio's tomb-builder, and his wife, Scintilla, Fortunata's lesbian lover.

Petronius is the departure point. "The film we have created from it," the director has said, "is a panorama, a vast canvas with fantastic tone, a sharp and allegoric fresco of our present-day world." The vast canvas Fellini has created sometimes adheres very closely to episodes and characters described in Petronius, as in the famous "Dinner of Trimalchio." More often, it includes episodes considerably altered from the original, like "The Ship of Lichas" where Fellini has Encolpius marry the cruel shipowner. Several episodes, such as "The Villa of the Suicides," "The Labyrinth," "The Garden of Delights," and "The Death of the Emperor," have been completely invented by Fellini and his co-scriptwriter, Bernardino Zapponi, who shares the director's penchant for the grotesque. Some of the weirdest characters also are completely new creations: the hermaphrodite, the nymphomaniac whose sexual torment must be assuaged every hour, and the beautiful sorceress who is forced to restore the fire her rejected lover takes from the villagers in a manner resembling childbirth. So much of the original work has been transformed or deleted that, as the director admits, "It is eighty percent Fellini and twenty percent Fellini and twenty percent Petronius."

And the world that Encolpius and Ascyltus careen through is a dark, hallucinatory world where the audience, as the director intended, "has the sensation of being surrounded by mysterious masks, ghosts, and shadows, the like of which they have never seen before." In a daring and masterful tour de force, the director has violated every cinematographic rule by producing a film with no pace, no psychology, no stars, and no story. The film begins and ends with a wall enclosing nine separate episodes, two of them containing bizarre tales-within-tales. It is a gigantic series of frescoes depicting depravity, decadence, impotence, and death, peopled with spectral faces disinterred from time and living in a murky void, waiting to return to the graves from which they have been summoned by the wizardry of Fellini.

Before he began the film, Fellini, with his circus barker's flair for gulling the public and press, announced, "The roles in Satyricon will be played by big names, people who represent myths today to identify with the myths of the Roman era," and unabashedly ticked off such names as the Beatles and their former guru, the Maharishi, Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor, Marlon Brando, Peter O'Toole, Mae West, Brigitte Bardot, Danny Kaye, Groucho Marx, Pierre Clementi, Terence Stamp, Lucia Bose, Capucine, Alain Cuny, Salvo Randone, Anna Magnani, Lee Marvin, Mina (the Italian pop singer), Magali Noel, Lyndon B. Johnson, and Charles de Gaulle.

In the end, only Lucia Bose, Capucine, Alain Cuny, Magali Noel, and Salvo Randone made it to the screen. Terence Stamp and Pierre Clementi, whom the director originally wanted in the roles of Encolpius and Ascyltus "because they are two heads that don't seem used to thoughts like ours," joined the roster of those innumerable myths who did not appear in Satyricon, and the stars of the film were three unknowns. Martin Potter, a twenty-four-year-old English actor, is Encolpius; Ascyltus is played by Hiram Keller, a twenty-four-year-old American actor from the cast of Hair; and Giton is seventeen-year-old Max Born, a hippie from the streets of London's Chelsea district.

For the remainder of the fifteen-hundred-member, multiracial, multilingual cast, Fellini and his agents scrutinized the faces of about three thousand people in Italy and London, choosing paupers and millionaires, beggars and butchers, freaks and cripples, the beautiful and the ugly, the old and the young. For, as Fellini readily admits, "Faces are more important to me than anything else—more important than the set designs and the costumes, more important than the script itself, even more important than acting ability."

As crucial as his faces are, so are his collaborators, the "Fellinidi," as they are called. The cinema world is already a world apart. The cinema of Fellini is unique; and just as the director searches for strange faces, so he seeks out a certain type of collaborator, the best in Italy. He is the sun and they are the satellites orbiting around him, a very special breed fanatically devoted to il Maestro, who will give up more lucrative jobs just to work with him.

And so Fellini and his "Fellinidi" went into orbit to film what the director called a "documentary of a dream." Its cost, by Hollywood standards, was comparatively modest for the kind of film that it is. The regular troupe of approximately a hundred were paid $16,000 per week, excluding the director and production manager. Sixty studio workers placed at the disposition of the film supplemented the work of the steady crew, and additional technicians and specialists were called in as needed. Each day, between the work being done at Cinecitta and that done in outside laboratories, 270 people were occupied on Satyricon, and between $12,800 and $14,400 was spent on general costs.

It Evaporates Before Your Eyes

By Bob Nesti

The Ruling Class
Written for the screen by Peter Barnes, from his play; directed by Peter Medak; with Peter O'Toole, Alastair Sims, and Arthur Lowe.

The Ruling Class rests upon the faulty premise that what's bright and witty the first time around will be even more so the fifth. It is a treacherously bad film that's as schizoid as its mad hero, Crazy Jack, the fourteenth Earl of Guerney. Jack, played by Peter O'Toole, believes he is Christ and attempts to convert the household at his mammoth Hertfordshire Manor into believing he is also. His madness is the touchstone for a goodly number of satiric barbs at religion, British class life, madness, and sex, yet as energetic and clever as these comic germs may be, they remain stillborn. Scriptwriter and playwright Peter Barnes is a very funny man, but is his own worst enemy. The Ruling Class becomes a celebration of his wit and, although much of it is dazzling, it's also tiringly verbose. Somewhere in this ecletic two-and one-half hour potpourri of black slapstick, horror, and social commentary is a charming ninety minute comedy-of-manners-gone-astray. All that's astray here is a focus. Barnes and his director Peter Medak center their film upon the word then talk a blue streak and what seemed energetic and exciting at first quickly becomes bloated and ineffectual.

The story encompasses three generations of the Guerney family. It begins with the accidental death of the Thirteenth Earl. He enjoys dressing in long underwear, a cocked hat, a regimental jacket, and a white ballet skirt and feign hanging in the comfort of his bedroom. One night, while suspended from a silk noose for a few death-defying seconds, he mistakingly kicks the ladder away and dies. Upon the reading of the will his shocked household, comprised of his scheming Sir Charles, his wife, Lady Claire, and their dim-witted son, learn that the estate and all its vast holding will go to the Earl's mad son Jack. Also on hand for the reading of the will are the local parish's lame-brain bishop and the late Earl's trusting butler, Tucker, who receives twenty thousand pounds and proceeds to spend the remainder of the film tipsy and sharp-tongued.

Jack returns home dressed like a rock-opera Christ in a flowing robe, shoulder length blond hair, a blond beard, and heavy red make-up. He rambles nonsensically about being Christ, demands to be called J.C. or "by any of the nine billions names of God," and puts a fifteen foot wooden cross in the sitting room where he retires to during moments of undue mental persecution. His family immediately plots to do away with him, especially after he dances the "Varsity Drag" and insults some provincial women who come by to ask him to speak at a town meeting. They fell upon a plan when Jack announces he was once married to the fictional heroine of Dumas, Our Lady of the Camellias. Sir Jack schemes to revive this legendary woman in the form of his mistress, Grace, an actress in a nearby town, and have Jack marry her. The intent being Jack would marry and probably be recommitted. His psychiatrist, Dr. Herder, is oppossed to the idea, but is detained long enough by the amourous advances of Lady Claire. Jack's naive sputtering make one convert: Grace, his wife-to-be and they marry. Soon she's pregnant as Dr. Herder desperately plots to abort Sir Charles' plot through making Jack sane. On the eve of the child's birth, the Doctor pairs him with her deluded contemporary Messiah, McKyle, an electric Old Testament version, and Jack is shocked into recognizing his identity. As his son is born, Jack speaks the words "I am Jack" and begins his return to sanity.

Peter O'Toole as the mad Crazy Jack and Arthur Lowe as his family's manservant in THE RULING CLASS.

Despite Dr. Herder's reassurances, Jack's sanity is only temporary. The "Jack" Jack becomes is the epitome of evil: Jack The Ripper. The year for him is 1888, Victorian repression is in full bloom, Jack now sees his warped mission as cleansing London of its moral decay of exemplified by prostitutes. He murders his aunt thinking she's a cockney whore and lets his drunken butler, who the police discover is a Bolshevik, take the blame. Dr. Herdler is grief-stricken at Claire's death and goes insane, as does Sir Charles. They are put into various asylums as Jack is to be accepted into the House of Lords. He speaks to that archaic and impotent body about the horrible permissiveness of their time and receives a rousing chorus of "Onward Christian Soldiers" from them. Jack then becomes the Ripper again and murders Grace. The film ends with a helicopter shot of the moonlit manor and Jack's primal scream immediately followed by his son's first spoken sentence: "I am Jack." The inference is clear, the madness will be carried on for generations to come.

What makes The Ruling Class remind you of a dazzingly witty and bright acquaintance who stays too long and bores the hell out of you is its inability to extend the visual gags and word games it uses so well. Throughout they are funny and spontaneous, but double-edged: they lead nowhere. The humor has a feigned validity; sure you laugh: the musical numbers come with unexpected joy, the jokes are clever, the satire sensibly bitter, but it has no point. The playwright keeps letting his sharp tongue intrude upon his story then tries to play catch-me-up in the elongated and confusing denouement. At least four times the film seemed to come to an end for no other reason than two hours having passed. All the thematic ideas were placed in limbo at the onset, and a very wild and entertaining place it is, but it's also one you tire of quickly. I overheard a young man tell a friend he thought The Ruling Class great because there wasn't one extraneous moment. When pressed he defined it not being extraneous as the actors all having funny lines and playing their parts well. If this were the case then Neil Simon would be our greatest living playwright. We come away from the film feeling swindled, taken in a gracious way, but taken nonetheless.

The impression is that this material was funnier and sweeter on the stage where the multitude of theatrical devices made considerably more sense. Here it's jumbled. The film is an expansion of the play, but never does it hide the claustrotrophic feeling that it is a photographed stage play. The camera creeps about the actors like an unwanted intruder. They need the prosnescium arch to frame themselves in and the best moments of the film are those which most resemble a play. When the family gathers in the sitting room and the one-liners fly or the characters break into their absurd musical numbers, the film is devistatingly good but it never makes it as a movie. When it attempts to be cinematic it seems like outtakes from a poor man's Marx Brother's comedy. We realize that Jack's final victory rests upon his domination of his foes, but must we see them in the various asylums they are placed? These images are peculiarly unfunny and unoriginal, all blow-ups of their former stage selves. Where before it was implied that madness was everywhere, all we need to do is focus properly, here the focus is in too tight. Few recent films collapse as noticeably as The Ruling Class does. You literally wish it was over.

The film has some beautiful moments. O'Toole breaks into various musical comedy and opera parodies and the use of these conventions makes a good deal of sense in lieu of Jack's madness. Musical comedy deals in the imaginary world as does Jack believing he is Christ. The jokes are sharp, although based on a anything-I-can-say-I-can-make-funnier premise, and the midsection is entertaining and energetically performed. Peter O'Toole has been hailed by some as the Messiah of film acting by a number of critics, yet the script limits him to burlesque extremes. As J.C. he throws his lines off, and some of them probably should have been thrown away, with naive exuberance and then plays Jack the Ripper to his zealous hilt. He is good for what he's asked to do, but he never seems more than an archtype of insanity. The best performances are the supporting ones of Arthur Lowe as the buller, and Alastar Sims as the vicar. They can do with a single expression what Peter Barnes couldn't do with a two-and-one-half hour script. What's wrong is The Ruling Class evaporates before your eyes. What began so promisingly dissipates after an hour and becomes torturously heavy-handed. Brevity is inherent to any artistic work. Short is long in the best possible sense and The Ruling Class is proof of that doctrine.

They Call Me MISTER Tibbs (1970), Sidney Poitier's career has been in a steady decline over the past few years and this film is a good reason why. Here he attempts to capatalize on the character he played in In The Heat Of The Night, now the police detective is in San Francisco investigating a murder. Be elsewhere. Channel 3.

Diabolique (1954). Our pick for the film of the week. "I only sought to amuse myself and the little child who sleeps in all our hearts--the child who hides her head under the bedcovers and begs 'Daddy, Daddy, frighten me.' " This was the way Henri-Georges Clouzot described his reasoning behind this thriller. It's an extremely perverse story of planned murder set in a French boarding school. With Simone Signoret and Vera Clouzot as the conspirers and Paul Meurisse as their intended victim. Thinking about it makes one scared. Channel 3.

The Advocates. Presidential politics and the economy: how well has President Nixon fared in curbing prices and unemployment? The forum centers on disagreements between the Republican incumbent and Senator McGovern on wage-price controls, tax structure and Government spending. United Auto Workers president Leonard Woodcock speaks for McGovern. The advocates are Harvard professor Alan Dershowitz and Atlanta attorney John T. Marshall. Third of five shows focusing on campaign issues. Channel 57.

International Performance. An evening of Tchaikovsky and Wagner, courtesy of French television (ORTF). The concert opens with Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, performed by Martha Argerich; her husband Charles Dutoit conducts the ORTF orchestra. Their interpretation of this alternately sweeping, tenderly lyrical work, is available on record. Also, from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," the "Liebestod" (Love Death), a symphonic piece woven from the poignant lament, that closes the opera. George Sebastian conducts. Channel 57.

The Legend of Lylah Clare (1968). A film with nearly every imaginable fault. Misconceived, poorly acted, dumbly directed; it's not even campy as intended. Sort of a missing chapter from Myra Breckinridge, with Kim Novak playing a Harlow-like Thirties star whose rise and fall is chronicled amidst a bizarre Holywood crowd. Rubbish, and not even funny at that. With Peter Finch, poor man, Ernest Borgnine, ugh, Directed by Robert Aldrich of Baby Jane fame. Channel 3.

Tchaikovsky In The Cage

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy's direction, will appear for a single concert at Curry Hicks Cage, UMass at 8 p.m., next Thursday, Oct. 19. This event marks the first of five concerts on the 1972/73 Celebrity Series.

The Philadelphia Orchestra ranks as one of the world's great symphonic ensembles and is known and respected as a result of consistently high level performances and recordings. Mr. Ormandy is currently celebrating his 37th year as conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Prior to his direction, the Orchestra was nurtured by Leopold Stokowski, who was music director and conductor for the preceding 25 seasons. Under these two craftsmen, the Orchestra developed what has commonly been called "the Philadelphia tone," a lush string tone, and outstanding wind and brass choirs. Philadelphia Orchestra members have been called "those fabulous Philadelphians" for years.

At left, Eugene Ormandy. At right, The Philadelphia Orchestra. Mr. Ormandy will lead the orchestra in a program of Tchaikovsky, Beethoven, and Vaughn Williams next week on campus.

The Philadelphia Orchestra's 1972-73 season marks Eugene Ormandy's 37th year on the podium of The Philadelphia Orchestra, a record unequaled by any living conductor of any other major orchestra. When the maestro celebrated his 72nd birthday anniversary in November of 1971, he had spent half his life with the Orchestra. Ormandy, born in Budapest in 1899, entered the Budapest Royal Academy of Music at five as a child prodigy violinist, receiving his professor's diploma at the age of seventeen. Between concert tours, he taught at the State Conservatory. He came to the United States in 1921 as a solo violinist. Mr. Ormandy performed and conducted in New York, becoming an American citizen in 1927. In 1930 he directed his first concerts with the New York Philharmonic and also conducted The Philadelphia Orchestra during three summer performances at Robin Hood Dell in Philadephia's Fairmount Park. Ormandy's first performance in the city's Academy of Music took place on October 25, 1931, when he was called upon to substitute for ailing guest conductor Arturo Toscanini.

Music Director of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra between 1931 and 1936, he was appointed Music Director and Conductor of The Philadelphia Orchestra in 1936. With this Orchestra he has toured Western and Eastern Europe on four occasions since World War II, has traveled many thousands of miles throughout the United States and has toured both Latin America and Japan. As a guest conductor, he has led every major European orchestra and has also appeared in Australia during World War II, and in South America. He and the Orchestra are represented in the cataloguebynearlyfourhundred long-playing recordings, many of which are currently available. Among the countless tributes and honors bestowed upon The Philadelphia Orchestra's legendary maestro is the highest civilian award of the United States Government, the Presidential Medal of Freedom, which President Nixon presented to him in the Academy of Music on January 24, 1970. The occasion for the award was the Academy of Music's 113th anniversary and the 70th birthdays of Ormandy and his orchestra. He is also the recipient of the highest award the Austrian government can bestow upon a civilian, the Honor Cross for Arts and Sciences, First Class. He also received the coveted Philadelphia Award, the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts' First Award for Excellence and the National Recognition Award of the Freedoms Foundation in 1970. Mr. Ormandy is a Commander of the French Legion of Honor, a Knight of the Order of Dannebrog, First Class, a Knight of the Order of the White Rose of Finland, a holder of the medals of the Mahler and Bruckner Societies, and has been awarded honorary doctorate degrees from seventeen major universities and schools of music.

The Oct. 19 program will include works by Beethoven, Vaughan Williams and Tchaikovsky. Tickets are available at $5 for the general public and $2.50 for full-time UMass undergraduates. Season subscriptions to the five events in the Celebrity Series are also available. Following the concert by The Philadephia Orchestra, the series will continue with the American debut of the young, Israeli pianist, Daniel Adni; a recital by the gifted, young California cellist, Christine Walevska; the fully staged performance of Benjamin Britten's opera "Albert Herring" sung in English by The Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre; and a concert by The Boston Philharmonia Orchestra and the University Chorale and soloists under John Nelson. Season subscriptions at $15 ao the general public and $7.50 to full-time UMass undergraduates may be ordered by contacting the Fine Arts Council, UMass, Amherst, 125 Herter Hall. Telephone 545-0202.

8 PM

Sonny and Cher. Jimmy Durante and Gilbert O'Sullivan who, tahanfully, will not sing, "Alone Again, Naturally." Channel 3.

Ghost Story. Carolyn Jones, of the The Addams Family, gets the spooks this time when she plays a woman trapped between reality and a nightmare. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

10

Banyon. Robert Forster as a Thirties private eye. Some nice period settings and feel, and, of course, Joan Blondell. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

They Call Me MISTER Tibbs (1970), Sidney Poiter's career has been in a steady decline over the past few years and this film is a good reason why. Here he attempts to capatalize on the character he played in In The Heat Of The Night, now the police detective is in San Francisco investigating a murder. Be elsewhere. Channel 3.

Diabolique (1954). Our pick for the film of the week. "I only sought to amuse myself and the little child who sleeps in all our hearts--the child who hides her head under the bedcovers and begs 'Daddy, Daddy, frighten me.' " This was the way Henri-Georges Clouzot described his reasoning behind this thriller. It's an extremely perverse story of planned murder set in a French boarding school. With Simone Signoret and Vera Clouzot as the conspirers and Paul Meurisse as their intended victim. Thinking about it makes one scared. Channel 3.

Saturday

The World Series; channels 4, 20, 22, 30.

CBS Children's Film Festival: "The Yellow Slippers" (1961). The story of a young boy who becomes apprentice to the master sculpture of Krakow in medieval Poland.

8 PM

All In The Family. Archie learns his visiting niece is going dancing with a black man. Channel 3.

Kung Fu. The debut of a new television hero about a peaceful Chinese-American priest who has learned a form of lethal defense called Kung Fu. The TV movie had a following; with David Carradine. Channel 40.

Playhouse New York. The many faces of "Medea." Excerpts from the 1969 film by Pier Pasolini starring opera diva Maria Callas as the tragic Greek heroine. Also an examination of how this heroine has been interpreted by other actresses and a discussion by Stacey Keach of the film and the original text. Channel 57.

Actor's Choice--Gertrude Stein. Explore the rhythms and rhyme of Gertrude Stein as Aline MacMahon and Kim Hunter read from her works. Included are excerpts from the novel "Three Lives" (1909), about domestic servants in Connecticut, and "Wars I Have Seen" (1945), a collection of anecdotes. Channel 57.

10

The Sixth Sense. Patty Duke meets Jack the Ripper. Channel 40.

Saturday Movies.

The Devil's Brigade (1968). William Holden, Cliff Robertson, and Vince Edwards win World War Two. Channels 4, 20, 22, 30.

11:30

The Producers (1968). A wild, black farce about the plan to produce a flop musical about the life of Hitler and take off with a healthy share of the investments. They sign a LSD-taking actor to play Hitler and have a goose-stepping chorus line singing "Springtime For Hitler" to insure their failure. Some beautiful bits, and Wilder is just superb, but often straining for laughs. Channel 3.

The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (1948). Long held to be John Huston's masterpiece, one of the best American films since the Second World War. Adapted from the story by B. Traven's, it concerns the search for gold and the conflict amongst three prospectors. They are played superbly by Humphrey Bogart, Walter Huston, and Tim Holt. Channel 30.

Sunday

Bullwinkle and Rocky the Squirrel. Channel 40.

1 PM

The World Series. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

5 PM

Tim Holt, Humphrey Bogart, and Walter Huston in John Huston's The Treasure of the Sierra Madre tomorrow night on Channel 30.

7 PM

Zoom. Boston's Children's Theater is the subject of a film; performers are seen in rehearsal. Other features: how to catch a fish with your hands; "I've Been Working on the Railroad," sung Dixieland-style; dancing under the limbo stick; a spoof about putting up a tent; "The Night the Bathtub Overflowed," a comic reading. Channel 57.

7:30

Just Generation. A discussion on should prostitution, gambling and pornography be considered crimes? Attorney Howard Miller and a panel of high school students discuss the differences between immorality and illegality. Street crimes (murder and assault) are the subject of some revealing statistics. Channel 57.

M*A*S*H. The movie made a situation comedy. Channel 3.

8:30

Columbo. A generally entertaining police drama with Peter Falk, this week featuring Ray Milland as a man behind a kidnapping plan. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

Masterpiece Theater. "The Battle of Waterloo". The third portion of the television adaption of "Vanity Fair" which features the battle and Becky's reception of an illicit love letter. With Susan Hampshire. Channel 57.

10

Firing Line. Sex education--how much should your children learn, how soon and who is best qualified to teach them? Tonight's guests are Dr. Mary Calderone, chairman of the Sex Information and Education Council; Dr. Joel Fort (author of "The Pleasure Seekers: The Drug Crisis, Youth and Society"); and sociology professor Ernest van den Haag. Channel 57.

9 PM

The Odd Couple (1968). Probably the best filmed version of a Neil Simon comedy. The situation is a case of mismatched roommates. Two men become estranged from their wives and move into an apartment together. They bicker more than if they were married as one is near neurotic about cleanliness and the other is the epitome of a slob. They drive each other crazy. Well-performed by Jack Lemmon as Felix and Walter Mattheau as Oscar. Directed by Gene Saks, who also filmed The Last Of The Red Hot Lovers. Channel 40.

11:30

The Black Widow (1954). A suspense drama about the mystery surrounding the death of a Broadway hopeful. A cut above the usual, a fine cast led by Ginger Rogers, Van Heflin, and George Raft. Channel 40.

1 PM

World Series. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

Laugh-In. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

Profile. "The First Edition: Tell It All." Backstage and on the road with the rock group First Edition, filmed in September 1971. The first half of the show is a cinema verite study, as Kenny Rogers shares his thoughts on the group's personalities...comic Terry Williams; Kin Vassy, a talented guitarist (Williams and Vassy have since left the group); Mickey Jones, philosophically the straightest Edition; cheerful Mary Arnold; and John Hobbs, pianist and most recent Edition. The second half hour follows the group on a 10-day tour of colleges in North and South Carolina. Included are snatches of songs..."Tell It All, Brother," "I Believe in Music," "Just Dropped In" and "What Are You Going To Do?"; if you can take it. Channel 57.

Football. The Packers and Lions. Channel 40.

Boboquivari. Music special with Rambling Jack Eliott. Channel 57.

10

Country Music Association Awards. A night at the Grand Ole Opry, with Glen Cambell, Merle Haggard, and a host of country music's most popular stars. Channel 3.

Move Over Darling (1963). The remake of the great Forties comedy My Favorite Wife is best remembered as the abortive final film of Marilyn Monroe. After her death Twentieth Century Fox resumed production on the project changing the title from Something's Got To Give to Move Over Darling and changing the cast. The film was hardly worth the bother. The plot concerns the return of a man's first wife on the eve of his second marriage. With James Garner, Polly Bergen, and Doris Day. Channel 3.

Cool Million (1972). A world premiere of a prospective television series starring James Farentino as a private eye who collects one million dollars for each case he takes. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

11:30

1:15

The Story of G.I. Joe (1945). One of the great World War Two films, adapted from Ernie Pyle's journals. Robert Mitchum in his first and best role, with Burgess Meredith. Beautifully photographed and honestly and sensitively performed, even the sentimentality fits. Channel 3.

Tuesday

8:15 PM

The World Series. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

Dateline America. Vietnam veterans recall their experiences in "Vietnam Diary," an assemblage of interviews, photographs and slides. The eight vets include a survivor of the battle for Khe Sanh (April 1968), an airman who assembled bombs, an Army musician, a Navy surgeon, a black Marine, and a lab technician who viewed the fighting from his barracks roof in Saigon. Produced by WGBH in Boston. Channel 57.

Tuesday's Movies:

Goodnight My Love (1972). A made-for-television movie which pairs Richard Boone and Michael Dunn as an inept private eye and his dwarf sidekick. The film attempts to evoke the memories of the mid-Forties Bogart melodramas. Channel 40.

Sandcastles (1972). A contemporary love story with two twists. The first is that she's a violinist and he's a ghost. The second is that the film was made on video tape. With Herschel Bernardi and Bonnie Bedelia. Channel 3.

I'm All Right Jack (1959). The classic British satire on English labor relations. With Peter Sellers, Terry Thomas. Channel 3.

Wednesday

8:15

The World Series. Channels 4, 20, 22, and 30.

10

Julie Andrews. With Steve Lawrence. Someone stopped me in the street to ask me if I had caught this show, I hadn't but from his exuberance it's quite some hour, that is if you can take Julie Andrews. I never could. Channel 40.

Wednesday's Movies:

8:30

In Concert

AMHERST FOLKLORE CENTER

David Bromberg & Band, Tuesday (10/17) 7:30 & 10:00, Amherst Follore Center, $2.00.

This is a treat. One of Dylan's favorite session men is on his own and is really good in concert. His shows here last year were definite successes, as he showed to be an excellent guitarist, singer and showman.

Coming up are: John Herald & Friends, Oct. 20 & 21, Center, $2.00. Jeremy Steig, Oct. 27 & 28, $2.00. This great jazz flutist will be here for two nights and should be stunning. He's one of the best. Robbie Basho, Nov. 3 & 4. $2.00. This intriguing and far-reaching artist will bring his soaring voice and guitar here for two nights. His Eastern sound seems a little like Shangrila in musical form.

Jim Kweskin, Nov. 5. The old jug bander has been through a lot, but he's always been able to sing and play.

FAT

Oct. 13, Arts Gallery, South Deerfield. Fat is back, and so is the Arts Gallery. This local band had an album two years ago on RCA, little since.

DAVE MASON

Dave Mason & Friends, Oct. 20, John M. Greene Hall, Smith College, Northampton. $4.00 & 3.50. Dave Mason has of course been in and out of the Traffic crew, and has had a spotty career since then. Live, he's very good. Also Dave Mason & Friends, Oct. 27, Butova Gym, A.I.C. $2.50. Tickets at door or Campus Center Student Activities Office.

JETHRO TULL

Jethro Tull, Monday (10/16), Springfield Center, $5.50. One of the most original and most exciting live bands around, Jethro Tull have gotten to Hockey Rink size audiences in their latest "Thick As A Brick Tour". Should be excellent.

CABARET

A superior film musical the best of the genre in twenty years. The film sets a love story between a young cabaret performer Sally Bowles and a British student against the turbulence of Berlin in the early 1930's. Vastly entertaining and beautifully performed by Liza Minelli as Sally Bowles, Michael York, and Joel Grey as the Master of Ceremonies. The musical numbers, by John Kander and Fred Ebb, all take place within the cabaret. Impressively directed by Bob Fosse. Wednesday, Academy of Music, Northampton.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE (1971)

A hard edged satire with the effect of being flogged by men from consciousness raising group. Your sin is your sexism and your misery is your reward. This puritan exercise explores the sexual lives of two men, from college days at Amherst in the Forties to the present, and is grimly and heavily pounded home by cartoonist-screenwriter Jules Feiffer. Director Mike Nichols is quite adept at making that cartoonist's one-dimensional characters entertaining victims of their own social devices. They are engagingly portrayed by Jack Nicholson and Arthur Garfunkel as the college buddies and Ann Margret and Candice Bergen as their respective sex objects. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 10/13, 7 and 9:30.

THE CLOWNS (1971)

Frederico Fellini made this ninety minute documentary for Italian television following his Satyricon. His films abound in circus imaginery, here he looks explicity at the subject, its origins in life and the professions present day decline. A delightful film. In Italian, subtitles. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

EVERYTHING YOU EVER WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX...BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK

Six questions from David Rueben's maddening best seller are given an intensive comic treatment by Woody Allen. Each of the skits opens with a title card ("What Happens During Ejaculation?") and Allen proceeds with a sharpness that many have felt tasteless. He probably would have been an errand boy during the Inquisition. Each skit seems a satire on a particular film genre: the futuristic fantasy the Fifties, sci-fi film, the Antonioni films, etc. Allen is a maddening funny man and his film is best when he is disarmingly cool about incredibly ridiculous situations. Gene Wilder, amoured by a sheep, lovingly carrying her through a hotel lobby; Lou Jacobi in drag conquettishly dancing in front of a mirror or Allen himself as one tiny sperm having an identity crisis during the final moments of ejaculation. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

Francois Truffaut's interesting yet finally unsettling film version about a society where books are outlawed and burned. Oskar Werner plays a fireman whose job is burning books and Julie Christie plays a dual role, one of Werner's shallow wife, and other a member of the book reading underground which Werner becomes part of. Beautifully photographed, especially the final moments in the woods, although the story itself could have been better paced. Unlike any of Truffaut's other films which makes it for many an altogether unsatisfying film, still better than most science fiction films and ultimately quite moving. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 10/14, 8.

FELLINI SATYRICON 1969)

Fellini's journey through antiquity, staggering visual experience. Adapted from the first century Roman novel by Petronius, the film concerns the exploits of three bisexual boys in Rome before Christ. Fellini has said he hoped to use all the dream imaginery he had ever wished to film. The images are memorably bizarre. Spoken in the original latin, it is a modern film master interpretation of a dead culture. Subtitled. Student Union Ballroom. Friday, 10/13, 7 and 9:30.

FLOAT LIKE A BUTTERFLY, STING LIKE A BEE

Directed by William Klein records the life of Muhammed Ali from his celebrated victory over Sonny Liston in February, 1964 to the infamous rematch in Lewiston, Maine, when Liston was dispatched in the first round. Klein's film is more than a chronicle of a sport's figure, however, as it reveals the emergence of a cultural hero: "the prettiest, and the greatest, but also black, handsome, proud and witty". S.W. Student Center, Monday, 7:30.

FRITZ THE CAT

R. Crumb's satiric comic strip has been transformed into a biting, funny, gloriously entertaining and brilliantly executed cartoon satire. The story concerns concerns Fritz's wandering through the radical politics of the mid-Sixties, from his days at NYU through his dropping and alliance with radical Weather men in California. The film takes a healthy perspective on the counterculture while being a scathing, deliberately effective attack upon its lunatic fringe. The filmmakers have a rich ear for the clinches of the time and have fashioned them into a hilarious, pointed cartoon.

Amherst Cinema, Amherst

THE GARDEN OF THE FINZI—CONTINIS

Victoria DeSica's first major film in decades is this haunting, stunning essay on the tragedy of Jews in Fascist Italy. The story, based upon the semi-autobiographical novel by Giorgio Bassani, concerns how a middle class man finds himself involved with the decaying world of the Finzi-Continis, a rich aristocratic Italian family of landowners. He witnesses the languid, insular behavior of the family's two youngest children. The film makes a lite-like corrolation between their litestyle and Mussolini's half-hearted attempts to rid Italy of Jews, which were sufficient enough to wipe out the Finzi-Continis and all they stood for. Probably the most beautiful film of the year. Compassionately told and moving, with Deminique Sanda, and Helmut Berger. DeSica's best work since Two Women. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

HICKEY AND BOGGS

Robert Culp and Bill Cosby re-team for their first movie. It's a crime story with a good feel for its Los Angeles locale. Directed by Culp, the film has an insatiable appetite for violence. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE HIRED HAND

Peter Fonda's first directorial attempt is a most underrated film. It concerns the return of a prodigal husband to his wife and farm after a number of years' absence. He brings with him his equally hazy companion, with Fonda and Warren Oates. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 10/19, 7 and 9.

JOE KIDD

John Sturges has been a good director of strong melodramas, his "Bad Day At Black Rock" was one of the best films of social commentary of the Fifties. His latest film is somewhat disappointing: it's a somewhat languid Western, with Clint Eastwood. Academy of Music, Northampton.

THE LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT

Just remember, "It's only a movie, only a movie, only a movie..." and your only wasting your money, wasting your money, wasting your money. Trash. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE LAST RUN (1970)

George C. Scott, the bad-boy of the Oscars, gives a magnificent performance as an aging retired criminal in the great tradition of Bogart-Hemingway heroes. Scott takes on the task of transporting Tony Musante and his girlfriend Trish Van Devere across the border from France to Spain. Along the way Scott proves that he may be old but he still has what it takes (and he gives some of it to Ms. Van Devere whom he just recently married!) Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 10/15, 7 and 9:30.

MAJOR DUNDEE (1965)

Directed by Sam Peckinpah. Stars Charlton Heston, Richard Harris, James Colburn. Set during the closing months of the Civil War. Dundee (Heston) is an obsessed cavalry major who leads a force of renegades and rebels into Mexico in pursuit of a marauding Apache chief. Harris plays a Confederate officer and one-time friend of Dundee's who joins up with the regiments but makes it clear that if the Apaches don't kill Dundee he will. Probably Peckinpah's best film. Amherst Folklore Center, Tuesday, 10/17, 7:30.

MEDEA (1971)

A dull and emotionless attempt at a recreation of the classic story of a powerful and commanding woman, and the many lives she affects. Emphasis here is on the visual aspects of the film, and while some of the cinematic tricks are interesting enough, the movie lacks passion and depth. Directed by Pier Paolo Pasolini and starring Maria Calls. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Monday and Tuesday, 10/15, 10/16, 8.

MILLHOUSE (1971)

Emile de Antonio (Point Of Order) made this hilarious, sharply opinionated documentary about our President. A ninety minute look at the President which makes up for its dishonesty with laughs. Mahar Auditorium, Friday, 1/13, 7 and 9.

PERFORMANCE (1970)

An often stunning but ultimately vacant and vague metaphysical tale about role playing in the criminal and kinky London underworld. James Fox plays a sadistic mobster on the run who hides out in the empty, decaying mansion of a former rock star (Mick Jagger). Like it or not, he finds himself caught up in the psychological games they play. The film splits in half: original print only concerned itself with the Jagger mansion section but upon bad previews this portion was trimly edited and an additional opening sequence was added where James Fox escapes the mob. Curiously enough, there is a coherence, and a direct parody of parts: early in the film Fox attends a meeting of mob chieftans which is repeated in his acid trip with Jagger as the cheiftan singing Jagger at that moment is the agile, mesmerizing performer he is said to be on stage. Much nonsense in the end.

Mahar, Saturday, 10/14, 7, 9, 11.

THE RULES OF THE GAME

Directed by Jean Renoir (1939) - In the 1972 poll of film critics conducted by Sight and Sound Renoir's masterpeice was voted the second greatest film of all time, topped only by Citizen Kane. This stinging appraisal of the French leisure class before WWII was long banned in that country by a community too soft-skinned for Renoir's criticism. The great Renoir mordantly satirizes the social and sexual mores of a decadent society near collapse. In this unfeeling world, the game, like that of the hunt, moves inevitably toward death. Thompson 104, Sunday, 10/15.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE-FIVE

Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s college classic was obediently transformed by George Roy Hill into a sleek, lifeless, and shallow film which time trips decades with ease, but never approaches the interesting implications about time and space. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY (1968)

Unquestionably one of the finest films of recent years and the best space epic ever. Stanley Kubrick's twelve million dollar Modern Odyssey is the surrealistic journey of Man's evolution, from Monkey to Man to Superman. The film is visually the most complex in recent years, a cosmic Marienbad, and the special effects are stunning beyond belief. It is loosely structured in three parts with more along thematic lines than a linear plot, yet is never boring, containing perhaps the most interesting pop philosophy ever filmed. The music score, ranging from Richard Strauss to Ligeti to Johann Strauss, is one of positive brilliance; the script is downbeat black humor, and the direction is impeccable Kubrick, visually complete and beautifully done by America's finest director. In four-track stereo and ultrapanavision, Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

WHILE THE CITY SLEEPS (1954)

Almost a variation on Lang's masterpiece M, John Barrymore, Jr., in the role of the killer. The brutal sex murders are terrorizing the city and the top reporters of the New York Sentinal compete for the editorship of the paper by trying to solve the crimes. With Dana Andrews, George Sanders, Ida Lupino, Vincent Price. Next to Fury, Lang thinks very highly of this film. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 10/15, 8.

Letters To The Editor

About WMUA 'Interference'

To The Editor:

In reply to the article entitled "WMUA-Orchard Hill Problem Resolved", we would like to clarify a few apparent misconceptions. Roy Perdue, president of Orchard Hill Area Government, said that at least forty persons have written letters complaining of interference. WMUA has received only four such letters. Where have the other letters been sent? If Roy is in possession of these interference complaints, he claims he's not, he is perpetuating the problem.

There is not interference actually being transmitted, as Mr. Perdue implies. The Federal Communications Commission is satisfied that our transmitter is not at fault. The FCC states in its bulletin entitled "Interference to Audio Devices" that:

Since the equipment manufacturers do not design audio units...to operate in the presence of high signal intensities encountered in some locations, additional treatment...is needed to reject unwanted signals. The Commission cannot practically give any protection from interfering signals to these home audio units. The only practical procedure...is to modify the equipment....Regardless of the quality of the unit, special treatment to it for elimination of strong unwanted signals is essential in some localities. (Underlining added.) As the FCC states, the only way to eliminate the problem is to modify the home equipment, this is exactly what we have been doing. In short, there is nothing that can be done to our transmitting apparatus, which operates within FCC regulations, to correct the problem.

The statement that WMUA's transmitter should have been located on the Library or on the Graduate Research Center was poorly-informed because the planning and engineering study for the transmitter was done when both of these buildings were nothing but paper on an architect's desk.

We recognize the problem, and are willing to help the people on the hill. Although the FCC states that it is the responsibility of the home equipment owner to solve the problem when it can be proven that the transmitting apparatus operates within regulations, we are cognizant of our commitment, and will alleviate the interference problem. It must be understood that we do not have the unlimited resources Mr. Perdue mentioned. We have an engineering staff of two and there is no money in our budget specifically allocated for this purpose.

Those of you who are experiencing the problem, we must have the specifics. Send a letter to the Chief Engineer at WMUA detailing the extent of the problem, and the brand and model number of the equipment involved.

Sincerely,
Gary McAuliffe

Heating Problem

To The Editor:

This letter is directed to the men concerned with heating at the Physical Plant and the people of the Housing Office. We, and others of the 7th floor, Noah Webster House, would like to bring to the attention of the University the atrocious heating conditions that exist here and the obstinate and sluggish treatment that these conditions have received from the Physical Plant.

For the past 4 days (going on 5), we have tried in vain to receive heat in our rooms. Despite continuous pleas to the Physical Plant throughout this period, the temperature continues to hover about 60 F. It has taken repeated telephone calls in the night to get anyone here to look at the heating system; unfortunately, looking appears to be the complete extent of their work. After all the effort it takes to get a workman up here, he looks at the radiators, tells us he doesn't know what's wrong, and leaves. Tonight, two of these gentlemen refused to do anything after coming up, saying that there was nothing that could be done.

Granted it is not yet winter when temperatures reach sub-zero, we will certainly survive for now. But, will we be allowed to freeze until then because the Physical Plant people simply can't be bothered by our little problem?

Doesn't it make more sense to fix this problem now before the snows turn this cubicle the University jokingly refers to as a room into an ice cube? Doesn't it make sense not to antagonize residents over a simple maintenance problem that could be remedied if someone would only take the time? We only ask for what we've paid for.

Sincerely,
Kevin McConnell

Missed Fellini

To the person who writes Campus Center Information:

I have just returned from one of the most frustrating evenings I have spent at this university. On Monday night I went to see Felini's La Strada, and being a Felini fan, I purchased a ticket for three of his films. The other two were scheduled to be shown on Tuesday and Friday. La Strada was shown Monday at 8:00 in the C.C. Aud., so therefore I assumed Tuesday night's film, 8-1/2, would also be shown at that time and place. When I arrived at the C.C. Aud. at 8:00, there was no sign of any movie. In desperation, I made the fatal mistake of looking at the C.C. information sheet. It stated that the film was playing 7:00 and 9:30 in the S.U.B. since it was already 7:30, I decided to wait. It was only two hours. At 9:15 I went to the S.U.B. and discovered that the film was in progress, having started at 8:00. In conclusion, I wish to be put on record as saying that the person responsible is an asshole, and I hope they rot in Hell. P.S. I would like a refund of 33-1/3 cents.

To Mr. Estelle

To The Editor:

Rather than argue with Mr. Estelle, I would suggest that instead of accepting everything he reads as gospel, he should try to think about what he reads, and also to expand his reading, because a nut that turns only to the right, or one that turns only to the left, is useless.

Since Mr. Estelle refuses to see anything outside of the area between the tip of his nose and his right shoulder, I admit I've been wasting my time.

Since I have better things to do than to exchange letters with Mr. Estelle, I will let him have the last word. I only hope that someday he expands his narrow-minded attitude. I also hope he continues to write letters, as they add humor to the Letters section.

P.S. Bob, the "Horst Wessel" is a great marching song for a campaign parade.

Editorial Points

It's no wonder the Student Senate wants to abolish the Rhetoric requirement. Why should the whole campus have to suffer when in one Wednesday night the Senate generates enough rhetoric for the whole campus?

Speaking of rhetoric, just wait till the Governor goes on stage at the meeting of State College trustees Saturday. That oughta be a real winner.

Anyone who has two tickets to Saturday's football game that he/she isn't using, please bring 'em to the Collegian office. We need them for a friend (leave them in the Editorial mailbox.)

Save The Children?

To The Editor:

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT BEFORE VOTING THIS NOVEMBER OR BEFORE YOU THROW THAT RIGHT AWAY. (Are you listening, George Meany?)

"Afterthoughts on Napalm Drop"
written by Barbara Beidel, age 12

Then there was the flash
silver and gold
Silver and gold
Silver birds flying.
Golden water raining
The rice ponds blazed with new water.
The jungle burst into gold and sent up little birds of fire.
Little animals with fur aflame.
Then the children flamed
Running--their clothes flying like fiery kites.
Screaming--their screams
Dying as their faces seared.
The women's baskets burned on their heads.
The men's boats blazed on the rice waters.
Then the rain came
A rag, fire black, fluttered.
A curl of smoke loose from a rice stem.
The forest lay singed and seared.
A hut crumbled.
And all was still.
Listen, Americans,
Listen clear and long.
The children are screaming in the jungle of Haiphong.

'Ask Yourself'

To The Editor:

Well, the Nixon administration has thrown the monkey wrench into works again. General Electric was all set to make a deal with France to cooperate on building a ten ton jet engine, a project which would have created thousands of jobs for the huge numbers of currently unemployed technicians and at the same time could have brought millions of dollars in foreign money which would have helped to slow the depletion of the gold reserve. Apparently, the Nixon administration is afraid that if France were to get this engine the United States would become a second rate power. This must be so, of course, because dear old Dick would do everything in his power to help relieve unemployment, wouldn't he? And the only thing that would stop him would be if that help was dangerous or bad for the country, wouldn't it? That or money under the table from Pratt and Whitney, the nation's other large producer of aircraft engines. We wouldn't want anything bad for them, now would we? After all, they've had a near monopoly over the aircraft engine building business for almost twenty years, until GE started producing them, and it would be terrible if we allowed GE to get a more even foothold in the business, right? And all that money that was probably flying under the table. Nixon needs some more of that for his campaign, doesn't he? Why not? After all, it's only a difference of a few thousand more people with jobs. Who will that hurt?

Ask yourself that. The answer is US.

Tillona Concerned

To The Editor:

Thank you for the fine article announcing my appointment in Tuesday's Collegian. It did, however, have one unforeseen consequence. The next day when I got to my office I found the following notes from my secretary: "Is your official title Associate Provost for Women's Affairs, Associate Provost for Minority Affairs, or Associate Provost?"

My official title is Associate Provost. Further, Vice Chancellor Gluckstern's Provost Memorandum of September 19 announcing my appointment clearly indicates my working responsibility: "Associate Provost Tillona will become involved in several areas of responsibility within the Provost's Office, including the concern for improving the status and representation of women and minorities in all roles on campus (Affirmative Action)."

I think that this statement not only identifies my views and those of Vice Chancellor Gluckstern, but also accurately reflects Chancellor Bromery's statement to the Faculty Senate this spring. However, I wish to state that it is my intention to carry my concerns for the needs of women and minorities into all areas of responsibility connected with my new position.

Sincerely,
Professor Zina Tillona
Associate Provost

Anti-U.S. Sentiment Grows In Greece

ATHENS (AP) - A wave of anti-Americanism is gaining momentum in Greece and U.S. servicemen are being blamed for it.

The Greek press, careful in its criticism of Greece's allies since the army seized power in 1967 and suspended parliamentary rule, is aiming barbs at the thousands of U.S. military personnel stationed here.

Two incidents in which servicemen allegedly beat up taxi drivers in disputes over fares have gained wide prominence.

What many Greeks are upset about is that in one of the taxi incidents, the Greek Justice Ministry waived the right to try the American and judged the case insignificant. The Greek taxi drivers union then threatened not to carry American servicemen, but rescinded the threat after the government applied pressure.

Newspapers reacted with sharp editorials criticizing the government's decision not to prosecute and questioning the wisdom of granting further military facilities to the United States.

Drunken GI's

Several U.S. servicemen have also upset Athenians by appearing on the city's main streets rowdy and drunk. Many Greeks are afraid to file official complaints about such incidents for fear of being called anti-American by Greek police.

Many Greeks are now taking a dim view of the latest American invasion of their country.

The Greek government agreed earlier this year that Athens could become the home port for six destroyers of the U.S. Navy's 6th Fleet. Around 9,500 Americans are expected to settle in the Athens area within the next three years.

About 1,000 have arrived, bringing the total to about 8,000.

Drugs Feared

The conservative newspaper Estia, which usually supports the government, questioned the decision to permit the 6th Fleet units to home port here. The paper said the Americans would no doubt bring their "dirty dope habits with them."

It added that the government "should set a quota of how many blacks are among the visiting crews." It did not elaborate on this point.

Rents in the choice neighborhoods near Piraeus, Athens' port city, have shot up as much as 20 per cent. Landlords told Greek Tenants that if they were unhappy about the increases appartment-seeking Americans would quickly replace them.

Shopkeepers, however, expressed satisfaction and said the influx would undoubtedly help the economy. Several bars near the 6th Fleet landing have put out signs proclaiming: "U.S. Navy Bar, sailors welcome."

Legislature Paid Lobbyist

BOSTON (AP) - Records at the Massachusetts State House have revealed a new twist to the legislator-lobbyist relationship.

One lobbyist, while working at the State House during 1971 in behalf of six vested interests, was on the legislative payroll and received $1,000 for legal services rendered a special legislative commission.

Both House Speaker David M. Bartley, D—Holyoke, and Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D—Salem, expressed surprise when shown a letter bearing their signatures and the signatures of the commission chairmen, authorizing payment to William F. Coyne of Boston.

Coyne has been a lobbyist at the State House since the mid 1950s.

The letter, dated Jan. 2? 1971 and addressed to the state comptroller's office, said:

"This is to certify that a majority of the members of the Special Commission on County Cooperative Extension Program, created under Chapter 94 of the Resolves of 1965 and most recently revived and continued by Chapter ? of the Resolves of 1970, have voted to pay William F. Coyne, Esq., the sum of $1,000 for legal services."

Besides Harrington and Bartley, the letter was signed by the late Sen. Philip A. Quinn of Spencer, who was chairman of the commission, and Sen. John D. Barrus, R—Goshen, vice chairman.

According to other records, Coyne worked as a lobbyist during 1971 for the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority, the Massachusetts Port Authority, the Assigned Risk Brokers Assocation, the Penn Central Railroad, the United States Brewers Association and the Massachusetts Ready Mix Concrete Institute, Inc.

Asked if lobbyists often are put on legislative payrolls, Bartley said: "Never".

He did not remember the authorization letter and said: "To my knowledge, no one who is a registered lobbyist has ever been compensated by a legislative commission."

Harrington said he "would be amazed" if the William Coyne mentioned in the letter were the same man as the lobbyist.

Scholarships

A scholarship of $200.00 is being offered by the Hai-Guin Club of Boston to an Armenian-American student, born in the United States and residing in the state of Massachusetts and currently attending college in Massachusetts.

This award is granted to a Freshman toward his or her second semester tuition and is based on their scholastic ability and financial need. Applications must be in by December 1, 1972. Request for applications should be addressed to Mrs. Ellis Kupelian, 200 Trapelo Road, Belmont, Massachusetts 02178.

Parking Appeals Start

If your present parking assignment is a hardship, you may appeal your assignment at 103 Hampshire House, Office of the Coordinator of Parking, beginning October 16.

There are a limited number of parking spaces available. The reassignments will be made consistent with the present point system.

Shlomo Carlebach Performs Tuesday

Shlomo Carlebach will be performing original songs in the Hasidic folksong tradition Tuesday night in the Student Union ballroom. Tickets will be available at the door.

Shlomo Carlebach will be performing in concert in the Student Union Ballroom at 9:15 p.m. Tuesday. Shlomo sings mostly original songs in the Hasidic folksong tradition to words in the Hebrew prayer book.

He has the largest University following among artistic leaders in American Jewish culture.

Audiences become active participants in a concert-/-group meditation that has characterized Shlomo's performances over the last few years.

His insights into Hasidic folk literature have made him a frequent guest lecturer and performer at various colleges. Tickets will be on sale at the door for $1.00.

McGovern Canvassing Begins Tomorrow

Canvassing for George McGovern, the Democratic presidential candidate, will begin tomorrow, according to Mark Mawrence, the Chairman of the UMass McGovern committee.

All students who wish to canvass should show up in front of Stockbridge Hall, at the Campus Center Garage parking circle, at 8:30 a.m. The canvasses will be made in "danger" areas of Massachusetts, as well as in Connecticut. Transportation will be provided by McGovern supporters among the faculty. Students will return to campus around suppertime.

"Voting is not enough," Mawrence said. "The war will end only if George McGovern is elected, and George McGovern will be elected only if students show the same kind of active support that they showed for the marches on Washington and in the primaries."

More information can be obtained from the McGovern table in the Campus Center Concourse Monday-Friday.

ATHENS (AP) - A wave of anti-Americanism is gaining momentum in Greece and U.S. servicemen are being blamed for it.

The Greek press, careful in its criticism of Greece's allies since the army seized power in 1967 and suspended parliamentary rule, is aiming barbs at the thousands of U.S. military personnel stationed here.

Two incidents in which servicemen allegedly beat up taxi drivers in disputes over fares have gained wide prominence.

What many Greeks are upset about is that in one of the taxi incidents, the Greek Justice Ministry waived the right to try the American and judged the case insignificant. The Greek taxi drivers union then threatened not to carry American servicemen, but rescinded the threat after the government applied pressure.

Newspapers reacted with sharp editorials criticizing the government's decision not to prosecute and questioning the wisdom of granting further military facilities to the United States.

Drunken GI's

Several U.S. servicemen have also upset Athenians by appearing on the city's main streets rowdy and drunk. Many Greeks are afraid to file official complaints about such incidents for fear of being called anti-American by Greek police.

Many Greeks are now taking a dim view of the latest American invasion of their country.

The Greek government agreed earlier this year that Athens could become the home port for six destroyers of the U.S. Navy's 6th Fleet. Around 9,500 Americans are expected to settle in the Athens area within the next three years.

About 1,000 have arrived, bringing the total to about 8,000.

Drugs Feared

The conservative newspaper Estia, which usually supports the government, questioned the decision to permit the 6th Fleet units to home port here. The paper said the Americans would no doubt bring their "dirty dope habits with them."

It added that the government "should set a quota of how many blacks are among the visiting crews." It did not elaborate on this point.

Rents in the choice neighborhoods near Piraeus, Athens' port city, have shot up as much as 20 per cent. Landlords told Greek Tenants that if they were unhappy about the increases appartment-seeking Americans would quickly replace them.

Shopkeepers, however, expressed satisfaction and said the influx would undoubtedly help the economy. Several bars near the 6th Fleet landing have put out signs proclaiming: "U.S. Navy Bar, sailors welcome."

Legislature Paid Lobbyist

BOSTON (AP) - Records at the Massachusetts State House have revealed a new twist to the legislator-lobbyist relationship.

One lobbyist, while working at the State House during 1971 in behalf of six vested interests, was on the legislative payroll and received $1,000 for legal services rendered a special legislative commission.

Both House Speaker David M. Bartley, D—Holyoke, and Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D—Salem, expressed surprise when shown a letter bearing their signatures and the signatures of the commission chairmen, authorizing payment to William F. Coyne of Boston.

Coyne has been a lobbyist at the State House since the mid 1950s.

The letter, dated Jan. 2[illegible] 1971 and addressed to the state comptroller's office, said:

"This is to certify that a majority of the members of the Special Commission on County Cooperative Extension Program, created under Chapter 94 of the Resolves of 1965 and most recently revived and continued by Chapter [illegible] of the Resolves of 1970, have voted to pay William F. Coyne, Esq., the sum of $1,000 for legal services."

Besides Harrington and Bartley, the letter was signed by the late Sen. Philip A. Quinn of Spencer, who was chairman of the commission, and Sen. John D. Barrus, R—Goshen, vice chairman.

According to other records, Coyne worked as a lobbyist during 1971 for the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority, the Massachusetts Port Authority, the Assigned Risk Brokers Assocation, the Penn Central Railroad, the United States Brewers Association and the Massachusetts Ready Mix Concrete Institute, Inc.

Asked if lobbyists often are put on legislative payrolls, Bartley said: "Never".

He did not remember the authorization letter and said: "To my knowledge, no one who is a registered lobbyist has ever been compensated by a legislative commission."

Harrington said he "would be amazed" if the William Coyne mentioned in the letter were the same man as the lobbyist.

Scholarships

A scholarship of $200.00 is being offered by the Hai-Guin Club of Boston to an Armenian-American student, born in the United States and residing in the state of Massachusetts and currently attending college in Massachusetts.

This award is granted to a Freshman toward his or her second semester tuition and is based on their scholastic ability and financial need. Applications must be in by December 1, 1972. Request for applications should be addressed to Mrs. Ellis Kupelian, 200 Trapelo Road, Belmont, Massachusetts 02178.

Parking Appeals Start

If your present parking assignment is a hardship, you may appeal your assignment at 103 Hampshire House, Office of the Coordinator of Parking, beginning October 16.

There are a limited number of parking spaces available. The reassignments will be made consistent with the present point system.

Shlomo Carlebach Performs Tuesday

Shlomo Carlebach will be performing original songs in the Hasidic folksong tradition Tuesday night in the Student Union ballroom. Tickets will be available at the door.

Shlomo Carlebach will be performing in concert in the Student Union Ballroom at 9:15 p.m. Tuesday. Shlomo sings mostly original songs in the Hasidic folksong tradition to words in the Hebrew prayer book.

He has the largest University following among artistic leaders in American Jewish culture.

Audiences become active participants in a concert-/-group meditation that has characterized Shlomo's performances over the last few years.

His insights into Hasidic folk literature have made him a frequent guest lecturer and performer at various colleges. Tickets will be on sale at the door for $1.00.

McGovern Canvassing Begins Tomorrow

Canvassing for George McGovern, the Democratic presidential candidate, will begin tomorrow, according to Mark Mawrence, the Chairman of the UMass McGovern committee.

All students who wish to canvass should show up in front of Stockbridge Hall, at the Campus Center Garage parking circle, at 8:30 a.m. The canvasses will be made in "danger" areas of Massachusetts, as well as in Connecticut. Transportation will be provided by McGovern supporters among the faculty. Students will return to campus around suppertime.

"Voting is not enough," Mawrence said. "The war will end only if George McGovern is elected, and George McGovern will be elected only if students show the same kind of active support that they showed for the marches on Washington and in the primaries."

More information can be obtained from the McGovern table in the Campus Center Concourse Monday-Friday.

A challenge: Picture this. You only go around once in life. And you've got to reach for all the gusto you can. You can't settle for less. Because you don't get a second chance. This is our philosophy at the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. This is what we want you to find. And picture for us. And if your photo is judged the best on your campus, it will be printed in this paper. With your name, too. And you will be awarded $100. Not too shabby.

Photo competition rules: Use your head before you use your camera. Your photograph will be judged on its subject matter. Not on your photographic technique. You will be competing against students at your campus only. All photos should be black and white. And by the way, if you are a professional photographer this offer is not for you, since you already have $100. Please, please get and send us written permission from every recognizable person you use in your photo. Otherwise, your picture will be disqualified. You'll have until October 31, 1972, to get this assignment completed, should you accept. All photos submitted will become property of the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. Send picture with your name and address to: Schlitz Photo Competition, Leo Burnett Co., Inc., Prudential Plaza, Chicago, Illinois 60601.

Christian Classes Offered

The United Christian Foundation, in cooperation with area clergy and faculty is offering, this fall six weeks of courses (October 24-November 30) in creative contemporary living, faith and lifestyles. Godschool, the collective title for the course, will operate on a flexible, negotiable schedule.

Mutually convenient times will be found for all those who register for a given course, and together with the instructor/discussion leader, the students will decide how often during the six-week period they will meet. Once a week might be an answer, or perhaps everyone involved will decide that one long Saturday afternoon discussion better suits their interests and the topic matters.

Places, too, are flexible. Classrooms could be used, or someone's living room, or the Top of the Campus, or the Blue Wall...

Topics to be considered include: (1) Biblical Prophets and Contemporary Social Issues, or the road of political theology; (2) Christian Beliefs-Sense and Nonsense–the meaning and power of faith for today's world; (3) The Social Forms of Sex–new male and female roles; (4) Roadblocks to Faith–the possibility of having faith? (5) The Nature of the Religious Experience; (6) Eastern and Western Religions; (7) Faith as a Freedom Story–being free; biblical roots and contemporary living.

Also considered are: (8) 20th Century Poetry in the Christian Tradition; (9) The Underground Church–New Testament Christianity from the perspective of radical faith; (10) Genesis; (11) Dying and Death, or how to lead the Good Life–religious symbol systems; and (12) Discovering Who I Am–personal growth in a small group setting.

For further information, contact the United Christian Foundation office, 319 Hampshire House, 545-2661. Pamphlets and Registration forms may be obtained at any one of the display posters set up throughout the academic and resident buildings on campus, at the UCF Table in the Campus Center Concourse, or at the UCF office.

These non-credit courses, offered on a basis of shared interest and intellectual exploration are open to anyone–undergraduate, graduate, faculty, staff, or area resident. People may sign up for as many courses as they'd care to; registration deadline is Wednesday, October 18.

Notary Publics Due For Absentee Voting

Students from UMass who intend to vote by absentee ballot in the November elections will receive help in attaining notary publics to verify their ballots, according to Bud Demers, Recognized Student Organizations accounts supervisor.

Seven dates have been selected when notary publics will have special tables set up in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union. Demers said that 26 people have been lined up to provide 294 notary public hours of service.

He said there was no basis for estimating how many people will need such a service and when the service will be needed. He anticipated anywhere between 3,000 and 15,000 students will require ballot verifications.

Initial dates and times are as follows:

Thursday, October 19, Noon to 5 PM, Wednesday, October 25, Noon to 5 PM, Thursday, October 26, Noon to 5 PM, Tuesday, October 31, Noon to 5 PM, Wednesday, November 1, Noon to 5 PM, Thursday, November 2, Noon to 9 PM, and Friday November 3, Noon to 5 PM.

Demers said students should remember the following points:

—Bring a valid identification, either a student ID or a driver's license,

—Do not mark the ballots ahead of time,

—Do not sign ballot envelopes ahead of time,

—Bring $.16 for postage so that the ballot can be mailed from the Cape Cod Lounge.

Demers said that volunteers are also needed to help out the notaries stamp return envelopes and do other tasks. Demers invited any volunteers to see him at RSO or call 545-2351.

World Series Preview, Oakland to Win

By MARK VOGLER

Anyone not placing a wager on Cincinnati to take the series when it opens up tomorrow afternoon must be out of his skull.

After all, the rugged Redlegs proved the stronger in the National League, coming back from a 2-1 deficit to steal the playoff series from the powerful Pittsburg Pirates.

You've got to give Sparky Anderson's Reds credit after considering the fact they beat the Pirates eight of 12 games during the regular season.

Cinci looks invincible after getting by the Bucs. Just for the record, Pittsburg pounded out over 1500 hits this year while boasting the best average in either league--an impressive .274.

The Reds finished seventh in the National League in batting (.251 -- just three points lower than Kansas City who led the A.L.). But their hitting will give opposing pitchers the jitters too. Come Monday, maybe even a case of the blahs.

Getting by the first five men in that CinciCity line-up is no ordinary task. The trio of Joe Morgan, Johnny Bench, and Tony Perez is the crux of the problem that Oakland will have to cope with.

These men did damage to N.L. teams this season, combining for 77 of the Reds' 124 homers while knocking in 288 runs. That's production. The Big Red Machine may mean business.

And don't forget Pete Rose (.307) and Bobby Tolan (.283). They don't put the ball out of the park very often, but they're not easy outs either. Just for fun, stack these handsome credentials against the American League challenging Okland Athletics.

Dick Williams' A's (.240 team batting average) can muster a pair of men batting over .270. Yet, six of the first seven men in that awesome Cincinnati batting order are hitting .270 or better.

So what do you do Mr. Williams? What do you do to stop a hungry, hitting ball club like the Reds? How do you cope with the likes of N.L. stars such as Bench, Perez, Morgan, Rose, and Tolan?

Well the cards look like they're stacked up against Oakland all the way. Don't they? But don't be disillusioned and think Williams is calling a bluff when he says that his team has the goods to take it.

Williams, undoubtely one of the finest managers in the business, almost turned the tables five years ago as his Red Sox took a strong St. Louis team the full seven contests before losing.

What's more is the way that Charlie Finley feels about Williams' leadership. The Oakland owner, who is finicky when it comes to keeping managers, recently told TV sports commentator Curt Gowdy that Williams will be around for a while.

That's encouraging. Finley goes through managers like water. Something like seven for eight years prior to Williams. Yep, Charley Finley's old follies from Kansas City now have a team and an adequate manager to temper the talent.

While the A's must be appraised as an underdog offensively, don't sell them short from the mound.

Yes, Williams can deal the Reds a deadly doseage of pitching by countering with his three aces in Catfish Hunter (21-7), Blue Moon Odom (15-6), and Ken Holtzman (19-11). And, of course, Vida Blue will do if Williams needs a fourth starter.

What about Oakland hitting? Well, the Athletics don't swing a bad bat either. Although sixth in the American League in batting, they come though time after time in clutch situations.

The A's finished third in the majors in homers--134. Oakland does possess a few men who are long ball threats when they come up. Namely Joe Rudi (19), Reggie Jackson (25), Sal Bando (15), and Mike Epstein (26).

The A's have fairly decent speed on the bases. Cinci, BEWARE OF BERT CAMPANERIS--or his flying bat. Oakland is a running, hustling club. Dick Williams will try to scrape up the runs at any expense if his muscle men can't get the job done.

True. Enough superlatives cannot be said about this year's Cincinnati squad--National League Champs of 1970. But the A's aren't any slouch either.

So look for a long and exciting series. Don't sell Williams short. He may just go for a victory ride on Charlie O, the renown mule mascot. Charlie Finley just may throw a beer bash for the city of Oakland.

The A's in seven.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Aquarius child gets involved in unusual circumstances, more so than does the average youngster. The adult Aquarian "walks into" situations. Where progress through unorthodox procedures is involved, look for Aquarius. The Aquarius man has a bright sense of humor. The Aquarius woman combines an "outdoor look" with sensuality. Man or woman, the Aquarian usually comes up with a surprise. Life is seldom dull with Aquarius.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get on same wave length with Capricorn. Watch yourself where written agreements are concerned. Study contract offers. You might be better off with a handshake. One at top wants to make room for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Horizons are expanded. You are given more territotry, responsibility. Pace yourself. Remeber diet, health resolutions. Take long-range view. Perceive potential. You get chance to display special abilities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish what you start. Obtain valid hint from Taurus message. Look beyong surface indications. Emotional upset is but temporary. Know it and respond accoringly. Member of opposite sex acts in peculiar manner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good news received from mate, partner. Special arrangement works to your advantage. Leo could play important role. What appeared to be "white elepnant" is transformed to something of value.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Cooperate with Cancer. Follow through on hunch. Intuitive intellect is sharply honed. Ideas previously rejected now can be successfully utilized. Those who perform special services provide valuable aid.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What appeared a setback actually boomerangs in your favor. Sagittarian could play key role. Creative endeavors are likely to be marked by success. Stress versatility. You learn and aply lessons.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial question is resolved if you get rid of deadwood. Sense of security is heightened. It will be necessary to check details. Tendency is to overspend. Be sure you know what you're purchasing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your ideas click. Those who attempt to discourage you are merely envious. Gemini and Virgo persons figure prominently. Accent is on movement, relatives, short journeys. Throw off secret fears, doubts. You can be confident!

JV Booters In Crosstown Tilt

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

No, it's not just another soccer game, it's probably the biggest game on the JV booters' schedule and, yes indeed, its the infamous Amherst Lord Jeffs providing the competition. The battle will take place at Amherst and will start at 10:30 tomorrow morning.

The game will mark the first regularly scheduled game for the Jeffs, after having played scrimmages against numerous high school and Prep squads. The Minutemen take a 2-0 record into the clash as Holyoke CC and WPI have fallen prey to the Minutemen's devastating offensive showings.

Physically, the team is in good shape. The only question mark is in the goal. Starting goal-tender Paul Peloquin was kicked in the leg in yesterday's scrimmage against Ludlow and will probably be ready for Saturday. If Peloquin doesn't feel up to it, Steve Richter will be called upon to do the net chores, as back-up goalie Tom Fenton's finger is still in a splint and he is unavailable for duty. Tom Parsons injury has cleared up and he will be ready tomorrow.

About yesterday's scrimmage - it was a very even contest but Ludlow High pulled it out 3-2. Minutemen tallies were recorded by Tom White and Art Boyle as the team was not itself in the second half. Five key players were attending to academic matters. Coach Berryman is not disheartened at the loss, as the booters had many scoring opportunities but simply failed to find the net often enough.

Amherst is in no way going to be a pushover as they played that same Ludlow Team to a tie last week, and have shown that they can put the ball in the net.

One addition has been made to the JV schedule and that will take place this Monday afternoon, when the JV's face Deerfield Academy at 4:00 PM.

Ali Clowns in Garden Show

By DEAN TUCKER

Ali: reaction to exhibition of 10/11

Subway Sam Silverman, the cherubic promoter of boxing, brought a circus to Boston Garden Wednesday night. The main attraction was not Bozo the Clown. It was Muhammad Ali the clown.

In contrast to the rematch of Emile Griffith, the number two middle weight, and Newton's Joe Denucci, who fought twelve hard serious rounds in the main event, it was Ali and his clowning that boiled the crowd to cheering.

Ali is a master of theatre. Playing his role as comic hero against five straight men, he showed the world that song and dance men are not gone yet. One of the straight men was treated to a dance with Ali. The two men squared off in a traditional style, and then Ali began to move with the grace of an antelope around the ring. Dipping and ducking, Ducking and dipping, absorbing the straight man with his hands and head. Twice around the ring they went before the crowd laughed its approval at Ali's impersonation of Fred Astaire.

Next, another stiff who shuffled a little to show Ali that the ex-champ did not have a patent on the step was treated to a little Ali shuffle and a dozen or so Ali jabs and crosses. The stiffs wonderment left him on the ropes to ponder perhaps animated grand energy.

Ali hit the canvas once, doing a split, shaking his head, and staggering back to his corner after taking a five count. He begged Bundini Brown not to send him back, but back he went to the cheers and laughter of the crowd. He battered his straight man at random.

Sam Silverman added a new dimension to the circus Wednesday. He had five continuous shows of animal strength, jugline precision, and incomparable clowning being performed by the great one, Muhammad Ali. And for those who take the sport seriously, they saw the finest piece of pugilistic prowess of this generation letting them know that when he climbs into the ring with Smokin' Joe Frazier that the title is going home with its proper owner, The Greatest.

Sparky Set

CINCINNATI (AP) - The Cincinnati Reds took the day off Thursday, but Manager Sparky Anderson played a game anyway-the American League playoff game on television.

And, after finding out whom his World Series opponent would be, Anderson expressed determination to beat the Oakland A's in the best-of-seven game showcase.

"I don't think that second best will make me happy this year," said Anderson while watching the A's stop the Tigers 2-1 to nail down the American League championship. "I want to prove the National League playoffs with a 4-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Wednesday, has named Gary Nolan to start the first game of the Series here Saturday.

"Our pitching is in 50 per cent better shape this year than it was in 1970," said Anderson, pointing to a sore-armed staff that was blitzed in five World Series games by the Baltimore Orioles.

Anderxn predicted a playoff triumph over the Prates, but refused to go out on a limb regarding the Series.

"I remember what happened two years ago when I said we'd beat Baltimore," Anderson said. "I said, 'Bring on those big, bad Birds', and I sure brought them on, didn't I?

"I still think the National League is stronger than the American-but it doesn't mean that we'll win the World Series. But, if the A's beat us, they'll beat one of the two best teams in baseball. The other one is the Pirates."

Anderson, who's club is fortified with long-ball power and speed, looks for the same thing in Oakland.

"They've got balance, they can run and they have some good bats," he said. "I don't think that breaks will decide the Series. If we take our game to them, as we've done all year, I think we'll be all right."

Anderson said he plans to use righthander Jack Billingham in the first game at Riverfront Stadium if Nolan is scratched at the last minute. Nolan has had a recent series of injuries, but pitched six innings against the Pirates last Monday.

Anderson will use the same power-packed lineup that he's used all season, including such hitters as left fielder Peter Rose, second baseman Joe Morgan, center fielder Bobby Tolan, catcher Johnny Bench and first baseman Tony Perez. Denis Menke will play third base, Cesar Geronimo will be in right field and Anderson will use either Darel Chaney or Dave Concepcion at shortstop, depending on whether the A's use a righthander or lefthander.

Runners Ready For UConn

By WALTER POWERS

Over the past few years, Connecticut distance runners have not had a lot of success against UMass. Last years Cross-Country team beat them 23-40 in Amherst, and neither team has changed much, personnel-wise, since then. So you would expect to see Coach Ken O'Brien smiling confidently past them at the next meet, right? Well, not exactly. But he is smiling. Tomorrow the Minutemen will face UConn at Storrs, Connecticut, and for the first time this year, UMass will be clearly favored.

Not that they won't have to work for it. UConn is stronger than last year, and their strength is deceptive. Along with a 4-1 record, (their only loss was to Yale), they have a slight Home-Course advantage. Proof of their strength lies in the fact that last years top runner, Pete Bertolotti, is now running third behind Bob McCusker and Bill Cantin.

Though UConn lacks a strong frontrunner, their top five are within 35 seconds of each other. This could be a deciding factor, because against Northeastern, the first and fifth UMass runners were separated by more than a minute.

The race, which will be run on a rugged, hilly course figures to be hard and close. Ken O'Brien hopes to see his middle runners closer to the top, but other than that, there should be little difference between this, and last weeks race against Northeastern.

The team is optimistic. Most members have run against Connecticut before, and they expect to win. Ken O'Brien is confident, but his optimism is tempered with caution, "You've got to respect the team. Their top five are consistently good, and their top three are very strong. They're sixth in New England right now, but we're fourth. Connecticut just isn't as strong as N.U. or Providence, and we should beat them."

The rest of the dual-meet schedule appears to be somewhat easier than the first two meets.

Terriers In Town For Game Tomorrow

By EARLE BARROLL

The motives will be self-explanatory.

For when the UMass football team returns to Alumni Stadium tomorrow (after two weeks on the road) to host Boston University the Minutemen will have the following in mind:

—Last year's 47-21 humiliation to the Terriers at Nickerson Field.

—The near termination of Peil Pennington's football career when he was sandwiched on a roll-out and had his shoulder busted up pretty good by a frustrated Terrior line that had watched him throw for almost 250 yards in the first half.

—Specialty team errors that resulted in two td's.

—And a host of other miscues.

Head coach Dick MacPherson suffered the worst defeat of his short career here at UMass on that Saturday afternoon. When questioned on it yesterday he shook his head and said:

"I've never been associated in my memory in a football game where the special teams were so completely out of whack.

"As a matter of fact it was such a wild game that two B.U. linemen scored touchdowns on interceptions. And one of our own tackles almost scored one himself."

Last year at this time B.U. was 0-3. This year the Terriers are 0-4 and outside of the New Hampshire game that they lost on a late field-goal (16-13) the other three games haven't even been close–Maine 7-25; Delaware 12-49; Harvard 14-33.

Since the beginning of the season the Terriors have been living and dying with the wishbone offense, made famous by Texas, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

And for the most part they've been dying. Fumbles by the quantity have raised havoc with anything that coach Larry Naviaux has thought of as being offensive consistancy. They had six in the opener with Maine and last week against Harvard they had an even dozen.

When last they were at home, the Minutemen were fourth in New England, 20th in the nation in the UPI small college poll and unrated in the Lambert Trophy ratings (Eastern supremacy).

When they step onto home ground tomorrow (1 p.m.) they'll be the number one team in New England, 16th in the nation in the small college poll and fifth in the Lambert Trophy race.

And also well aware of the self-explanatory motives.

HONORS: Split end Steve Schubert was (1) named to the ECAC team of the week and (2) chosen as the Yankee Conference offensive player of the week for his performance vs. Vermont. Steve caught three passes for 56 yards and two touchdowns, ran three end arounds for 40 yards and returned two kickoffs 76 yards.

Soccer Team Plays Jumbos

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team will travel to Medford, Mass. tomorrow to play the Tufts College Jumbos at 2:00 p.m. The Minutemen currently sport a 3-1 record.

"I understand that Rufts won a close game here last year two goals to one," remarked Coach Gerry Redmond, "so it would be nice to beat them I also understand that it's a very tiny backyard as soccer pitches go, so we'll have to adapt our game somewhat." When a team is used to playing on a wide field, he explained, playing on a narrow one tends to congest the middle, thus causing the passing to deteriorate somewhat.

"With a short field," he continued, "the forwards only have to carry the ball about ten yards over the midfield line before they are within shooting range. I hope they'll shoot on sight."

Reflecting on the BU game, the first-year coach said he thought, "the passing in the first half was very weak except for Bob Merrill's cross to Ken Banda which resulted in UMass' first goal. We passed better in the second half, but we're still giving away possession needlessly, especially at midfield. I'm still waiting, too, to see some goals scored by more of the players."

"Still, I've been pleased with the players' performances, especially in the last three games. Most have been improving considerably. I just hope they can keep it up."

John Kiah, out with mononucleosis, continues to lead the Yankee Conference goalies in goal against per game, having yet to allow one through him. Carl Vercollone, who has done a fine job in the backup roll, is tied for third place with a 1.00 goal per game average. Tom Coburn leads the Conference with five goals.

Sunday afternoon, on the field at the bottom of the horseshoe in Southwest, the UMass cricketeers try it again. Last week the home eleven was rained out of their first match, but this week all signs appear to be go.

The Tri-City eleven from Albany will provide the opposition, and game time is around 10:30 or 11:00 AM. It's suggested, however, that if you come you make it around noon.

A's Clinch AL Flag

The Oakland A's, qualifying for baseball's final showdown for the first time since 1931 when they were in Philadelphia, open the best-of-seven series Saturday at Cincinnati against the National League champion Reds.

Oakland won Thursday's decisive fifth game on the strong arms of pitchers John "Blue Moon" Odom and Vida Blue and the flying feet of Reggie Jackson and George Hendrick.

Odom, whose three-hit shutout had given Oakland its second victory in the playoffs last Sunday, worked five innings in frigid Tiger Stadium, permitting just one run and two hits.

Then Blue, a 24-game winner, Most Valuable Player and Cy Young Award winner last year but only 6-10 this season after a lengthy spring holdout, came out of the bullpen to work the final four innings and wrap up the victory.

Blue surrendered Detroit's other three hits but seemed to have the Tigers overpowered with his blistering fast ball. When Tony Taylor lined to Hendrick in center field for the final out, the A's dugout emptied and mobbed Blue.

Fans, who had littered the field with everything from bathroom tissue to smoke bombs,spilled onto the playing area and one was chased by A's manager Dick Williams after he had grabbed at the Oakland skipper.

Jackson and Hendrick scored the A's runs on a pair of extremely close plays at home plate. Both times, umpire Nestor Chylak was on top of the play with safe calls and it turned out that those two decisions made the A's world champions.

Detroit struck for the game's first run in the first inning against Odom. Dick McAuliffe singled leading off and one out later, Duke Sims walked on four pitches. The runners advanced on a wild pitch and McAuliffe scored as Bill Freehan bounced out to shortstop Dal Maxvill.

Oakland tied the score in the second against Woodie Fryman without a base hit and thanks mainly to Jackson. The bearded Oakland outfielder walked on four pitches leading off the inning and then stole second.

When Sal Bando flied to Al Kaline, Jackson took third after the catch on a head-first slide.

Mike Epstein was hit on the hand by a pitch but Gene Tenace took a third strike for the second out. Then Epstein and Jackson worked a delay double steal. Epstein broke for second and Taylor grabbed Bill Freehan's throw in front of the base and fired back to the Tiger catcher.

Jackson slid under the tag and lay writhing on the ground as umpire Chylak signalled him safe. He was helped off the field and was forced to leave the game with a pulled hamstring muscle. Hendrick replaced him in center field and two innigs later, he scored the deciding run.

He opned the fourth with a grounder to shortstop and barely beat Dick McAuliffe's bad throw. McAuliffe was charged with his fourth error of the playoffs and the Tigers argued bitterly with umpire John Rice.

Ted's The One

I think the Red Sox lost a golden opportunity last week when they signed Eddie Kasko. The man for the job was Ted Williams.

That's a mouthful, and I must assume that no unknown efforts were made in the pursuit of Williams. It also leaves a double question to be answered - why not Kasko and why Williams?

On the first count, I can only contend that the Red Sox made a strong showing this season without good managing. Kasko never seemed to have a vital part in controlling the ball club. I somehow got the feeling that he was just a casual observer rather than the leader of a contending ball club. It seemed like he was just sort of there. Look at the American League Playoffs and see if that applied to either Billy Martin or Dick Williams.

Except for Luis Aparicio, I see little difference between Kasko's team and the Red Sox of old. Games are won on bunts, stolen bases, hit and run plays, and heads up base running. How many bases did Tommy "Strike-out" Harper steal this season? How many boners did Yaz pull on the base paths?

How many bunts can you squeeze out of the middle part of their batting order? Suicide squeeze? What's that?

Now the second question. Why Williams? My reasoning here is that Ted was a classic victim of circumstance in the Ranger (nee Senator) organization.

He assumed command of a weak hitting, inexperienced club, and it was downhill after that.

After Ted had helped make Eddie Brinkman and Aurelio Rodriguez decent hitters, owner Bob Short promptly pedalled them to Detroit for Denny McLain. Williams was never even consulted about the trade, or should I say steal, and openly voiced his discontent.

Next the team was moved from the nation's capital to Arlington Texas. To put a last place baseball team in the middle of a football hotbed can only spell disaster. The attendance in Arlington this summer was dismal.

But Boston, Massachusetts is not Arlington, Texas. The "Splendid Splinter" may have gained something around the mid section, but I doubt that he's lost any charisma in the Hub. Texas let him go, but Yawkey and the boys elected to stand pat. (So what else is new?). I guess the Boston front office just doesn't like the name Williams.

Court Rules Third World Seats Legal

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The General Court of Justice ruled last night that last month's reapportionment of the undergraduate Student Senate guaranteeing 15 seats to Third World representatives was constitutional.

Opponents of the bill said they would appeal the court's decision to the UMass Board of Trustees.

The court overruled the charges of the bill's opponents that physical residency of students was required in area for it to qualify as a residential area and be represented in the Senate.

It also ruled the action, presented as a resolution, was constitutional as presented to the senate, and that the number of representatives-15-was irrelevant.

In the reapportionment, New Africa House (a black cultural center on campus) had been designated a residential area and allotted 15 seats in an attempt by the senate to increase Third World participation in the senate.

In a minority opinion, Justice Brent Wilkes claimed reapportionment violated the clause of the constitution alloting senate seats by population. He said he also felt the bill was "poorly constructed", and lacked adequate safeguards against any minority group on campus applying for the seats.

According to Chief Justice Lawrence Smith, the court also recommended the establishment of a committee to study the reapportionment in September, 1973, when it is scheduled to be reconsidered by the senate.

The court ruled that the senate could make the reapportionment under a clause of the constitution allowing it to legislate in areas of "social policy, campus conduct, or social services if it applies uniformly to a broad class of students."

According to the court, testimony from the resolution's sponsors had indicated each representative could theoretically represent a different minority, insuring the "broad class of students."

Smith said the court felt "common interests" could be regarded as a residency area, citing the example of the commuter senate.

Besides Smith, those ruling in favor of the senate were Justices James Weiner, Steven Kenny, Michael Montgomery, Janet Shephard, and Richard White.

Smith also said students on campus could ask the court to review any action by any student group by gathering 25 signatures on a petition.

Student Advocate William E. Spinn, who represented Tackeff, said "residency" in an area is defined as physical residency by the SGA constitution.

He also said the Commuter Assembly was itself determined by physical residency and not "common interest", but had not yet been apportioned into specific areas.

Spinn said he had taken on the case because the senate had presented the reapportionment as a resolution which violated the SGA constitution. He claimed the court's action had given the senate "a chance to subvert the constitution anytime they think it's 'just'."

Tackeff said he saw a conflict of interest because if the senate had ruled against the apportionment, it would invalidate all the new senate's actions--which include three appointments to the court.

Student senate speaker John Hogan, one of the sponsors of the resolution, said he expected the trustees to return the matter to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Bromery, Hogan predicted, would allow the senate action to stand.

Sarge Reveals Education Reform Plans

By JAMES E. GOLD

Governor Francis Sargent revealed Saturday major education reform programs, which include an open university, three year degree programs, and a new tuition structure.

Speaking before a conference of trustees and board members of public higher education institutions meeting at Framingham State College, Sargent also sought greater cooperation between the public and private sectors of education and called for hiring and tenure of faculty practices to be based on teaching qualifications.

After the Governor's speech the day's activities included two workshops, a luncheon and addresses by Donald R. Dwight, Lieutenant Governor, and Joseph M. Cronin, Educational Affairs Secretary. They presented the options available in restructuring higher education.

The reforms which the Governor offered were examples from an eight page position paper re'eased to the trustees and the general public at the conference. (The Daily Collegian will print the text of the Governor's position paper in tomorrow's issue.)

In asking for the three year degree programs and the Open University, Sargent said "Men and women...are equally entitled to an education. We should make it available to them at their own pace and in their own places. But at the same time, a fair share of educational costs ought to be borne by students able to pay." He said "we must develop a comprehensive scholarship program tied to the tution structure."

Speaking on the cooperation of the public and private colleges, Sargent stated that it would be disastrous if expansion of the public sector destroyed the private sector. He called for the pooling of resources so both sectors will "remain healthy".

Speaking on hiring practices, Sargent said that despite any faculty complaints, "The first and highest purpose of our institutions is to teach our students."

He said that these reforms are "urgently needed...relatively easy, relatively quick and absolutely essential."

He stated that these reforms "will also produce greater value for the educational dollar." He added, "those who would talk of economies and not of reforms are short changing both the student and the taxpayer."

Citing the budget battles of the past few years, Sargent said it was time for the trustees and the administration to work together in allocating the resources and money available to trustees.

He compared the current process of submitting an "asking price" for higher education to supermarket shopping. It is "very much like shopping in a supermarket and letting the cashier decide which items you could afford," he said. He claimed this budgeting process is not in anybody's interest.

"It is up to the trustees of our system to seek reform," said Sargent. "To trim the fat. To eliminate the duplication.

According to Larry Ladd, Student Government Association President and Student Trustee who attended the conference, Dwight and Cronin put forth options available in reorganizing the structure of the education system in Massachusetts.

Cronin's alternatives included the following:

–line responsibilities with no boards at all with everyone in education essentially reporting to the Secretary of Education.

–a single Board of Regents for all education (elementary, secondary, and higher) reporting to the Secretary of Education.

–three boards reporting to the Secretary of Education, these would include one for higher education, one for elementary and secondary education, and one for special education and the arts.

Ladd pointed out that the status quo was not offered as an alternative.

Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees Joseph P. Healey said that he had reservations about centralizing education that much. He said that it would lead to more politicization. He quoted a former UMass president, "the quality of education is inversely proportional to the degree of political influence."

Ladd said that he interjected at several points his reservations about the centralization plans. One dealt with the power that the governor would have under centraliziation. He cited the example of what happened when in California, the governorship changed from liberal Pat Brown to conservative Ronald Reagan.

He pointed out that Sargent, basically a liberal, had no way to guarantee the continuation of a liberal in the executive post.

Ladd said that Trustee Robert Gordon pointed out at the Cronin address that students are already complaining about how far from campus the trustees are when it comes to policy decisions.

After explaining how often trustee meetings are disrupted, Ladd hypothesized that if there were only one Board of Regents, which governed over triple the amount of students that the UMass trustees govern now, it would surely triple the chances of the disruption of a regents meeting.

Only the governor's opening address at the conference was open to the press. Ladd was interviewd by the MDC for information of workshops and other speeches.

$1000 Donated For Viet Aid

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Forty-eight people, including four children, crossed into Canada Saturday to present the Canadian Friends Service Committee with more than $1,000 to be used to buy medical supplies for "all victims of the Vietnam War".

The money was donated by Amherst area people, said Milton Mayer, spokesman for the Amherst Area Peace Action Committee. Mayer said the money would be used by the Canadian Friends to buy medical supplies at cost from Canadian drug companies and would be shipped to the Red Crosses of both North and South Vietnam.

The Committee's leaflet, specifying how the money would be used, said the act was considered illegal by the U.S. Treasury Department under the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act. Mayer said the federal government was informed of the crossing, the seventh since 1967, but he did not expect any action to be taken. "There won't be any objections; no one objects any more," he said in Vermont.

There was no interference at the crossing, which was made by members of the Amherst Peace Committee, the Vietnam Veterans Against the War and the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker-sponsored organization.

The only hold-up was on entering Canada. Three of those crossings had no identification. The Canadian immigration officer, however, seemed more concerned over whether or not the three could get back into the United States than he was by any possible infraction of Canadian laws. He said a number of times that they might "not be able to return to the United States." Nevertheless, the three were allowed into Canada and back into the United States without incident.

The money, totalling $1,065.93, was turned over to the Canadian Friends Service Committee at the house of one of the members a half-mile over the border.

The protestors started to arrive by car in Derby Line, Vt., at 2 p.m. Saturday. The town, split in half by a double yellow line marking the border, was picked, according to one of the protestors, because it is "a nice small town", the people on the Canadian side are friendly and a bridge spanning a creek halfway between the American and Canadian border stations. All six previous crossings were made here.

Most of the Americans were middle-aged except for the eight veterans who acted as an honor guard.

The VVAW, in a statement issued at the border said, "Through cooperation with the AAPAC today, the VVAW is striving to promote peace and alleviate some of the pain caused by the continuing war. We believe this medical aid program is communitarian and in the interest of peace."

The group lined up next to a park, commemorating the Civil War, for a vigil lasting 15 minutes then turned and walked in a line toward the border.

Mayer walked into the American border station, gave the officers a leaflet explaining what the group was doing, and asked if the customs officer, "minded". They said no, but asked everyone to stop in on the way back. After Mayer left a customs officer followed him out and returned the leaflet.

Marshall Smith, a carpenter from Whately, across the Connecticut River from Amherst carried one of two signs he made identifying the group and their purpose.

Except for those with no identification, this was apparently a fairly routine border crossing. a Canadian reporter from 'Le Tribune' noted that a Montreal customs officer seldom there was on hand.

The protestors walked to a house on the edge of the town's shopping district. There, Duncan Graham, a teacher at Stanstead College in Canada received the money for the Canadian Friends Service Committee.

The group ate at the Canadian Friend's house and then returned to the United States.

Wood's Office Lease Sparks Money Dispute

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

A $700,000 five-year lease signed by UMass officials for office space in Downtown Boston has sparked another money dispute between the university and the state.

UMass President Robert C. Wood requested a ruling from Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn after State Buildings Superintendent George A. Luciane refused to approve the lease.

In an advisory opinion, Quinn ruled that the UMass Board of Trustees "have the autonomous authority...to enter into a lease for a term of years for new office space with rental to be paid from state appropriations."

UMass officials informed Luciano after receiving the attorney general's opinion that whether he approved or not the university would relocate the president's office.

The new facilities are located in the new building at One Washington Mall, two blocks away from the president's former office on Devonshire St.

House Speaker David M. Bartley, D—Holyoke, says the dispute involves the question of the university's fiscal autonomy.

The UMass grad described the lease as a "bureaucratic executive problem" and added that "power-vested bureaucrats" were involved in the dispute.

William I. Cowin, incoming secretary of the office of Administration and Finance, and present secretary of consumer affairs, said he has "extreme reservations" about the attorney general's opinion upon which the university acted.

Cowin said he is undecided on whether he will challenge the UMass move, but warned that if UMass is allowed to rent space without authorization then all other sectors of public education in the state will be able to secure the same autonomy, passing the costs along to the taxpayers.

The state comptroller is also refusing to pay about $50,000 in back rents incurred by the University at its previous location. The comptroller claims that UMass officials engaged the space without proper state authorization.

UMass officials will have to readjust state appropriations in order to meet the $140,000 annual rental fee for the five-year period.

But state Budget Director Edwin T. Hebert said UMass can't readjust appropriations in order to pay the rental fee.

"The legislature appropriates money in specific accounts for specific purposes at specific locations, and agencies have no authority to use money from one account to support activities in another account," he said.

Hebert said "almost all" state leases are on a one-year basis because money is appropriated one year at a time and no guarantee can be made that money will be appropriated for a subsequent year.

"In signing a five-year lease, UMass is committing the state where by statute only A&F has authority to commit the state, but at the same time, according to the attorney general, UMass is not subject to A&F regulations and approvals," Hebert said.

Shannon Lashes Out At Nixon

By KEVIN DOWNEY

William Shannon, a member of the New York Times Board of Editors, lashed out at President Nixon for his "virtual abolishment of the White House press conference" before a receptive audience at Mount Holyoke's Chapin Auditorium last Friday night.

Shannon, in addition to being a member of the Times Editorial Board, is also a frequent contributor to the Times' op-ed page. "The Press vs. The Powerful" was the topic of his address.

Shannon strongly defended the role of the press in the United States in light of the recent criticism it has received from the Nixon administration. "Nixon and Agnew", Shannon said, "try to discredit the press because they have something to hide." Stating that criticism of the press has existed under every presidential administration, Shannon declared, "the Nixon administration", however "is unique in history" in the extent to which it has attempted to exert pressure on the news media.

In defense of his charge Shannon cited a few recent attempts by the Government to restrict and control the press. He called the incident concerning the Pentagon Papers contrary to the history of freedom of the press, arguing that never before had a story been censured in advance of its printing.

Calling the recent subpoena of newsmens' notes an attempt to make reporters "arms of the police", Shannon predicted that no private citizen will talk to the press, particularly concerning the exposing of corruption, if he/she knows that the reporters' notes will consequently be seized by the government.

Shannon declined to speculate as to why Nixon is attacking the press with such vigor stating, "it would be difficult to say without going into psychoanalysis".

Refusing to deny the accuracy of Vice President Agnew's now famous charge that the Washington-New York newsmen view the world through the same political focus, Shannon declared that although the Vice President's statement may be true, "it does not deserve merit". Stating that if an analysis of regional newsmedia was made, one would discover that they have the same view of the world as the New York-Washington press.

Lettuce Boycott Growing

By THERESA I. CARR

The interests of many campus community groups have recently become centered around the United Farmworkers boycott of lettuce. Representatives of the University Poverty Committee, the Spanish Speaking Community, the local 1776 AFSCME Union, and the United Farmworkers have joined together in an attempt to remove iceburg lettuce from the campus dining commons. Commencing today a table in the Campus Center will be used for the signing of the petition, and the presentation of more literature on the subject.

This aggregate of interests was formed because of the prevailing consensus of disgust with the inhumane practices of the farming corporations. The threatening laws passed by Arkansas banning the use of boycott under a fine of five thousand dollars and one years imprisonment have only added impetus to the nationwide boycott movement.

Contrary to common belief the field labor cost of one head of lettuce is only 1.2 cents, and it is the profit margin of the corporation that has lead to the increase in lettuce prices. We urge for your support in this movement to aid the migrant farmworker.

Cole Speaks To Future CCEBS Students

By DON BISHOP

A warning about and a serious discussion of the college education experience from minority students was the focus of Prof. Johnetta Cole and student Paul Chandler in luncheon speeches before prospective CCEBS students on Saturday. The group of approximately 300 high school seniors had been invited here to participate in the second annual Minority Student Day sponsored by the CCEBS program.

Dr. Cole spoke first before the gathering in the Blue Wall. She began by stating that her purpose in speaking to the minority students would be intended to warn and scare those in attendance, in contrast to the enticing treatment they had received earlier in the day.

As Third World people, she stressed that these prospective UMass students must not come to view their experience here as a vacation. According to Ms. Cole, "You are here for a political education."

This political education can then be utilized toward the liberation of Third World peoples. She referred to the necessity of having a "cadre of educated folks" in carrying out this liberation.

As far as the current economic and political situation in this country is concerned, Dr. Cole stated, "The slots are closing up for Third World peoples in this system so therefore we must maximise the experience here."

As possible minority students here she said that they should remember three things. The first thing way that "they must remember that they were here to gain some skills". In that regard, the minority students must avoid the temptations of dope, alcohol, and cards.

Secondly Dr. Cole stated that as part of the Third World community these students "have to learn to relate to each other". They must work to increase the unity among Third World peoples on campus.

Finally Dr. Cole stated that "you must take this time (at UMass) to strengthen the ties between you and the community from which you are coming." She considered this final point a "a very serious business' and that the minority students should always relate their education experience here to its ultimate use in the home community.

Paul Chandler, a junior in the CCEBS Program, also spoke to the group, in essence re-iterating the things that Dr. Cole had stated.

He stressed that those in attendance who do decide to come here should not be overcome by the pleasantness and laxity of the surroundings and should direct their stay here "to removing the pests of war and drugs which are destroying our brothers" in this country and around the world.

Chandler also directed much of his talk to the Third World Alliance, which he described as an "organization for change" which is currently in the important process of developing political thrust for Third World peoples on campus.

The speeches of Cole and Chandler were part of the day long Minority Student Day. Earlier the students had heard brief remarks from Chancellor Bromery, the Director of CCEBS Rhody McCoy, Dean of Students William Field, and Director of Black Studies, Michael Thelwell. Later they attended the football game and were given a tour of campus.

The students had come by bus from the Boston, Springfield, Holyoke, Worcester and New Bedford areas.

Xylographer To Open Art Exhibit Tonight

Ethiopian-born Falaka Armide will open an art exhibition tonight between 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Music Room Library.

The duration of Armide's "Xylographie 1971-72" will be from today through the 28th daily at the music room library from 7:00 a.m. through 12:00 midnight.

Armide was born in Nazareth, Ethiopa, in 1942. The forthcoming exhibition will be his ninth one since 1968.

He studied at Fine Art School Addis Ababa under internationally acclaimed artist instructors Gik Desta (fundamental knowledge), Skunder (drawing and water color), V. Fumo (painting), W. Kindred (graphics), and Hiseiler (sculpture).

If Falaka lived his past, he would say that he only lived his Nation's past, and the past he remembered the most–that is his extraordinary, wretched childhood.

Thus in his non-sacred art works, as opposed to his art works of sacred arts of Ethiopia, "conflict" is not the usual theme of the characters. To sum it all up, the "Ethiopian Tourist News" monthly publication of August, 1972, put it this way:

"Striking in their uncompromising treatment of human weariness, confusion, and striving, Falaka's woodcuts nevertheless inspire the viewer to feelings of hope through their bold and vigorous line. Humour is there, too, in the original treatment of nature as design."

In an interview with the "Ethiopian Herald" (Dec. 17, 1970) Falaka said: "You must work over a relief four or five times, until you leave a bit of your soul."

Challenge To Oath Discussed

By J. L. ALTMAN

Two UMass professors were in Boston Friday to discuss the laying of groundwork for a possible legal challenge against a state law requiring the signing of a loyalty oath by all state employees.

James Matlack and Dave Clark, both of the English Department, were representing a group of UMass staff and faculty members who met last Wednesday to organize a campaign against the loyalty oath law.

The group was encouraged by a temporary restraining order issued in Berkshire County Superior Court last Tuesday putting off for nine days the deadline by which 19 staff members of Berkshire Community College would be forced to sign the oath or face loss of pay, tenure, benefits, and possibly their job.

The deadline for UMass employees to sign is Nov. 15.

The argument against the law, according to Professor Matlack, rests on two major points: 1.) The statute applies to every employee on every level of state employment. It is clear, however, from checks made that most employees at the lower levels have not signed the oath in twenty years. The law, in requiring certain employees to sign, while others are either not required, or are ignored, is therefore in fundamental violation of the 14th amendment, which guarantees equal protection under the law.

2.) When the law was passed in 1949, the Attorney General ruled that current employees need not sign the oath–only new employees as of the effective date of the law were required to sign. The state has not applied the statute in the past three years (until this month). Therefore those people who were hired by the University within that three year period, and who did not sign, now face the prospect of losing their jobs for failure to do so. The contention is that these employees fall under the same category as those exempt by the 1949 ruling. It would not apply to those University employees hired after Oct. 1.

Mr. Matlack stressed that those employees most affected by the statute are non U.S. citizens. The Friday discussion with attorney Steve Oleskey made clear that nothing short of legislative action could prevent the law from being applied to foreigners–a process not fast enough.

The Friday meeting also strengthened the hope that there can be some kind of legal victory. There are no grounds for the unconstitutionality of the statute as far as its language is concerned. Chief Justice Burger of the Supreme Court ruled the law constitutional in that respect. The unconstitutional aspect is in the violation of the 14 amendment ACLU cannot say at this time if it would get officially involved in the case.

A hearing on a possible temporary or permanent injunction will be held on Oct. 20 in Pittsfield.

The UMass group will await the Oct. 20 decision before concrete steps are taken. If the court rules that there are sufficient grounds for a challenge against the law, it will issue a permanent injunction, giving the Berkshire people a chance to prepare a thorough brief. Were the UMass group to start legal activity at once, said Matlack, the proceedings would have to take place in Hampshire County, serving little purpose at this time.

Isaac Asimov To Speak On Sci-Fi And Environment

By MARILYN ELLIOT

Isaac Asimov, world renowned author and lecturer, will speak about "Science Fiction and the Environment" on Monday October 16th in the Student Union Ballroom.

Dr. Asimov, known by most people for his excellent Science Fiction books for all ages, has also written books on such diverse subjects as geography, general fiction, natural science, and has even written Asimov's Guide to the Bible and The Sensuous Dirty Old Man. Today there are 100 plus books which carry the Asimov byline, not including his many publications in magazines and papers. He has received many awards acclaiming his "genious" including the 1967 American Association for the Advancement of Science-Westinghouse Award for Excellence in Magazine Writing. His versatility along with the high quality of his writing have led some to label him "the nearest thing to a human writing machine." His wit and colorfulness add that certain extra dimension that makes a good book great.

Dr. Asimov is currently an Assoc. Prof. of Biochemistry at Boston University School of Medicine. If Science Fiction interests you; If the environment interests you; If Asimov interests you, then come hear this Distinguished Visitors Program sponsored lecture. It is in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p.m. on Monday October 16th.

Project Self To Hold Women's Workshops

By ROBERTA MARTONE

What does it mean to be a woman in today's world? Project Self, a series of workshops initiated by the Everywomen's Center, is attempting to answer this questions.

The Project was begun by The Valley Women's Center in Northampton, along with the Division of Continuing Education at UMass.

There will be 17 workshops offered. Topics such as: Electing Women to Public Office; Film: Sex Roles and Self Image; Painting; Prostitution; Tai Kwan Do (Korean style Karate); and The Women's Liberation Movement, are included in these workshops.

Project Self will be open to anyone in the University and surrounding area.

Jean Becker, who is in charge of the Painting workshop, said the Project's main purpose is to give support to those women who want to begin or continue with their education.

Ms. Becker specified that there is a difference between a workshop and a classroom. "In a workshop there is no leader; everybody learns together."

Project Self is partially self-supporting and partially subsidized by the Southwest Women's Group. The cost of the workshop is $25.00 per person. However, women on welfare are entitled to full scholarship and tuition paying students will receive half scholarship. The Project also intends to pay one half of the fee for non-professional women employees. Those residing in the Southwest area will pay $6.00 and receive one credit for each workshop.

Registration for these workshops will be held October 9 through October 20. Project Self will begin October 23 and continue through the week of December 13. Each workshop will meet once a week for eight weeks.

All interested are urged to attend the pre-registration coffee hour on October 17 in Memorial Hall at 7:30 p.m. Any further questions should be directed at the Everywomen's Center located on the first floor of Munson Hall.

Major Bills Keep Congress In Session

WASHINGTON (AP) - A weary and bickering Congress, with major bills on Social Security and presidential spending-cut powers still before it, resigned itself Sunday to more work this week before going home to campaign.

The Senate reconvenes Monday, the House Tuesday, blasting hopes for even three weeks of uninterrupted time with the voters before the Nov. 7 election. These finally died when the House early Sunday was unable to muster a quorum of 217 members and adjourned. The Senate had given up a few minutes earlier.

Conference committees Saturday night fashioned compromise versions of the two big outstanding bills, but neither chamber acted on them before the break. Senate Democratic Whip Robert Byrd of West Virginia said they face long debate.

The conference committee on the Social Security-welfare bill deleted from it the entire title on welfare reform. Thus the present Congress became the second in succession to wrestle with the problem of a substitute for the present almost universally deplored welfare system but fail because the Senate and House could not agree. President Nixon had strongly urged reform and the House had generally backed his recommendations.

The conferees did send to the two chambers for action a compromise expanding some Social Security and Medicare benefits-and boosting payroll taxes to pay for them.

The bill would slightly increase benefits for men by extending to them what was described as an unintended advantage women enjoy under present law in calculating their old age insurance payments.

It would raise the widows' payments to 100 per cent of their husbands' basic entitlement, up from 82-1/2 per cent; raise from $1,680 to $2,100 the amount a retired person could earn without reducing Social Security benefits; allow those working beyond retirement age to build up higher pensions; and set a new $170-a-month minimum for persons who worked as long as 30 years in covered employment.

The bill would, for the first time, extend Medicare to those retired for disability, as well as for age.

It would federalize, with national payment standards, the programs for about 3 million aged, blind and disabled persons.

By deleting other costly changes that had been voted by the Senate, the conferees cut the estimated price tag of the bill from $18.5 billion for the Senate version to $6 billion.

Even so, the accompanying payroll tax increase would mean that an employe earning as much as $10,800 would pay $631.80 next year compared with $468 in 1972.

The future prospects of welfare reform remained clouded. Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D—Ark., of the House Ways and Means Committee, had said earlier he would not "send the House up that mountain a third time" if the Senate again failed to agree. But Chairman Russell B. Long, D—La., of the Senate Finance Committee said Saturday night Mills had given assurances he would try again early next year.

The conference agreement on the bill to set a $250-billion ceiling on government spending for the year ending next June 30 would put substantial limitations on the sweeping powers the House voted to give the President to enforce the reduction.

Social Security and other retirement payments, veterans' benefits, judges' salaries and several other items would be exempt from cuts. The bill, however, would permit reductions up to 20 per cent in 50 broad categories of programs. Within a category, funds for a specific program might be eliminated altogether.

Administration spokesmen were quoted as saying the compromise is unsatisfactory. However, Nixon might have difficulty in vetoing it because the bill also contains a $15-billion increase in Treasury borrowing authority. Unless some such legislation is enacted, the national debt ceiling would fall Oct. 31 below the actual debt outstanding and the Treasury would be unable to continue borrowing to pay the government's bills.

Multibillion-dollar federal highway legislation died when House and Senate conferees deadlocked Saturday night and gave up trying to reach agreement. The possibility was raised that some states might run out of highway money before Congress could enact another measure next year. The unresolved argument was over permitting use of money from the Highway Trust Fund to finance mass transit.

The chief House conferees, Reps. John C. Kluczynski, D—Ill., and William H. Harsha, R—Ohio, said seven Senate conferees insisted on opening up the trust fund and refused to budge.

"They do not want a highway bill," Kluczynski and Harsha said in a joint statement. "They do not want mass transit for the cities. They want to bust up the Highway Trust Fund at whatever cost to the nation's city dwellers who need mass transportation and to the millions of Americans who need highways."

When the Senate returns it will have before it legislation to finance the foreign-aid program on an emergency basis until Feb. 28. Senate and House failed to agree on a full-year appropriation and the House voted the stopgap measure Saturday night.

Senate leaders also will be watching to see whether Nixon vetoes a big water-pollution bill regarded by the administration as a budget-buster. He has until midnight Tuesday to act.

In Brief...

Fight in State Prison

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — Five guards were injured Sunday evening when prisoners tried to take over the segregation unit at the Concord state prison, a spokesman said.

A prison spokesman said 17 prisoners were in the unit when fighting broke out between guards and inmates.

"It looks like it might have been involved with the transfer of some men from Walpole state prison," the spokesman said. "But we don't know for sure."

Rosetta Stone in France

LONDON (AP) — The British Museum's treasured Rosetta Stone was shipped secretly to France for an exhibition at the Louvre, and a plastic replica left in its case in London, museum officials announced. The stone with ancient inscriptions was found in Egypt by a Napoleonic solider in 1799.

Noise Impedes Words

WINDSOR, England (AP) — The roar of airplanes using London's Heathrow Airport drown out 265,000 words of wisdom from teachers at Eton College, six miles away, the students calculated. They figured that the lost words during each boy's five-year stay at the prestigious school amounted to 75 wasted hours.

Israeli Planes Hit Syria And Lebanon

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS - Israeli warplanes struck Sunday in Syria and Lebanon in a new move to crush Palestinian guerrillas at their bases.

"We are no longer waiting for them to hit first," a top Israeli military source said in Jerusalem. "This is the operative phase of our pledge to hit the terrorists wherever they are, and they are in Lebanon and Syria."

The 30-minute attack at five guerrilla bases in Israel's two Arab neighbor states came in a lull on Middle East borders. Usually, the Israelis have made such strikes only after guerrilla attacks.

Gen. Haim Herzog, former Israeli intelligence chief, said in an army radio commentary that "from now on the very presence of saboteurs" in Syria and Lebanon, whether or not they attacked on Israel's borders, "is to be regarded as provocation."

Premier Golda Meir of Israel said the raid came "in order to make the terrorists conscious that Jewish blood cannot be spilled without any reaction."

She said Lebanon and Syria were hit because in those countries terrorists planned the Munich killings, the Tel Aviv airport massacre and the wave of letter bombs mailed to Jews.

Speaking in Jerusalem to a delegation of the Mizrahi women's organization of the United States, Mrs. Meir described the air raid as a necessary measure to discourage the worldwide Arab terror campaign.

A Lebanese communique said antiaircraft fire kept the Israeli jets from hitting their targets in strikes along the coast between Sayda-also called Sidon-and Tyre and in the western Bekaa Valley. Syria said its air force drove the Israelis off after the attacking planes hit near Missiaf, about 100 miles north of Damascus.

An Israeli military spokesman in Tel Aviv said all Israeli planes returned to their bases after hitting at four guerrilla bases in Lebanon and one in Syria.

A Lebanese announcement said two civilians were killed, 16 wounded and two others missing in attacks on three areas.

A Lebanese military communique said the Israeli attack lasted five minutes and was directed at two areas between Tyre and Sayda and the other in Bekaa Valley. Witnesses, however, said the raids lasted about 30 minutes.

Jet Crash May Be Worst Ever

MOSCOW (AP) - One hundred and seventy-six persons perished Friday night when a Soviet passenger jet crashed and exploded near Moscow's international airport, a reliable Soviet source reported Sunday.

That would be the worst disaster in commercial aviation history. The deadliest previous crash on record occurred last year in Japan, when a Japanese airliner collided with a Japanese fighter plane, killing all 162 persons on the passenger plane. The fighter pilot, a student flier, escaped.

The Soviet Ilyushin-62 crashed in rain and bad visibility Friday the 13th on the outskirts of the small village of Krasnaya Polyana, three miles from Sheremetyevo airport.

The plane was on an unscheduled flight to Moscow from Leningrad, where it picked up an unknown number of passengers after flying in from Paris, the informant said.

He added that the plane was full when it departed from Leningrad airport and that, after it was loaded, five persons had to be removed because of overbooking.

A number of foreigners were aboard the flight, the source reported. He declined to be identified but was in a position to have access to the exact death toll.

Foreign embassies here have been told of 38 Chilean tourists, five Algerians, a Frenchman and a Briton being aboard.

The government news agency, Tass, reported Saturday afternoon that all aboard the plane were killed when it crashed at 9:50 p.m.

The government has refused to release any other information about the crash. It has not admitted publicly that a Soviet airliner was involved or that foreigners were among the dead.

The source said the crash site-the village's name means beautiful glade-was littered with shattered remains of the passengers and crew.

He added that three truckloads of bodies immediately were carted away from the crash scene and that no attempt was made at the site to identify the remains. Krasnaya Polyana is in an area of rolling hills and woods. The area is closed to foreigners.

Earlier reports said the plane crashed outside the village of Chernaya Gryaz, which means black earth, seven miles from the airport, but foreign newsmen who drove to that site found no evidence of any crash.

News of the death toll came as Western airline sources reported that the instrument lading system at Shremetyevo airport was out of operation Friday and Saturday. The system is intended to aid pilots land their aircraft in bad weather, particularly limited visibility conditions. A British European Airways flight was diverted Saturday to Stockholm, reportedly on the pilot's decision after he encountered bad visibility and the out-of-order landing system.

The Soviet plane was reported to have made three passes over Sheremetyevo, apparently checking landing possibilities, and crashed as it attempted to land on its fourth turn.

Dirigible Burglarized

PEARLAND, Tex. (AP) - If you were driving through this Houston suburb this weekend and saw someone towing a 34-foot dirigible, call Frank Wolf and you might be eligible for a $500 reward.

Someone burgled his blimp. The blimp, the third one he has built, disappeared Saturday night or Sunday morning from in front of the etching firm Wolf runs when he's not busy blimp building.

Police found it Sunday about five miles west of Pearland. The top had been ripped, indicating someone was pulling it with a vehicle and it hit an overhead structure.

Wolf said the blimp cost between $3,000 and $5,000 to build and he's offered the reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the blimp burglar.

SKOAL — Prime Minister of Japan Kakuei Tanaka and Prime Minister Chou En-lai of China toast each other in Peking. Prime Minister Tanaka now back in Japan, may soon call for a vote of confidence from the Japanese people to test his popularity. (AP)

Japan May Have Test Vote

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, back trimphantly from establishing diplomatic relations with Communist China, soon may call national elections and test his popularity.

Political commentators suggest the date will be in early or mid-December. Many expect Tanaka to dissolve the House of Representatives as soon as it convenes Oct. 27 for a special session.

The last election for the lower house was held in December 1969, and new elections are not required before 1973. But Japanese politicians are in an election mood and already have begun preparations.

Speculation about elections began immediately after Tanaka succeeded Eisaku Sato in July as president of the ruling Liberal Democratic party and, thus, as prime minister. The Liberal Democrats began thinking about establishing a basis for long-range plans under the new leader, whose thinking sometimes is at odds with the party's old guard.

Tanaka has denied any intention of dissolving the lower house soon; nevertheless, his close political associates already are preparing for an election.

Noting that Tanaka wants to pass a supplemental budget bill in the coming special session, some commentators say he still may be persuaded to dissolve the lower house before action on the bill to avoid for the time being a fight in parliament over government plans for a defense buildup and over its international monetary policy.

The Liberal Democrats would hope to come back after elections with a stronger hand to deal with these issues.

In case of an election, Tanaka likely would seek a mandate for his ambitious plans to remodel Japan by dispersing industry, building more railways and highways and arranging orderly districts for work and play.

The opposition parties are calling for greater welfare measures and for a reassessment of Japan's defense relationship with the United States, which they contend is suited for a cold-war era which has passed.

In the 1969 elections, the Liberal Democrats won 288 of the 486 seats in the lower house. Conversions by independents and by-elections since then have boosted their strength to 297.

U.S. Jets Hit All Indochina

SAIGON (AP) - Nearly 400 American jets, flying virtually around the clock, hit North Vietnam with the second heaviest bombardment of the year while B52 Stratofortresses struck in all four countries of Indochina, the U.S. Command reported Sunday.

The eight-jet B52s hit enemy positions just 15 miles from Siagon as well as in other areas of South Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and North Vietnam in the onslaught Saturday.

Smaller fighter-bombers of the Air Force, Navy and Marines hit with more than 350 strikes in a wide area of North Vietnam - ranging from the demilitarized zone to the corridor between Hanoi and the Chinese border.

F111 swingwing jets flew night raids from bases in Thailand.

The heaviest raids of the year against the North came on Aug. 16, when more than 370 strikes were made, the U.S. Command said.

One informant reported the intensification of the air war had been ordered by the Nixon administration because North Vietnamese units had shown no signs of pulling back from the South and "are still carrying out their activities."

The U.S. Command refused to comment on reports that the escalated raids were aimed at forcing Hanoi to agree to a cease-fire at a time when secret negotiations are said to be at a critical stage.

But senior U.S. Air Force officers have maintained that the only way to get a settlement and the release of Americans held prisoner is to pour on air strikes.

The command said targets attacked in North Vietnam included the northwest rail line connecting Hanoi and China, ammunition depots, fuel depots, supply trucks, highways, bridges, water-borne logistics craft and warehouses and supply storage areas.

Swingwing F111 fighter-bombers struck after dark along the northwest rail line, attacking the Ving Yen ammunition depot, the Viet Tri railroad yard and a second unnamed rail yard. The strikes ranged from 12 to 31 miles northwest of Hanoi.

There were no major fights reported in South Vietnam, but enemy troops carried out nearly 100 harassing attacks, most of them with rockets and mortars.

They shelled and attacked a military dependents' camp at a district town 75 miles northeast of Saigon, killing nine militiamen and five of their dependents and wounding six soldiers and six dependents, South Vietnamese headquarters said.

Scattered fighting was reported about 30 miles to the northwest and 30 miles to the northeast of Saigon. Headquarters said 39 enemy soldiers were killed, while government losses were six dead and 21 wounded.

Mismanagement Responsible For Low Work Production

SEATTLE (AP) — Mismanagement - not union action - was responsible for low work production in recent months at Sea Land Service Inc. terminals, a dock workers union leader has testified.

Shaun Maloney, president of Local 19, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, told a U.S. District Court contempt hearing Saturday that he found loading operations last month "highly unusual" and "time consuming".

He said some confusion resulted from having four work gangs on one ship from putting cranes in locations where tractor drivers had to take longer routes around them, causing the crane operators to wait for vans.

Maloney said he once worked as a driver at Sea Land and testified he could not recall seeing so many gangs working one ship.

The union leader was the first defense witness in contempt proceedings against the union before Judge Morell Sharp. The Pacific Maritime association has charged the ILWU with violating two federal court orders prohibiting a slowdown at Sea Land.

Sharp's second injunction, issued Sept. 14, made the union subject to a $10,000 fine for each day the slowdown continued.

'End-The-War' Advocates Defeated

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressional war critics lost ground this year in their most persistent campaign to require withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Indochina.

In an election year struggle, the Senate reversed its previous majorities for setting a war-end deadline and cutting off funds; and the House increased its voting support for President Nixon's war policies.

The Senate, which turned out as many as 61 votes in 1971 for an end-the-war amendment passed another one twice in 1972 by 50-44 and 49-47 before turning it down 45-42 on a third try in September.

In the House, end-the-war advocates were defeated by margins of 92 to 50 and 52 votes in successive roll calls on the issue in June, August and September. A year earlier they came within 44 votes on one occasion and 22 votes on another on procedural questions involving the war and other issues.

"Apathy" said Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana, "is the reason for the failure."

"People would like to forget a war that is so immoral so divisive so costly in lives and money."

Sen. J.W. Fulbright D-Ark., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, blamed it on a lack of will in Congress to take responsibility.

"The legislature, which does not hesitate to defeat or over-ride the executive on domestic legislation or to reject a Supreme Court nominee, reverts to a kind of tribal loyalty to the chief when war is involved," Fulbright wrote in his new book, "The Crippled Giant," published in September.

Nixon Claims Major Gains

THURMONT, Md. (AP) - President Nixon said Sunday his administration has "fought the frightening trend of crime and anarchy to a standstill." And he pledged to seek stiff mandatory sentences to keep drug pushers off the streets.

In a paid political broadcast from his Camp David retreat, Nixon asked Americans to join in making "the next four years a period of new respect for law, order and justice...a time of new hope in a land free from fear, and a world at peace."

The speech was the second in a series of nationwide radio addresses Nixon is making in his low-profile campaign for re-election. He didn't mention Democratic opponent George McGovern by name, but he blamed past Democratic administrations for skyrocketing crime and drug problems.

For example, Nixon said during the period of 1965 to 1967 "drugs were widely glamorized....and government was responding only feebly to this menace..."

Campaign '72

The narcotics problem, he said, reached epidemic stage during that period. But after he took office and declared total war on drugs the situation changed. "We are winning this war," he said. "The raging heroin epidemic of the late sixties has been stemmed."

But the chief executive said more needs to be done.

Declaring that "the dangerous trend of light or suspended sentences meted out to convicted pushers by permissive judges must be halted," he added:

"I shall ask the next Congress to require stiff mandatory sentences for heroin traffickers, and to amend other federal statutes so as to keep these peddlers of death off our streets after their arrest."

He said crime nationwide increased only 1 per cent during the first half of this year, and that in 72 large cities crime actually decreased.

In a statement issued by his Washington headquarters, McGovern said Nixon's claims of success are based on "misleading and fabricated statistics" and that the President "has already presided over the biggest increase in crime and drug addiction in history."

The number of addicts has jumped from 315,000 at the end of 1969 to 560,000 today, McGovern said.

CollinsOnOH

James G. Collins, Democratic candidate for State Representative, will pejsonally carry his issue-oriented campaign to the UMass campus this week.

Tonight, following the opening of his campaign headquarters in Amherst, Collins will begin a door-to-door canvass of students registered to vote on campus. The first dorm on Collins' campaign swing will be Noah Webster House in the Orchard Hill residential complex. Tomorrow evening, Collins will visit voters in David Grayson and Eugene Field Houses. On Wednesday night, he will talk with students registered to vote in Emily Dickinson House.

McG Rests In L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Democrat George McGovern, resting between a California campaign swing and a stumping drive in Texas, says the 1972 election offers "a glorious opportunity to cast our vote on the side of life and hope and peace."

The Democratic presidential candidate offered this view Saturday night at a labor-sponsored rally in the Los Angeles Sports Arena where John F. Kennedy won the party's presidential nomination a dozen years ago.

It was a rally with lots of pizzazz. As the candidate stepped on stage, scores of balloons and great quantities of confetti were dumped on him from the rafters as a brass band snakedanced out front.

President Leonard Woodcock of the United Auto Workers Union and Cesar Chavez, head of the United Farm Workers, attended. Declaring that it is "time to restore decency to the leadership of this country," McGovern added a phrase that he has been using frequently in California:

"We want to say to the special interests and to the wiretappers and to the warmakers, give us back our country."

This line was inspired by the Democratic convention speech given by California Assemblyman Willie Brown during the fight over seating of McGovern's state forces, "Give me back my delegation."

During two days of appearances in California, the Democratic candidate held three well-attended rallies, one which more than filled San Francisco's Cow Palace and another that brought thousands to a public park in San Diego.

McGovern flies to the Texas capital of Austin Monday to address a joint session of the state legislature, then goes to San Antonio for a rally speech in front of the Alamo.

The South Dakota senator obviously has been heartened by the response to his national television campaign speech Tuesday in which he said that as president he would wind up the Vietnam war within 90 days.

He told the crowd at the Sports Arena that two days of mail reaction brought 30,000 letters and $750,000 in contributions.

Brooke: Nixon To Win Mass.

"I don't want to shock you in Amherst, but I predict Richard Nixon will carry Massachusetts in the Presidential election in November," said U.S. Senator Edward W. Brooke last night at the Lord Jeffrey Inn in Amherst.

Brooke, campaigning in Western Massachusetts met about 75 Republicans and urged them to support Nathaniel Reed and Gary Whitlock, Second Hampshire District representatives, and John Barrus for state senator.

Brooke, seeking re-election expressed concern over the increasing power of the executive branch of government in Washington. He state, "I believe in the check and balance system." He wished th· legislative branch of government, which is closer to the people, would regain some of its lost power.

WMUA 'Focus'

Tonight on WMUA's "Focus" program at 10 P.M., commentator Ken Mosakowski will review a series of recent events in the 1972 Presidential election battle.

With only three weeks remaining before the november 7th elections, what effects will such factors as opinion polls, subterfuge on the Indochina War, and alleged Republican sabotage of the Democratic Presidential campaign have on the voters?

Black Theatre To Perform

The National Black Theatre will appear at UMass Saturday, Oct. 28, at 8 p.m. for a single performance sponsored by the Fine Arts Council in conjunction with the Third World Alliance.

This is one of several special events being offered throughout the 1972/73 season, and will be in the Student Union Ballroom.

The National Black Theatre, under its director, Barbara Ann Teer, will offer excerpts from its current offering "Change/Love Together/Organize/: A Revival". Recently reviewed in the New York Times, the work is characterized as "an exasperating work, spectacularly brilliant in its concept and in much of its design, but also unfocused at times, wandering, as it were, away from its basic strengths in search of a somewhat over-emphasized political definition. The piece concerns itself with the effects of drug addiction on the lives of those living in a Harlem neighborhood: the junkies, their victimizers, pushers and policemen. The National Black Theatre details the drama of Black reality, myth and legend. It's a tomorrow form, available right now to all those willing to grasp it."

Thirty-five "liberators-musicians" all of whom have been trained by the Theatre's founder-producer-director, Ms. Teer, comprise the National Black Theatre. The "Revival" was made possible through the collective efforts of many prominent artists and theatre personalities, including playwright, Charlie Russell, noted for his "Five on the Black Hand Side". Mr. Russell has created a story line and characters which have been incorporated spiritually and creatively by Ms. Teer into the National Black Theatre's unique ritualistic form.

Tickets go on sale today, Oct. 16, and are priced at $1.50 to the general public and $1 to UMass full-time undergraduates, and may be obtained by contacting the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the door to one hour before the performance on Saturday, Oct. 28.

Notices For Veterans

It is essential that veteran students who are eligible for educational benefits under the G.I. Bill and "War Orphan" students to re-enroll annually at registration on a V.A. form in order to insure continuation of these benefits.

If you have not yet re-enrolled with the Veterans' Office please do so at once. Our office is located in Room 239 Whitmore Administration Building.

The Certification of Attendance card (blue-green stripe across the top) for your last period of enrollment must be completed and returned to the Veterans Administration if you expect to receive education assistance for the current school year. (for most students this card will be received in the spring.)

If you have misplaced the card, contact the Veterans Administration.

Report promptly any change in dependency or training status.

Clydesdale To Discuss Food

The second in a series of health lectures offered by the Commuter Assembly will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union tomorrow at 12:00. The guest speaker will be Dr. Furgus Clydesdale, assistant professor of Food Science and Technology at the University, discussing various aspects of dieting and nutrition.

Dr. Clydesdale will discuss a number of issues of importance to the food consumer. He will deal primarily with fad diets and their relationship to the nutritional requirements of the body. He will also talk about "natural" vs. "chemical" foods and the questions of the necessity of food additives.

In cooperation with the talk by Dr. Clydesdale, the state extension service will have a table set up on the Concourse level of the Campus Center with information on diets, various recipes for vegetarian and organic diets, and nutritional requirements. The purpose of the table is to help those who are on these types of diets, or any other kind, to be sure they are nutritionally complete.

The Decision

While the Collegian is in agreement with the General Court decision last night to uphold the constitutionality of the 15 Senate seats reapportioned for the Third World (It isn't too cool for a democracy to be unrepresentative) we would like to tell the Senate they were lucky.

The bill is on very shaky ground. While the SGA constitution states that the apportionment of seats is to be done by population the reapportionment directly violates this by allocating 15 seats to the one or two hundred students who, according to John Hogan, registered to vote in New Africa House.

That Clause in the constitution should be amended so that the Senate can create a constituency of "common interest". The General Court chose to ignore this in its majority decision, and defined its own common interest constituency.

The inclusion of members of the UMass Third World community in the Student Senate is a vital necessity. We would suggest to the Senate that they revise their constitution to make the reapportionment legal, or face the likelihood of a reversal by a higher court in the future.

'DEFENSE CUT'

Very Heavy Games

The following is a message from a member of the Third World Alliance to the Third World Community. The author would hope that the vanguard of this political structure will view it as constructive criticism aimed at avoiding a recurrence of these pitfalls and strengthening the organization.

By YACUNDU SUKARE

Since the inception of the Gage Committee, some very heavy games have been run on the minority community at UMass.

The games begin with the formation of the Gage Committee and its subsequent development of the Committee for Affirmative Action. The Committee was supposedly formed to alleviate minority non-representation; on the administraive, faculty and student levels. This committee is a fraud and the recent actions of the people involved in both the birth and the ongoing actions of this committee are proof of this.

One action being spoken of here has to do with the recent appointment of Gage as Vice Chancellor and the role Fred Preston played both in public verbal statements and behind the scene. Preston, one of the primary components of both the Gage Committee and the Vice Chancellor search, was in support of Gage for the position of Vice Chancellor from the very beginning.

Included among the nominees of the Search Committee was a Mr. Gourdet, a black Haitian scholar, with supposedly acceptable credentials. Mr. Gourdet comes and chats and smiles and appears very confident about his ability to fill the position as Vice Chancellor only to later decline the nomination. His reasons, HE MIGHT HAVE A BETTER JOB OFFER FROM SOMEWHERE ELSE, AND HIS BELIEF THAT GAGE AT THIS TIME IS THE MAN BEST QUALIFIED FOR THE JOB!!

It is illogical at this point how someone would turn down a position which was practically sewn up, for another position that might be offered "somewhere else" (very vague). But these pieces fall right into place when we later learn that Mr. Preston and the other search committee members did not even bother to confirm the particulars of Mr. Gourdet's resume. It would have been more than simple to check out whether or not Mr. Gourdet had received his PhD. from Cornell University BEFORE they brought him here for inspection. This is not to support the PhD. qualificiations necessary for the position of Vice Chancellor. But our people know that when applying for jobs of this caliber a Black person can expect no less than a microscopic investigation of his background. He was never investigated, because they never intended to have anyone but Gage. Mr. Gourdet's appointment was a fraud aimed at (1) the appeasement of the minority people (2) giving credibility to the Affirmative Action Committee and (3) Mr. Preston's quotation for Mr. Gourdet, (Gage being the best man for the job at this time.), served as a stamp of approval from a minority person. And thus the wishy-washy liberal Gage (the man supported from the beginning) was appointed Vice Chancellor.

Gage and Preston in collusion with each other for their own self-interest, with the sanction of the Third World Alliance in its support of the Committee for Affirmative Action, have perpetrated a scandalous fraud on minority people at this University from beginning to end.

But the treachery does not end there. There was an empty position for Associate Provost to administer programs involving minority peoples at the UMass campus. The idea was to put a minority person in charge of this office to assure administrative representation of our people. Now look at what has been done.

In order to once again deny minority people the correct mechanisms for both regress and positive actions in dealing with our people's concerns and problems, the office is now being used to represent WOMEN'S FEMINIST ACTIVITIES and minority interest. It is inconceivable how the white women's "let us in on the capitalist exploitation of the world" movement can be incorporated into a program which was supposed to be designed to alleviate the effects of that very exploitation.

And is a minority person appointed to this Provost position? NO!! A very white, extremely European woman is appointed, whose only claims to fame are the ability to speak and instruct the correct use of the Italian language, and being awarded a FULBRIGHT scholarship. These qualifications may be very worthwhile for the feminist movement but the only purpose the Italian language has served for minority peoples is its utilization as a tool of oppression against third world peoples in America and around the globe. Let us not forget Mussolini's invasion of Ethopia in the thirties, while Fascist Europe and imperialist North America looked on! And Black people in the States know the effects of Fulbright the man and the educational grants this foundation is financing for the study of genetic inferiority of Black people and research in methods for the extermination of Black people (vasectomy, sterilization, etc.). There is no reason to assume she will be accountable to the committee for Affirmative Action as it relates to minority peoples.

Meanwhile, over at the School of Education's Plantation, Slave Master Dwight Allen is continuing his games. Many people see all the Black, Brown and Yellow faces and are inspired by their involvement at that institution. But let us consider the fact that Dwight Allen has economic interest in a country which thrives off the life and death of so many of our people in Southern Africa. When we consider this fact one very important point comes to mind. That is that he is more than willing to be the educator of minority peoples, as long as they are of the caliber of the bankrupt Negro leaders of the past who will accept and support such claims as "conditions in Southern Africa are looking up for the Blacks there" and that we should have faith in the governing structure which subjugates and murders our people, both in Southern Africa and in the United States.

But when these students do not appear to be going along with the program they must go. This is the main reason for his underhanded handling, mismanagement and non-support of minority scholarship programs last year and this year. He is a racist and dangerously destructive person who will jump on any bandwagon to muster up a shiny public relations image. Last year it was the Committee to Combat Racism. When this feeble lie was exposed by the politically aware, he had to find something new to join to maintain his image as a glowing liberal. It could be stated at this time that Master Allen in his latest antics is seeking out "psuedo minority" support. This time from a group who have an administratively legitimate power position. His latest joke? The sponsoring of the Women's Mini Marathon caucus. A caucus which has so little shame as to try to integrate the cause of white women to control the mechanisms of oppression, with the plight of the exploited minority populations in this country to overcome their oppression. DISGRACEFUL!!!!! Is this what is meant by affirmative action?

And the non-action of the Committee for Affirmative Action continues.

Why have there been no minority involvement in the very powerful Faculty Senate? This Senate continues to be almost "Lilly" white, yet it determines how courses shall be handled and how monies allocated for the education of our people are spent. Where is the Affirmative Action?

The Administration of Orchard Hill in an act of reverse tokenism, is allowed to sacrifice two very competent minority people, to appease the racist elements at Orchard Hill and appoints one white boy! Where is the Affirmative Action?

The Athletic department appoints a Black "assistant" football coach and continues to deny Blacks, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, Asians and Indians their right to participate fully in the Athletic sports and scholarship programs which can lead to very lucrative futures in professional sports. Where is the Affirmative Action and Third World Alliance, with your full calendar of cultural events, where are you?!!!!

And then to top it off, the Black "assistant" (yes, another Black assistant) director of security, the same one who guarded Master Allen's divide and conquer ballot box, has had erected a police booth at the entrance of the road which leads to New Africa House. The erection of this booth itself stands as evidence that our representatives at this University are viewed with total disrespect. As a result of this new look-out point our brothers and sisters have been continually harrassed by the campus police, our cars have been ticketed and towed away while that road with its crators and unlit view continues to slowly destroy our cars. And there is no relief in sight. Affirmative Action for who?!

Games, man, games. In every direction the eye can look, games are being played on our people. Games that first spin a web, which traps us, then holds us for the final injection of venom from the racist, the greedy and the ignorant. Each one as dangerous as the next.

It is imperative at this time for the structure which calls itself the voice of our people, which purports itself to be the people to start immediate actions against these developments. Demand a meeting with the leaders of the Third World Community at University of Massachusetts, Amherst to deal effectively with both the non-progress of the Committee for Affirmative Action and the destructive role they have played in the lives of our people on this campus. The people involved in this committee have proven themselves to be carriers of a deadly disease, OPPORTUNISM.

VALUES TO CHOOSE BY IN 1972

The fate of men and nations is determined by the values which govern their decisions.

In 1972 let us choose to enhance the quality of daily life.

For ages the daily life of mankind has been dominated by materialism, by acquiring things and money or by the deprivations due to lack of money. Industrial and technological development has fostered this life focus and induced a "quantity" syndrome, which threatens world asphyxiation. Human demoralisation and the erosion of spiritual and social values are inescapable results.

Today, loud and clear, the demand arises for new values to live by, better standards of behavior and a move towards simplicity and quality in all aspects of daily life. The "Four Freedoms", and equal opportunities for all citizens to practice these freedoms, involves self-restraint and self-forgetfulness in each, that all may benefit.

A moral commitment and a change in consciousness are necessary to the enhancement of a "quality" environment. The spiritual quality of the peoples of the U.S. is one of love and compassion, generosity and understanding. Let us place responsibility only in the hands of those who demonstrate these qualities.

The spiritual quality of daily life is a value to live by.

Letters To The Editor

Colonialism

To The Editor:

I hope that Abraham Lincoln was right when he said that "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth". I hope that when our government says that it acts in the name of world democracy, it means by that the idea that the only ones fit to rule the people of a country are the people themselves. Not a selected elite, but the whole mass of the people. I hope that these things are true, yet I know they aren't. For right now, our government and some of our largest corporations are closely supporting a government which believes in the opposite of what this country was supposed to have been founded on. I don't mean South Vietnam or Greece; I mean Portugal and its African colonies of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea-Bissau.

For hundreds of years, Portugal has ruled these countries on the classic colonial fashion of forced labor, exploitation of natural resources for its own profit, and contempt for the natural rights and civil liberties of the people-rights and liberties which we like to take for granted. The native people of these colonies are, by law, denied educational or medical facilities (after all, what's oneless ignorant worker among so many?). They suffer under a notoriously cruel secret police system, and the quality of Portugal's colonial system in general would make Stalin's Russia look like Walden Pond. But I haven't got the space to list all of the details of Portugal's repressive policies; I just want to indicate, in a general way, the conditions under which these people must live.

Our government and some of our corporations enter into this by providing direct financial support to the Portuguese regime. The Nixon Administration has made an almost unprecedented arrangement granting Portugal $435 million in economic aid-an action which was taken without Senate advice and consent and which the New York Times said was "in contempt of the Constitution". Among our corporations, Gulf Oil in particular heavily supports the Portuguese by giving them an average of $20 million, and as much as $50 million, per year, in exchange for oil exploration and production rights.

What does Portugal do with all that money? It's spent mainly on the military; and the Portguese military spends most of its time trying to put down the highly successful liberation movements which have arisen as a rather natural reaction against Portuguese fascism. These movements (MPLA in Angola, FRELIMO in Mozambique, and PAIGC in Guinea-Bissau) began non-violently 10-15 years ago. Having tried non-violence and having found that it had no effect on Portuguese brutality (could you get Hitler to wear flowers in his hair?), they began a struggle which has, so far, freed large areas from Portuguese control. In these areas the people are governing themselves, educational and medical facilities are being set up, and the standard of living, although still very low, is reaching levels not possible under Portuguese colonialism. These movements deserve the respect and support of all those who truly believe in democracy.

Having said all that, let me just announce an informal meeting for all people interested in either offering support for the MPLA et. al., beginning a Gulf boycott (which is taking shape nationally), or both. Tuesday, Oct. 17, in the UCF offices on the top floor of Hampshire House.

Both Too Busy

To The Editor:

Well, Keith Loescher and I have agreed on one thing, anyway. We're both too busy to keep on writing letters to each other. But, I just want to take this opportunity to point out the fallacies in his letter.

First, I have read all points of view on the issues we've discussed and all I'm doing is expressing my opinions based on fact. The book I have referred to all along, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy" (no doubt, the "gospel" you referred to), contains facts upon which I've based my letters. Think this one over for a minute: If the facts mentioned in this book aren't true, couldn't the author and publisher be sued for slander?

As far as not keeping an open mind, it appears that you are the one guilty of this offense. Refusing to read the abovementioned book is a vivid example of this.

Now for the final comments you have put into your letters: It appears that you have a big misconception about right-wingers. If you really had an open mind and read conservative literature, you'll find that we are far from being fascists or nazis.

So Keith, if you say you have an open mind(?) read the book and then think a little, if your closed mind allows for it.

I hope this is the last letter I have to write on this. Mr. Loescher, your letters make me sick as you make little sense and are really simple to tear apart. Peace, Keith.

Women At WFCR

To The Editor:

DEMANDS OF THE COMMITTEE ON WOMEN'S PROGRAMMING AT WFCR

We demand the support & commitment of WFCR to women's programming in the following concrete ways:

1. Creation of a full-time paid position for a feminist woman to produce women's programming.
2. An adequate operating budget to insure that this programming will be carried out effectively. (refer to Barbara Patterson's budget.)
3. That station managers be responsible for providing these necessary funds.
4. All money contributed to the Woman's Hour be allocated to the budget of The Woman's Hour.
5. Since salaries are in great part paid by listeners, we demand an investigation into the salary differences between men and women on the staff, by a public statement of salaries to be published in the WFCR program guide and by justifying these pay differences between men and women.

We are not asking for other salaries to be lowered or for periodic pay increases to be omitted, rather we are demanding that women on the staff have salaries commensurate with men's salaries.

6. We will not under any circumstances accept volunteer programmers or volunteer fund raisers, and consider the management's efforts to recruit volunteer programming an indication of its lack of committment to women's programming.
7. That the best qualified feminist be hired for this full-time position. That Sebern Fisher is that feminist and has the needed radio qualifications. (1-1/2 years of experience with public radio in N.Y.C. and a year with WFCR working primarily on The Woman's Hour). We want to insure that Sebern is not discriminated against for her political agitation concerning the reinstatement of The Women's Hour.
8. We expect action to be taken on these demands by October 23, 1972.

We wish to restate our support of Barbara Patterson in her struggle for quality programming within a male supremacist power structure.

Editorial Points

Arnold House in the Quad is named after a man by the name of Arnold Hoar. Now you know why it's the only dorm on campus named after a first name.

Well, the Student Senate finally beat the Collegian in football yesterday, 20-6. But we promised to take a dive after last week's victory, anyway. Maybe now they'll be a little more thoughtful when the time comes for our budget to be passed in the Spring.

The Governor's appearance at the Trustee's meeting in Framingham Saturday was a good show. All he needed was a straw hat and a cane.

But you have to give the governor some credit. It's his job to tighten the purse strings in the state. He's just starting in the wrong place, considering that for years Massachusetts has ranked 49th in its per capita support for public higher education.

Hey! Have you been down to the Hatch on a Sunday morning? It's quiet, the plug on the juke box is pulled out. NO MUSIC! So, next Sunday go to the Hatch. Have a donut. And walk, not shake away from the table. (It's illegal to play a juke box on Sunday). Thank you, O Puritan Fathers.

Boston's getting some new streetcars. The new cars will swivel in the middle, and give a quiet ride. They're even installing new temperature controls. Of course, they still need more cars as well as better cars. At least it's a step in the right direction.

Dear Mr. Tackeff

To The Editor:

I received in the mail last Friday a letter from Matt Tackeff in which he expressed his desire to have me personally confront him with the issues I raised in my letter-to-the-editor published Tuesday of last week. Instead of quoting excerpts from the letter, I think it better that it be aired in full:

"Dear Mr. Fernandez,

The next time you find the urge to insult me or accuse me of racism, please have the courtesy to express your feelings to me personally, instead of wasting space in the Collegian. I sincerely doubt that you would have the courage to be so offensive and derogatory in my presence.

Cordially, Matt Tackeff"

Well, Tackeff, I'm glad you finally resonded. It was certainly impressive to receive a letter from you on official YAF letterhead. But could you not have addressed yourself to the points I made? Or is it you who lacks the courage to discuss such matters in an open forum such as is provided for in the Daily Collegian? I hope it is clear to you and readers of this paper that rather than attacking you personally, I was attacking your racist ideology and exposing it for evaluation by the student body at-large. Your ideology represents a dangerous racist and fascistic attempt to demoralize and disrupt the progressive movements on this campus, no matter how disorganized they may be at this time. You would entice me into personal confrontation with you so as to cloud the intent of my charges. But Tackeff, you have failed in this respect and have, in fact, dealt a blow to your own ideology by relegating a public issue to a personal one. I hope that in the near future, you will not stray from the public stage of political struggle into the back alley of private confrontation.

Canvass For George

To The Editor:

McGovern isn't beaten yet--unless we are all lethargically resigned to four more years of Nixon. Some of us haven't given up, and we are organizing a 5-College faculty car pool to transport student canvassers to those areas in southern New England and western New York where they can be of most use.

If you are willing to supply a car and act as a chauffeur (and, if you want, as a canvasser) on a weekend or during the week, please leave a message for me at Bartlett Hall, UMass. Or phone me during the day at 545-2329, evenings at 253-9848.

This is a vital job. Large numbers of 5-College students are being mobilized to do the canvassing, but they need our help. Won't you say Yes to them--and to a potentially better future for all of us.

Navy Docks New Seawomen

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) - The new Navy wasn't quite ready for Seaman Rct. Kathleen M. Licalzi.

But then again, neither were Miss Licalzi and nine of her colleagues quite ready for the new Navy. Miss Licalzi is among the first contingent of women assigned to regular seaman duties at the U.S. Naval Station across the Severn River from the U.S. Naval Academy.

She and her female shipmates arrived a week ago, but their new quarters in the enlisted men's barracks were not ready yet.

In the meantime, the 10 girls are staying in cramped quarters on a yawl, one of the boats used for training midshipmen at the academy.

Although Navy women always have been allowed to hold the rank of seaman, it was not until Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Elmo M. Zumwalt instituted his "new Navy" that women were permitted to go to sea. Miss Licalzi and her group are believed to be among the first Navy women to receive sea-going training, according to a Navy spokesman.

As the first women working in the station's boat yard, the girls have gotten a mixed reaction from the sailors around them.

"They're either willing to do anything for you, or they growl, 'Get out of my way,'" Miss Licalzi, a tiny, 21-year-old blonde from Abington, Pa., said.

"The young guys are mostly happy to have us here," she said, "But some are mad because we are taking some of the guys' places and they had to go to sea."

For most of the girls, the assignment to seaman duties in the boat yard came as a shock.

"They didn't tell us what we were going to be doing until we got here," Miss Licalzi said. "I had them repeat it. I didn't believe what I heard."

Like the other girls, she had been expecting office work or perhaps a job in the commissary with an opportunity before too long for more training in some specialized field.

Instead, they will be working as regular seamen, sanding boat bottoms and painting and repairing the sailing craft used for training midshipmen during the spring and fall.

The girls also have been learning how to operate boats, tie knots, splice lines and other nautical matters not covered in their basic training at Orlando, Fla. For most, it was a new world.

"I went fishing with my father once," Miss Licalzi said when asked about her previous seafaring experience.

Miss Licalzi had hoped for training in the area of marine biology, and Susan Strickler, a 19-year-old brunette from Albert Lea, Minn., says she'd hoped to get to work in data processing.

Capt. George W. Lindgren, commander of the naval station, said the present assignment probably would last about four months and then the girls would be eligible for new posts, possibly more to their liking.

UMass Students Helping As Hospital Volunteers

By KERRY MELLO

"I was scared at first, but it's good to sit down as friends with the patients, and you feel as if you're really doing something."

These words, stated by Janet Nagy of the Northampton Volunteers, capture the sentiment felt by most UMass students participating in the program. The volunteers are a group of approximately 100 interested students, from the five-college area, who wish to understand mental problems and to help the patients interact more readily with their environment.

At Northampton State Hospital, the volunteer program is headed by Mrs. Jeanne Boynton, a member of the Hospital staff. Mrs. Boynton places an emphasis on "community treatment", and under her organization the program attempts to foster a feeling of participation on the part of the patient in normal community activities. Another objective Mrs. Boynton wishes to realize is, "that the volunteer, and thus the community, come to know the patient as a person, and not something to be wondered at."

The main group visits the hospital on Thursday night, although volunteers may come any day of the week. Once there, students fan out into different wards, supervised by a student leader. The program is very flexible and any type of activity that interests the patient is permissible. Craft programs, such as knitting and a jogging program have been introduced. Most of the volunteers, however, simply talk or play cards with the patients. Occasionally, roles reverse and patients entertain the volunteers. One such patient nicknamed "Zorba the Great", astounds all with his intricate magic tricks.

The program thus far has proved effective. "The students are looked upon as friends, and in this role can motivate the patient not to fear the outside," states Mrs. Boynton; also, "volunteers want to be there, people know that and it helps the patient gain self esteem."

Although many have signed up for the program more volunteers are needed, especially males. The only prerequisite is that the student be honest with himself and be consistent in his attendance. As student leader Mel Cohen states, "The more people that come, the more people that are happy." For anyone interested, UMass busses leave every Thursday at 6:30 from Hasbrouck and at 6:35 from Patterson in Southwest.

Eugene Ormandy Bringing Philadelphia Orchestra Here

Eugene Ormandy will lead the Philadelphia Orchestra in concert in Curry Hicks Cage at UMass on Thursday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ormandy has chosen for his program Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore No. 1", Symphony No. 3 ("Pastoral") by Ralph Vaughan Williams, and Symphony No. 4 in F Minor by Tchaikovsky. The inclusion of the Vaughan Williams work is in observance of the 100th birthday of the distinguished English composer.

Remaining tickets to the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert at UMass will be available at Curry Hicks Cage Main Entrance from 6 p.m. Thursday and may also be ordered by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst until 5 p.m., telephone 545-0202. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $2.50 for full-time UMass undergraduates.

Eugene Ormandy conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra

Directors To Explain New World

Dick Steckel and Terry Rode, directors of the New World Coalition, will be at UMass to talk with students about the program Thursday.

They will be at Machmer Hall, Room 313, from 1 to 2:30 p.m.

New World Coalition is developing a number of programs to involve high school and college students in issues of development and social justice. It is piloting a "self tax" program to enable students to commit a per cent of their resources to support development projects in this country and overseas while learning more about world-wide development.

It is also piloting a "social marketing" project which will offer individuals and institutions an opportunity to use their purchasing power in support of their belief in social justice and the need for new non-exploitative economic forms by making available selected consumer products from Community Development Corporations.

These CDCs are cooperatives in minority communities across the U.S. which produce goods ranging from office supplies to toys. The first major social marketing effort is a mail order catalogue offering the products of ten of these CDCs. The catalogue is called Shop the Other America and is available for 25¢ per copy from New World Coalition.

Nueva Directiva de 'Ahora'

por. Edmundo Velazquez

El pasado 2nd oct. de 1972, se llevo a cabo una reunion de la organizacion hispana "Ahora" en la cual se eligio la nueva directiva que esta llevando su cargo desde ese momento. La nueva directiva de "Ahora" esta compuesta, por el senor Gilbelto Sotolongo, como nuevo presidente de la organizacion, senor Angel Lopez (estudiante graduado) como vicepresidente, la Srta. Maria Hernandez como secretaria y la Srta. Ramona Rodriguez como testorera. Estas personas son las que componen la nueva directiva de la organizacion "Ahora".

Ademas de elegir la nueva directiva que fue uno de los puntos mas importantes de la reunion se discutio tambien sobre otros temas de gran importancia. En esta reunion se aprobo la constitucion de la organizacion la cual habia sido sometida a ciertos cambios. El senor Pedro Rivera (tesorero anteriol de la organizacion) dio su informe sobre la situacion economica de la organizacion, explico el senor Rivera que han sido aprobado $650.00 dolares para la organizacion por medio del Senado Estudiantil. Para usar este dinero es necesario llenar ciertas formas especiales, ya que este dinero es administrado por agencia del Senado Estudiantil. Esta cantidad aumenta el capital de la organizacion a $784.00 la cual solo contaba con $134.00!.

Les damos las mas expresivas gracias al senor Angel Garcia (presidente anteriol de la organizacion) y a todos los demas companeros por su labor realizada como mienbros de la directiva.

Queremos darles la bienvenida a todos los nuevos miembros de la organizacion "Ahora" que estan ejerciendo su cargo en la mesa directiva desde el pasado 2 de oct. 1972.

El proximo lunes 16 de oct. a las 7 P.M. se llevara a cabo la proxima reunion de "Ahora" la cual sera con los siguientes propositos. 1) Lectura y aprobacion de las minutas discutidas en la reunion pasada. 2) Aprobacion de los nuevos comites de trabajo. 3) Reporte del comite de miembros. 4) Reporte del comite de Finanzas. 5) Reporte del comite de reclutamiento. 6) Reporte del comite de Noticias.

Los asuntos nuevos a discutirse en la reunion seran los siguientes; a) Rosa Blanco (miembro de la organizacion) dando informe sobre la Organization Alianza de Tercer Mundo. b) Recomendaciones para formar nuevos comites. c) Cualquier comentario de importancia que surja en la reunion.

Esperamos que todos los miembros de la organizacion "Ahora" puedan asistir a la misma.

Amherst To Conduct Traffic Survey

Motorists in Amherst are advised of a forthcoming traffic survey to be conducted by the Office of the Town Planner for the Amherst Redevelopment Authority. Its purpose is to provide detailed information about parking and circulation patterns for several town committees studying the problems of traffic and transportation in Amherst.

The traffic survey will be conducted throughout one day in October. A survey area has been mapped and checkpoints designated on all entrance and exit roads. Checkpoint stations, manned by a squad of volunteer workers, will be defined by bright yellow or orange traffic cones and identified with large signs.

Upon entering the survey zone, motorists will be asked to stop and pick up a data sheet on which the survey worker will record and entrance station number, the time, the type of vehicle, and the number of passengers in the vehicle. When leaving the survey zone, motorists will be asked to deposit their data sheet with a survey worker who will record the exit number and the time.

The survey sheets will be scanned by machine and translated into computer data cards. A computer will then analyze the data gathered during the traffic survey and print out a detailed report of parking and circulation patterns within the survey area. Final results of the traffic survey will be available by the end of October.

The Office of the Town Planner is asking for the cooperation of all motorists and--although the interruption of traffic flow is expected to be minimal--for their patience in any inconvenience which might result from the traffic survey activities. The information required for reasonable deliberation about traffic circulation and parking in Amherst can only be collected by the tedious but comprehensive procedures of the traffic survey.

THE JERUSALEM BIBLE — READER'S EDITION

SPECIAL GIFT EDITION

Alexander Jones, General Editor
Illustrations by Salvador Dali

The famed Jersusalem Bible is now available in a deluxe format illustrated throughout with 32 full-page, 6-color illustrations by Salvador Dali. These illustrations — rich in color, imagery and insights — were specially selected to provide an overall view of the events, themes, and personages of the Bible. This handsome new edition contains the complete and unabridged text of the Jerusalem Bible. Notes and introductions have been especially condensed to make them more suitable for the general reader. Other outstanding features include: a large, readable typeface; single-column pages with verse numbers in the margins; and two silk ribbon markers. Luxuriously bound in padded sturdite, it is gilded with gold foil on all sides with gold stamping on the front, back and spine.

Moon Dust In Geol. Dept.

A tiny bit of dust in Professor Stepehen E. Haggerty's laboratory at UMass geology department not only came all the way from the moon, it came by way of the Soviet Union.

The dust is a lunar sample scooped up by the unmanned Soviet Luna 20 mission and Dr. Haggerty is on a team of 35 selected U.S. scientists assigned to study a portion of the sample under a U.S.-Soviet exchange program.

Luna 20 made a landing in the highlands region between Mare Fecunditatus and Mare Crisium and the core tube returned half full with 50 grams of material. Under the U.S.-Soviet agreement, two grams of this were forwarded to the U.S. for analysis.

Study of the Luna 20 sample is important for several reasons, according to NASA, the first one being the importance of a comparison with Apollo 16 samples. "These are our only samples from interior terra regions and the amount of similarity between them will dictate the degree to which we are able to generalize about the nature and composition of the premare lunar crust," according to the NASA instructions to Dr. Haggerty.

Dr. Haggerty is a mineralogist who has been involved in the analysis of lunar samples ever since the Apollo 11 mission.

Bears Finally Win; 17-0

CLEVELAND AP - Quarterback Bobby Douglass ran for 115 yards and one touchdown and passed for another score as the Chicago Bears defeated the Cleveland Browns 17-0 Sunday for their first National Football League victory of the season.

The victory snapped a nine-game losing streak for the Bears that extended back to their ninth game last season and was the club's first regular season shutout since a 13-0 triumph over Baltimore in the late stages of the 1965 season.

A ferocious Bears defense limited Cleveland to 37 yards rushing and nine first downs-the latter all through the air. Cleveland was able to cross midfield only twice.

The Bears took command of the game on their second possession as tight end Earl Thomas caught a side-line pass from Douglass for 21 yards, then picked up eight yards on an end-around. He tallied on a 41-yard scoring play, gathering the ball in at the seven and romping it to the end zone.

Neither team threatened again until the third quarter when the Bears traveled 68 yards to the Browns' one and had to settle for an eight-yard field goal by Mac Percival.

Douglass put the game on ice with 10 minutes to play when he faked a run and rambled around left end on a 57-yard bootleg for the deciding touchdown.

Middle linebacker Dick Butkus led a fierce Chicago charge that limited the Browns' Leroy Kelly to 14 yards in 10 carries and Bo Scott to seven carries for minus-four yards.

Vikes, 23-20

DENVER (AP) - Veteran Fran Tarkenton fired a 31-yard touchdown pass to Gene Washington with 17 seconds left in the game to lift the Minnesota Vikings to a 23-20 National Football League victory over Denver Sunday.

Tarkenton's last-ditch heroics erased a magnificent performance by Denver's Floyd Little, who scored three touchdowns, two of them in the final quarter, to bring the Broncos from behind.

Little, who gained 100 yards for the day, caught a 36-yard TD pass from quarterback Charley Johnson as the Broncos took a 7-6 lead late in the second quarter.

After the Vikings had used the toe of Fred Cox and Bill Brown's one-yard scoring plunge to build a 16-7 advantage, Little took matters into his own hands.

Minnesota's only turnover of the game, a fumble at the Viking 27 early in the fourth quarter, set up Little's 27-yard jaunt on the next play, cutting the margin to 16-14. Then, with 53 seconds left, the six-year pro from Syracuse skirted left end on a pitchout from two yards out for the go-ahead score.

Steelers Win

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Rookie fullback Franco Harris rambled for 115 yards on 19 carries, leading the Pittsburgh Steelers to a 24-7 victory over the Houston Oilers Sunday in a National Football League game. The 230-pound Harris carried 10 times for 46 yards on a second-quarter drive and plunged over from the one for a touchdown that put the Steelers ahead to stay at 10-3.

Houston, which managed only seven first downs all day, had taken a 7-0 lead early in the first quarter when Ward Walsh blocked a punt by Bobby Walden and recovered it in the end zone for a touchdown.

Pastorini finished the game with 10 completions in 22 attempts for 46 yards.

Griese Injured As Miami Wins

MIAMI (AP) — Veteran quarterback Earl Morrall came off the bench in the first quarter Sunday after Bob Griese suffered a right leg and ankle injury and threw two touchdown passes, leading the unbeaten Miami Dolphins to their fifth straight victory, 24-10, over San Diego in a National Football League game.

Morrall, who at 38 will have to carry the Dolphins through most of their season because Griese suffered a leg bone fracture and dislocated ankle, tossed an 18-yard touchdown pass to Howard Twilley in the second quarter and opened the second half with a 19-yard scoring aerial to Paul Warfield.

The Dolphins, pro football's only undefeated team, capitalized on three San Diego blunders for most of their points in taking a 17-3 halftime lead.

Their first score came after Dennis Partee of the Chargers had a punt slide off his foot and travel only nine yards to the 50. Griese was injured three plays later when hit by Deacon Jones after throwing a 35-yard pass to Jim Kiick which was broken up on the five-yard line by San Diego's Bob Howard.

The Dolphins settled for a 37-yard field goal by Garo Yepremian.

On the fifth play of the second quarter, Charger running back Mike Garret fumbled a handoff and Dolphin safety Dick Anderson picked it up on the run and carried it 35 yards for a touchdown and a 10-3 lead.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Cancer person is naturally shy and reserved. Unfortunately, many persons misunderstand and interpret this as a sign of "sulkiness". The Cancer native is capable of sulking, but usually prefers to eat. Cancer individuals are affectionate, have an understanding of children, are loyal to family and capable of accumulating large sums of money. Cancer harmonizes with Taurus, Virgo, Scorpio and Pisces. There is attraction to Capricorn, but caution should be exercised in dealing with Libra and Aries.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on hopes, friends, special desires. You are able now to discover whether efforts will result in profit. Face facts as they exist. Discard outmoded concepts. Imprint your own style. You are on winning path.

UMass Harriers Romp Over Weak UConn

By WALT POWERS

The performance of the UMass Cross-Country team on Saturday can be summed up in one word, "overpowering." On a cool, clear almost perfect day for running, they forgot about UConn's home-course advantage, and ran away with an 18-42 victory.

UConn was hurting at the top. Bob McCusker withdrew early in the race, apparently because of an illness, and Pete Bortolotti was not running particularly well. So it was up to Bill Cantin to try to take control for UConn.

He started fast, but Randy Thomas stayed close, and his persistent pursuit wore Cantin down. At the halfway point, Thomas took the lead for good. Bill Gillin passed Cantin at the three-mile mark, and a half mile further he caught Thomas. From there, they ran together, content withholding a comfortable lead.

Meanwhile, the UMass middle was running aggressively, and in the second and third miles they built up a big edge. After Cantin, the next three positions went to UMass. Doug O'Connell managed to take sixth, despite a dangerous fall about a mile out.

Rick Barry finished things off for UMass with a wild sprint at the end. In the last seventy yards he passed Chris Chambers and Pete Bortolotti and caught UConn's Fran Brough at the finish.

The outcome of the meet wasn't much of a surprise. The margin was, but "Though UConn was hurt by the weak showings of some of their top runners, I doubt they could have beaten us, even at full strength," said Coach O'Brien.

The team as a whole ran its best race of the year, and O'Brien was encouraged. "This wasn't a difficult race, but it was a more accurate reflection of the team. Everybody improved this week, and our top five were much closer together in their times. Rather than hitting an early peak, and falling off, I'd prefer to see the team build a momentum that will carry them at peak overall strength into the Conference and New England championships."

UMass record is now 2 and 3.

Soccer Team Bows to Tufts

By DOUG FIDLER

The Tufts varsity soccer team used its home field advantage to perfection to upend UMass 4-1 Saturday afternoon in Medford.

Barry Lucien, up from the JV squad to back up Carl Vercollone, started at goal, but left at halftime with an injured finger. He was quite nervous at the start, as this was his first intercollegiate game.

Coach Gerry Redmond started the sophomore to give him some experience under fire before the very important Yankee Conference games are played.

The Jumbos used perfect tactics for their small field, as they kicked the ball upfield and then ran after it. The score was 3-1 at the half, as only Tony King could score for the Minutemen.

UMass, which plays Redmond's disciplined passing game, had trouble working the ball around, since the small field caused congestion in the middle and a deterioration of passing. The visitors changed tactics in the second half, using much the same as the Jumbos, and came close to scoring on several occasions.

"This was our worst defeat of the season," said Redmond. "We just made too many mistakes, but I know the squad will be able to bounce back for the Rhode Island game next Saturday."

JV Harriers Win

Saturday, in a three-mile race that preceded the varsity, the UMass JV's overcame UConn and upped their record to 3 and 2.

UMass won the race primarily on the strength of their top runners. The big move of the race came near the halfway mark where Tom Wilson grabbed the lead, and Mike Roy took over in second. Wilson was running very strong, and won by a good margin over Roy. Mike Gillen came on hard at the end to take fourth. Final Score: UMass 23, UConn 32.

Punchless Pats Drubbed Again By Jets

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)-The New England Patriots figured the New York Jets would "try to ram the ball down our throats" and they were right.

That's exactly what Emerson Boozer and John Riggins did in powering the Jets to a 41-13 National Football League victory Sunday.

Boozer and Riggins combined for four touchdowns and 318 yards on the ground, surpassing New England's total offense.

"We knew both Riggins and Boozer were healthy again and the Jets would try to ram the ball down our throats," New England Coach John Mazur said. "Boozer and Riggins did as we expected, but our guys didn't tackle. Mistakes killed us again."

Most observers, including the Jets, were surprised when the Patriots won the pre-game toss and elected to start with a whipping wind at their backs, rather than receive the opening kickoff.

"We're glad to have the ball at any time," New York Coach Weeb Ewbank said. "We feel if we don't score, we don't deserve to win."

With Riggins carrying eight times for 50 yards and Boozer four for 21, and Joe Namath completing a pass, the Jets took the kickoff and marched 80 yards in 13 plays for a touchdown, Riggins scoring on a short run.

Boozer, a seven-year veteran who has wrecked the Patriots throughout his career, scored on runs of 37, 23 and 8 yards while carrying 18 times for 150 yards.

Riggins, a pro sophomore from Kansas, scored New York's first touchdown on a six-yard smash and went on to pile up 168 yards in 32 carries.

Establishing the bruising ground game at the outset, New York quarterback Joe Namath gave his pitching arm a rest. He threw only two passes until late in the first half. Then he struck three times, with the third a 27-yard pitch to Rich Caster in the end zone putting the Jets in front 21-6 at the half.

The Patriots got a pair of second period field goals from Charlie Gogolak and then pulled to within striking distance on Carl Garrett's 41-yard touchdown sprint in the third quarter.

However, the Jets made it a rout on two field goals by Bobby Howfield and a pair of touchdowns by Boozer, who raised his career scoring total to 40 TDs by rushing.

The Patriots won the toss and elected to take the wind and kick off. The Jets promptly moved 80 yards in 13 plays to go ahead to stay and set the tone for the day. Riggins carried eight times for 50 yards in the drive and Boozer carried three times for 21 yards, with Namath passing to Caster for the remaining nine yards.

Riggins, who surrendered the American Conference rushing lead last week while playing only one half against Miami because of a strong bid to regain first place. Boozer also saw limited action in the Miami game because of a pulled hamstring.

Namath kept intact his record of not having played in a loss to the Patriots since his rookie season in 1965.

Riggins and Boozer didn't try to fool the Patriots. Most of the time they ran right at the New England defenders in an awesome display of power.

Namath had one pass intercepted, setting up one of Gogolak's field goals. Short punts by Steve O'Neal, kicking against the wind, set up Gogolak's other field goal and Garrett's touchdown run.

Namath threw only eight times in directing the New York attack while he virtually sat in a rocking chair. He completed five five for 63 yards.

Except for Garrett's scoring run, the New York defense held the Patriots in check. New England managed just 136 yards rushing while Jim Plunkett completed 14 of 26 passes for 148 yards. He was intercepted twice.

The victory boosted the Jets record to 3-2 while the Patriots fell to 2-3.

JV Booters Lose

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The Lord Jeffs were billed as a strong defensive unit, and now the JV Minutemen booters know all about it, as the guys from down the road played exceedingly well both ways Saturday morning to beat our guys 1-0. The setback puts the Minutemen's overall record at 2-1 while Amherst is 1-0.

The first half was a hard fought struggle for both teams. Amherst had a slight advantage in play and they moved ahead on the scoreboard as Coffin tallyed with about a minute left in the stanza. What Coffin did, was catch the left side of the defense off guard and worked his way in front of the UMass net. The ball came to him and that was that, 1-0 Amherst.

The second half was totally Amherst, as the Minutemen couldn't get their offense rolling. Time and time again, the Minutemen would get stifled in The Lord Jeffs' end, and the Jeffs would come right back on attack. Only good goaltending on the part of Steve Richter and help from up above kept the score as close as it was.

The highlight of the second half would have to be the fine save made by Richter on an Amherst penalty kick coming from right in front of the net. It looked like a sure bet, but Richter drove to his left to make the brilliant save. Richter was called up only two days earlier, as Paul Peloquin and Tom Fenton were both sidelined with injuries. Peloquin played the first half as it was, but gave way to Richter for the beginning of the second.

Coach Jack Berryman had some comments concerning the offensive showing his team gave, "our offense never could get generated, we couldn't seem to find the open man and many times our guys simply onto the ball too long. Our individual ball control skills were not at their best, as many times we kicked the ball right at an Amherst man."

The final statistics bear out the strong effort on the part of the Lord Jeffs. The Jeffs had an edge on shots 15-8 and on corner kicks 10-4.

Well, for the Minutemen it's on to Deerfield Academy for a pick-up game this afternoon at the #2 soccer field across from Boyden, and then they travel to Greenfield Community College on Thursday for a regularly scheduled game at 4 PM.

Giants Score Late; Upset 49ers, 34-17

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Running back Charlie Evans scored from four yards out with 1:31 remaining to give the New York Giants a 23-17 National Football League upset over the San Francisco 49ers Sunday.

Evans' run capped a 43-yard drive in seven plays after the Giants' Pete Athas intercepted a John Brodie pass when 49er wide receiver Preston Rilev slipped and fell.

Following the Evans score, the 49ers moved from their own 20 to the Giant 25, but a last-second pass from Brodie's replacement, Steve Spurrier, was interecepted in the end zone by Athas as the gun sounded.

Brodie was injured with just 33 seconds left in the game, and had to be taken from the field on a stretcher.

Minutemen Bomb BU

By EARLE BARROLL

There have been (and are) Minutemen -- historical, political and otherwise -- but this story (and the season) belongs to another such deemed group that performed its wizardry at Alumni Stadium on Saturday.

The UMass football team -- now going on its third week as Minutemen -- took Boston University to the bridge and made amends (and more) for last year's humiliation (47-21) by crushing the Terriers, 44-15 before a crowd of 12,500.

In so doing the Minutemen (4-0) threw out the book of conventionalism on a number of plays -- via blackboard planning and the idiosyncracies of the human psych - made regularities taboo for the afternoon and blitzed the Terriers (0-5) up and down Alumni Stadium field with the type of football head coach Dick MacPherson prophesized at the beginning of this season as being "wide-open".

Actually B.U. had things to its own likings for most of the first quarter (14 minutes and 56 seconds worth to be exact) when the initial shock of its wishbone attack sprung fullback George Katapodis on a 58 yard jaunt that set up a one yard burst (PAT missed).

"After this first series we changed our defense to another one we prepared for this wishbone," said defensive coordinator Bob Pickett.

With the Terrier passing game left somewhere back on Commonwealth Ave. "We went to an eight man line," said MacPherson. "Sometimes we even went to nine and ten men. But as you see (B.U. had almost 380 yards rushing -- mostly on big gainers) we didn't take away trom then the rush -- the thing we do best."

But as Pickett went on to point out, "When we needed it the defense made the big play (two fumble recoveries and three interceptions)."

Ditto the offense.

At that 14:56 mark in note speedster Paul Metallo (110 yards on the afternoon) took a hand off from Peil Pennington, slipped a tackle behind the line of scrimmage, averted several others cutting back across a congested middle and let his 9.4 hundred speed do the rest as he outran the B.U. secondary to put UMass on top 7-6.

And this was only the beginning.

From all catagories the fireworks came. Specialty teams ("superb" -- MacPherson), running plays, returns, passes, options and defense. They all came of the spectacular variety as not one score (out of 44 points) came from within 24 yards out.

For instance: (Now get this!!!) When was the last time you saw a quarterback (like Pennington) receive a 24 yard scoring pass from his halfback (Metallo). Or when did you see a fullback (Dick Cummings -- 68 yards rushing) rear back and launch an option pass to brilliant Steve Schubert for 54 yards in stride for the first of three Schubert touchdowns.

From the spectacular, yet more than likely catagory comes these gems: Schubert taking a B.U. punt on his own 20, splitting the first wall of defenders, breaking to the left sideline and cutting back to the right sideline with his 9.8 speed leaving the Terriers in his wake.

Or Schubert again slipping behind the B.U. secondary to haul in a 38 yard strike from Pennington. Or Metallo "merely" bursting off-tackle for 36 yards and a score.

Or just for an added momento the B.U. center snapping the ball on a trajectory that brought it to rest at the base of the scoreboard.

MacPherson was noticably happy with the victory, which incidentally matches his team's entire win output of last season (9-4-1 lifetime mark). "I'm sure that the players enjoyed it as much as the coaches," he said. "It's always a great feeling to see the plays that you work hard on in practice work for you in game situations.

"Our specialty teams were what we've been after. They've come a long way since last year at this time when B.U. scored on a punt and kickoff return. A lot of credit has to go here to coaches Bob Lord and Larry Pasquale who have worked extremely hard in getting our specialty teams ready."

A Hairy Problem

Down below the border, four years ago in Mexico City, Mark Spitz made a lot of noise about how he was going to take five gold medals. He got none.

Four years later a more subdued but confident swimmer swept to an unprecedented seven gold medals. What was the difference??

A few months ago when the Sox were floundering, Carl Yazstremski could not buy a homerun. The boo birds were having a field day with their comments from the stands.

Along came September and old number 8 was back in the groove hammering away once again in the three spot. What was the difference??

Steve Carlton for the past few years was just a good pitcher who had the good luck to be pitching for a good hitting club. Sore arm miseries had many thinking that he might be washed up.

Traded to the forever last Phillies, the strike-out artist fanned 310 enroute to winning 27 games. What was the difference??

Fu Manchued Joe Willie Namath was on top of the world a few years ago with his inspirational leadership.

The past few years Broadway Joe has been injury prone and erratic (he threw 6 TD passes against the Colts and a week later his Jets dropped a 16-13 decision). Does a few years make that much difference??

The Jekyl-Hyde performances of these stars and many more have been baffling, but now I think I have the solution to the difference. Look once again at the preceding athletes for a similarity. Even the Jekyl-Hyde analogy is appropriate. The answer*-HAIR. Each of these men in their stardom had moustaches.

Reminiscent of a wet look-dry look commercial, today's athlete has been rapidly changing his facial expression. The crew cut, clean shaven hero of Mickey Mantle vintage has turned to the hairy Athletics and Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (Dolphins' Kiick and Czonka).

A look at almost any sport (excluding the Women's division of roller derby) will support this claim of the reversion back to pre-1900 styles.

A look at the present Oakland Athletics will reveal that 19 of 25 perfer the hairy lip look. You can't argue with success, as this year, the new look has given them a two game lead in the World Series.

Before Charley O. Finley offered $300 to those players who would refrain from shaving under their noses, the A's were just good players who could make the playoffs but no further.

Then it happened, the miracle method worked once again. Even the genius of the new, mod Dick Williams has sharpened. Who else could think of using six second basemen in one game?

Look at what happened to the new look Philadelphia Eagles. Last year, a new coach took over and decried the uncouth look. The glass eating linebacker was shaved and then traded.

So far, the clean shaven squad has been wearing a path to the cellar door while losing four straight.

This new revelation could have serious consequences in modern sports theory. What happens if everyone stops shaving?

Even more incredible, just think of what would happen if Head Coaches Dick MacPherson and Jack Leaman adopt the new method. Would the scoreboards be able to handle all the activity?

Was last year's basketball captain, Mike Pagliara, on to something really big in the last few games last year? (He did pour in quite a few buckets against Fordham with the new, bold look.)

Now that you've had a peek at the newest innovation since the forward pass, you must reaize that this method is not a sure fire advantage. If you do not believe it, take a glance at Bill Ballou. (The man who predicted the New York Rangers in the Stanley Cup Playoffs and who wrote Red Sox Reeks...) and see if it does not leave you speechless.

A's Take 2-0 Series Lead

CINCINNATI (AP) - The crack of the bat had that ominous solid sound and Jim "Catfish" Hunter, gunning for a World Series victory, hesitated as he looked towards left field.

It was the ninth inning Sunday, Cincinnati's Denis Menke had connected with a Hunter fast ball and sent it soaring toward left field stands. The Oakland pitcher turned just in time to see left fielder Joe Rudi leap against the wall for the catch that saved Oakland's 2-1 victory over the Reds.

"I couldn't believe it when he caught it," said Hunter. "I thought the game was tied."

So did Rudi.

"I thought the ball was out," he said. "Four to six inches higher, and I miss it. My stretch might have been the limit. It was right at the very end of the web of my glove."

The catch preserved the lead and, a few moments later, reliever Rollie Fingers preserved the victory as Oakland grabbed a 2-0 edge in the series.

Fingers came on to get Julian Javier for the final out and, as Hunter left the mound on the perfect 70-degree sunny fall day, he tipped his cap to the capacity Riverfront Stadium crowd and national television audience.

Catfish, who earned his nickname when he skipped school one day in his native Hertford, N.C., to go fishing, deserved the ovation he was acknowledging.

"I didn't want to come out," said Hunter. "I still thought I could get them. I wanted to stay in there all the way."

Although the ninth inning was dominated by Rudi and Fingers, this was a ball game that belonged to Hunter.

A 21-game win during the regular season, Oakland's ace right-hander displayed some pressure pitching that eased him through early jams.

The A's, who won Saturday's opener 3-2, displayed a tight defense behind Hunter, who was at his best with men on base.

Daily Collegian

SPORTS

The Reds stranded eight runners, four of them in scoring position.

Cleanup hitter Johnny Bench, who led off as batter in four innings in the opener, came to bat with a man on base only once and that was the key to Hunter's success.

Catfish's bat didn't hurt either. He drove in Oakland's first run with a second-inning single against loser Ross Grimsley.

Sal Bando opened the second with a single to left and then was forced at second by George Hendrick. Gene Tenace, hero of the opener with two home runs for the A's, flied out, but Dick Green singled up the middle, Hendrick stopping at second.

That brought up Hunter, who is so fiercely proud of his hitting that he talked owner Charles O. Finley into paying him an extra $5,000 for it after he batted .350 last season.

Hunter showed he was worth that extra investment. He drilled a single to left and Hendrick slid home with the game's first run, beating Pete Rose's throw to Bench.

Bert Campaneris followed with another single to left and this time Rose gunned down Green trying to score as Bench applied the tag.

The Reds almost got that run back with a giant-sized second-inning threat.

Bench, leading off again, opened with an infield single, then Tony Perez walked on a 3-2 pitch.

With Menke at bat, the A's were looking for a bunt and Menke appeared ready to give it to them. But Hunter himself erased that threat when he threw wild trying to pick Bench off second. Bench took third and Perez second on the play. And there were still none out.

Now Hunter turned it on. He struck out Menke for the first out.

Again, Williams walked to the mound, taking advantage of the World Series waiver of the regular-season rule that limits a manager to one visit per inning with his pitcher.

The A's decided to walk Darrel Chaney intentionally, loading the bases. The strategy paid off when Grimsley, not as good a hitting pitcher as Hunter, struck out. That ended the inning.

Rudi quickly gave Hunter the insurance he needed in the third when he drilled a one-out homer into the second deck in left field.

"The history of the human race is not seeing the obvious," so said science fiction writer Isaac Asimov to a crowd over 1,000 last night in the Student Union Ballroom. Asimov sees the population problem as being man's greatest roadblock in surviving. He believes diverting resources to space programs is not the answer and that our energies should be inwardly directed. (MDC Photo by Bernie Pine)

Asimov Sees 'Sci Fi' As Seer For Society

By MARK VOGLER

"The history of the human race is not seeing the obvious, and there lies the history of human tradegy," proclaimed Science Fiction writer Isacc Asimov to a crowd of over 1,000 in the Student Union Ball Room last night.

The remark came in a serious tone after the crowd had been in stitches for most of the Distinguished Visitors Program sponsored speech which concerned science fiction's serious impact on society.

Asimov hit the evening off following the introduction by giving a talk about introductions.

"Fellow students--that's a good short introduction, the best kind. The long introduction dulls the audience's attention span before the speaker gets a chance to tire them out.

"A clever one is better than a dull one. The speaker comes on as an anti-climax.

"But the best introduction is a long clever introduction."

At that point the microphone went off, causing most to believe that the public address system went haywire. But it was only Asimov's cleverness.

"I'm surrounded by assassins!," joked Asimov. He then turned the PA system back on and thanked the program chairman, adding: "But the best possible introduction is a short dull one."

With that opening, Asimov traced the history of science fiction, piecing together its significance in predicting the future of man.

"When I was young, I was considered a jack ass, a fool, and a nut because I foresaw robots, atomic bombs, and moon ships.

"But now I am considered a deep foresighted student of the future because I have forseen robots, atomic bombs, and moon ships.

"I have not changed, the world has. Science Fiction follows the trends in its own ways."

Asimov said that much of what science fictionists predicted in the 30's and 40's was reflected in the outcome of the 60's and 70's. He added that once the technological advance of science had succeeded, it left society. This prompted the writers to move in a new direction after all the space prophecies had been fulfilled--the environment.

According to Asimov, "science fiction now specializes on the ecological danger. We are faced with a world of over population, over pollution, and under resources. We are simply over-population conscious.

"Is Science Fiction going to be predicting again? I don't know. We're doom criers now."

"Doom criers needlessly arouse alarm, and the best thing to do is not to arouse alarm. If we don't die of overpopulation, then we'll look like fools. I'd wish this to be the case.

"But if we predict rightly, then we're criticized even more. Either way we are scorned. The same applies as to why Great Britain was caught sleeping in World War II. It was the fault of Winston Churchill who cried doom all through and turned the British people off."

The guest speaker then emphasized a strong need of population control before "we either starve each other to death or kill each other in mass muggings."

Asimov said he resented "two-legged baby machines and those who applaud when ever a proud woman walks in and announces that she has 12 children--as if she had won the Nobel Peace Prize."

"If we don't lick the population problem, he continued "then mankind as a living society will vanish from the earth. Science fiction has all along, been in the forefront of those who have speculated over population."

A question and answer period followed with Asimov giving a particularily humorous performance.

In regard to the possibility of the planet earth being invaded by another planet, Asimov said that if they were highly intelligent enough to approach our limits, they wouldn't touch us.

"What they would do would be to place a sign outside Earth reading: Nature--Preserve. Please do not disturb sub intelligent creatures developing."

Somebody popped the question about space exploration solving the population problem

"I doubt it. In the next 30 years, we'll have three billion more people. How many people can you fit on the moon in 30 years? Three

Upward Bound Moves Onward

Don Brown, Director of the Upward Bound Program at UMass, explains the goals of this organization which has been here since 1966. The program tries to aid high school youths from poverty backgrounds to develop academic potential by providing personal and academic counseling during their high school careers. These students come to UMass for summer courses to develop basic skills. (MDC Photo by Steve Smith)

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

With all the public service-student involvement programs on campus these days, people tend to forget the first: Upward Bound.

Upward Bound came to campus in 1966, here, according to a 1967 Upward Bound leaflet, "seeking to help apathetic, possibly hostile, youths with academic potential who have not had the preparation, motivation or opportunity to realize or demonstrate talents."

In the words of Don Brown, Director of the program, it tries to change high school students images of themselves from, "I can't to I can. We tell students how to make decisions, teaching them that they have power over their lives," the reverse Brown said, of institutional setting. The prime examples, he said, were the students' high schools.

Upward Bound first comes into contact with disadvantaged high school students in the 9th or 10th grade, follows them all the way through high school and into college, advising the students and helping them with any problems, academic or personal.

Those eligible must, according to Federal guidelines, come from a "poverty background". According to Brown, most students in the program are on welfare or in public housing.

The Upward Bound students come to the UMass campus in the summers during high school for "basic skill courses," Brown said; English, mathematics and history. The summer courses are important, Brown said, in that student opinion has a strong influence on what is taught and how it is taught. Brown said this helps give the student a better image of himself.

The program is successful in that virtually all of the students finish high school, and most go on to college, results often surprising to both the students and their high schools, Brown said. "Ninety per cent of high school is in an institutional setting, projected futures, SATs...we tell the student how to make decisions, teach him that he has power over his life, the reverse of institutional settings. It's a battle to fight the schools."

All 33 "bridge students" (students who have graduated high school and are back for one last summer) of this year's summer session went on to college, Brown said.

In addition to the summer program, Upward Bound has 15 case workers who visit the students regularly throughout the school year. "We don't see this solely as a job," Brown said. "We enjoy it. It's not an occupation but a growth experience." Fred Bernak, a case worker in the program said, "these students have our phone numbers and can call whenever they need help."

The program has 130 students on campus each summer, an increase in 10 students despite the fact that the Upward Bound budget has been cut from $156,000 in 1966 to $138,000 for this fiscal year. Brown thinks the budget cuts might be a way of "phasing the program out".

Despite their work, Brown said, Upward Bound has put only a slight dent in the problems that face them. To solve them, he said, it would take, "a fantastic amount of money". Education, he said, was just one aspect. Brown said the "total picture" would have to be looked at, housing, medical care, welfare, education.

Brown first came to the Upward Bound program in 1966 as a resident counselor in the summer program. After a summer in a community action program in New York City, Brown came back as head of the summer counseling program. In 1969, he graduated from Springfield College. He was appointed assistant director that year and in 1970 became director.

Community College Transfers As Successful As Undergrads

By BOB SCHEIER

Students transferring to UMass from the state's community colleges tend to do about as well as the school's undergraduates as a whole, according to the director of the UMass office of Transfer Affairs.

Dr. Ernest W. Beals, a former high school guidance counselor and director of the office, says the community college students have an average grade point average of 2.63. This compares to a university-wide average cum of 2.85 for undergraduates.

"Over-all, the student coming from a community college is well-motivated," Beals said. "He knows he's fighting for his academic life. Often, he commutes from home and is more serious academically, not faced with the social distractions someone coming straight from high school is."

According to Beals, public community college students make up 60 per cent of the 1600 transfer students the university accepted for the 1972-73 school year. There were over 5,000 applications for those 1600 places, the rest of which are filled by students from private community colleges and public and private four-year schools.

Beals said UMass gest more community college applications from the western than the eastern half of the state, with the greatest single number coming from Holyoke Community College.

On a school to school basis, transfers from Springfield Technical Community College (STCC) averaged a 2.46, those from Holyoke Community College a 2.70, and from Greenfield Community College a 2.76.

Holyoke sent 122 students to the school for the 71-72 school year, he added, with Berkshire Community College sending 69, Northern Essex sending 63, and Quinsigamond Community Council sending 57.

He said the reason STCC had only 25 transfer students moving to UMass was that it has only recently started its liberal arts program.

"I expect a lot more students applying from STCC," said Beals, "It has all kinds of students-those from the inner city, and students involved in business, secretarial, and industry programs."

Citing STCC's closeness to business and industry in Springfield, Beals said he expected the school "blossom into a full fledged, comprehensive community college, one that serves all parts of the community."

Beals said the most popular majors for the transfer students were Business Administration, Elementary Education, Social Sciences (sociology, psychology, and anthropology), Nursing, and Engineering.

The official university position is that it will accept any "qualified" community college student with a satisfactory- record and recommendations.

This means, in practice, that a student must have 54 transferable credit hours, said Beals, and a grade-point average of around 2.5, although he stressed there is no firm cut-off point.

"The most important thing," he said, "is what the student does in the community college. We're also more likely to accept a student whose cum may still be low but has been going up, than one with a still-good cum which has been going down."

He added that follow-up studies have shown that high school Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores and high school class rank have no statistical relationship to the student's performance at UMass.

Beals said the community colleges had a "close working relationship" with the school, and that guidance counselors from the community colleges came to UMass to discuss specific students.

While some schools use transfer students "just to fill dormitory or classroom spaces," he said, while denying them financial aid and other services, "once a student is admitted here, he is just as eligible for financial aid as any other student.

Third World Alliance Communique

Elections To Be Held

On Thursday, October 19, 1972, the Third World Alliance will be holding its second meeting in the School of Business Administration Auditorium #120.

At the last meeting the decision was made to restructure the organization, and many positions are now open which we urgently need workers to fill. We will be holding elections for the various committees which will be making decisions regarding our future posture in campus politics and how we will deal with our immediate problems. It is most important that all Third World representatives in the student government, both student senate and graduate senate, be present.

We are hoping that this meeting be as well attended as the last, and that all our people be present and on time.

THE PRESENT IS TIME FOR STRUGGLE!!!!! THE FUTURE IS OURS!!!!!!!!!!

Rep. Boggs' Plane Overdue

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - The Air Force launched a search for an overdue light plane carrying House Majority Leader Hale Boggs of Louisiana and U.S. Rep. Nick Begich, D—Alaska, Monday, the National Transportation Safety Board announced.

The NTSB here said the small plane, carrying four prsons, was due to land at Juneau at 5:30 p.m. EDT.

The NTSB spokesman said, "Some have suggested because it was a campaign trip they may have stopped along the way but we have no reason to believe that and really don't."

In Washington, the Federation Aviation Administration said the Cessna 310's fuel would have been used up by 8 p.m. EDT.

After the FAA at Juneau reported the plane was overdue, an air search was launched from Elmendorf Air Force Base.

The FAA said the plane had been operating on visual flight rules.

It was unable to say when radio contact was last made with the plane.

The other two persons aboard the plane were identified as Russell Brown, an administrative aide to Begich; and the pilot, Don E. Jonz.

Boggs had been in Alaska campaigning for Begich.

Wallace Continues To Heal

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) - Despite the paralysis in his legs, Gov. George C. Wallace is able to "brace walk" between parallel bars, his doctor said Monday.

And significantly, said Dr. H. H. Hutchinson, the stricken Alabama governor has learned to joke about his disability and the attempted assassination which has left him for five months - and perhaps forever - without the use of his legs.

Laughing at himself, the doctor explained, helps Wallace fight off despondency. And it reflects a stubborn determination to overcome his handicap.

Ever since Wallace was wounded at Laurel, Md., last May 15 while campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination, rumors have circulated that he is gravely ill. They continue.

Dr. Hutchinson said the governor is showing "slow but steady month-by-month improvement" and the abdominal abscesses which sent him back to surgery four times for pus drainage have cleared up.

Even though he is able to "brace walk," the doctor said Wallace still has no movement in his legs. He inches forward on the parallel bars by pulling himself with his arms and letting gravity carry his lower limbs along.

He may be able to walk again, the doctors have told him, with crutches and leg braces. Whatever it takes, Wallace says he will walk.

Wallace says he isn't sure he wants to attend another 'political rally "because I've been to one too many already." He had just finished speaking at a shopping center rally when he was shot.

His political future is uncertain because of his health, but Wallace already has said he may run for president in 1976.

Before 1976, however, there will be another election for governor, and it will surprise many politicians if Wallace's name isn't on the 1974 ballot. The state constitution now permits him to succeed himself.

Suit Action Delayed

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to delay action on a request that they seek an injunction stopping work on a controversial housing project in East Amherst.

Opponents of the plan, the Amherst Growth Study Committee, Inc. (AGSC) presented a petition they said had the names of 800 Amherst voters asking the selectmen to seek a ban on work at the site until it is determined whether or not it violates the state Hatch Act, which protects wetlands.

The AGSC is appealing the legality of the development, being built in Amherst Fields by Otto Paparazzo Associates to the state Supreme Court.

Paparazzo Associates has sued the AGSC for $500,000, and one of its directors, Assoc. Prof. Dana Snyder, of UMass for another $500,000 for malicious abuse of due process in challenging the development.

Last night, the selectmen passed a motion to seek legal counsel on whether the board had the right to seek an injunction, or the right to rule on the plan, which had been passed by the Amherst zoning board of appeals.

Snyder said delays in the appeals process could result in a "loss of meaning" for a decision against the development since the project might be completed by that time.

There was also disagreement over whether or not the state Department of Natural Resources (DNR) had issued a stopwork order on the site, on the grounds there were possible violations of the Hatch Act.

Another UMass professor, and AGSC director Dr. Ellsworth Barnard, said such an order had been issued by the DNR, but that work had continued at the site.

Atty. James Krumsiek, a representative of Paparazzo Associates, said no legal action had been taken by the DNR, but that a "mutual agreement" had been reached between the developers and the DNR after an on-site inspection yesterday afternoon by a DNR enforcement official.

Krumsiek said the official had noted "five possible violations" of the act," at which point the contractor ceased work.

During the meeting, there was repeated confusion over which sections of the project had been approved at different points by different town agencies.

A member of the Amherst Conservation Commission who said she was not speaking for the commission, said a cease and desist order had been recommended by the DNR Sept. 16.

Several persons, including Steven Howards, a UMass student who presented the petitions to the board, said many persons said they would not sign the petition for fear of court action by Paparazzo Associates.

Govt. Offers Money For Student Housing

By FRANCES BROCK

Housing at the University has been a problem for everyone, but married students are having to carry the shortest end of the stick. There is approximately a two to one ratio of students to Amherst residents. Nearly 3,500 students in the area are married. On the graduate level alone, 60% are married. Most of these students cannot afford or find housing in Amherst and therefore must live as far as 50 miles away.

Why isn't something being done? The answer, according to Skip Olmstead of the Northampton Housing Development Corporation, is that no one is aware of the federal and state aid available. For a corporation to build a housing development, the rent would be sky-high. The least expensive place in the area is the Colonial Village where rents range from $160 to $210.

The University has built three housing areas: Lincoln, University Apartments and North Village. The latter is a prefabricated construction which has kitchens that will not pass Federal Housing Administration size standards. The bedroom sizes of the other two developments will not pass F.H.A. standards either.

Something can be done even though, as Olmstead pointed out, the University has "failed to do it right." Federal aid for low-income housing is available to non-profit organizations. If a group, such as a church or even the University, decides to sponsor a development, the state or federal government will back such things as mortgages, 100%. Since such organizations would not be in business to make a profit, the rent would be minimal. Another project that the government will supply aid to is the condominium and co-op.

At present, the University does not have any plans in sight. Mr. Olmstead also pointed out that Robert Wood, president of UMass, was once head of housing in what was the equivalent of H.U.D. under Johnson. He, therefore, should know about the different loans and aid given by the government.

Skip Olmstead is investigating the possibilities of federal housing subsidies. His corporation is non-profit and was organized to research low-income housing in the area. Students interested in obtaining the needed housing can call Mr. Olmstead at 584-7821 or contact Dick Howland, Attorney for Students, in the Student Senate Complex. There will also be a meeting Thursday, October 19, at 7:30 in the Campus Center for interested students.

WMPIRG Case vs. DPU Heard

By AVIS YUNI

At the preliminary hearing of the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) and CONSUM IRATE (a committee of businessmen, labor leaders, and public officials) suit against the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) and the Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) held last Friday, October 13th, in the Federal District Court in Boston, the presiding judge refused to grant the temporary restraining order requested but decided that the case had merit enough to listen and give consideration to.

WMPIRG and CONSUM IRATE had asked the court to grant a temporary restraining order to stop the hearings on the WMECO $5.7 million rate increase which are being held by the DPU until the federal court had decided on their constitutionality. Since the judge at Friday's hearing refused to grant this, the DPU hearings will continue while the WMPIRG suit is being heard in the federal court.

If the temporary restraining order had been granted, then a preliminary injunction and finally a permanent injunction could have been requested. However, the judge left open the possibility that he may grant a preliminary injunction at the next session of the court dealing with the suit, according to Ronald Bogard, Director of WMPIRG.

While the judge turned down the request for the order, he did not turn down the whole case. He feels the suit should be considered. He requested that WMPIRG and CONSUM IRATE present more material and proof to support their belief that consumers are being denied due process of law since they are not being represented at the WMECO hearings.

According to Steve Ryder, President of WMPIRG, the judge is being very careful because he realizes the precedent setting value of this case. WMPIRG is saying that since consumers pay money to the company they have a property right, and it is being infringed upon when they are not represented at the hearings. Their money is being taken without due process.

According to Bogard, the question in the case is whether or not the consumers have a property right in relation to a company and is it involved here? He says the courts have already recognized property rights in relation to welfare and criminal cases. They have ruled that criminals were having their property taken without due process of law (which is contrary to the Constitution) when they were not represented by a lawyer in court. Thus, it became required that criminals have a right to have a lawyer at their trials. In welfare cases, it was decided that the recipient's property was being violated when their money was withheld without a hearing.

Bogard stated that the courts have already recognized the property rights on the part of the company. The law states that companies can't increase their rates without a hearing.

What WMPIRG wants, said Bogard, is to have the court recognize property rights on the part of the consumers. They want the court to adopt this principle from an analysis of those principles applied to criminals and welfare recipients.

He stated that the judge wants him to find evidence showing that the consumers are having their property right infringed upon. Bogard feels that the fact that the customers are having their money taken shows this.

thousand, maybe? No. The solution must be found on earth. And I think that space exploration in its natural context is human, not national. All the important problems that we have are global in nature.

"Population is a common menace. The wrong exploitation of resources is a common menace. The food supply is a common menace. It can only be dealt with globally."

Asimov summed his solution up by expressing a desire for a world government. "I don't say that we will have it. If we don't have it, though, we will be ruined."

Big Sur Slide

BIG SUR, Calif. (AP) - Heavy rains swept in on high winds Monday, pounding Big Sur hills and sending mud surging across the coast highway, blocking it for the second time.

No injuries have been reported in the slides.

Monterey County officials estimate the mudslides have caused $500,000 damage since the first slide on Friday night. County Supervisor Willard Branson said supervisors will meet Tuesday to take up a resolution declaring Big Sur a disaster area.

The latest slide was across from the village area of Big Sur.

Torrential rains had eased off briefly Sunday, raising hopes for a clean-up of shops and homes inundated by walls of mud up to six feet high.

The rain-generated mudslides along a three-mile stretch of the scenic Big Sur district buried 12 homes.

In The Nation And The World

Public Use Of Church School Okayed

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court Monday agreed to rule on the constitutionality of revenue bonds issued by states to help finance church-affiliated colleges.

The test case, from South Carolina, was one of seven new appeals added to an already crammed docket for hearings and decisions this term.

At the same time, by a 7-2 vote, the court allowed a Nebraska school district to operate a publicly financed remedial education program at a Roman Catholic high school.

The two dissenters, Justices William O. Douglas and Thurgood Marshall, contended the First Amendment and recent decisions by the court prohibit the use of government funds for instruction in parochial schools.

But Justice William J. Brennan who usually agrees with his fellow liberals in church-state cases, said the reading and mathematics program would operate completely independent of the Catholic school administration in Hartington, Neb.

In other actions, the court:

—Ruled unanimously that federal welfare regulations do not authorize Maryland or other states to bar striking workers from assistance.

The government has advised the court that the regulations are being revised to permit the exclusion of strikers. According to Maryland officials, striking workers were barred from welfare in four other states as well. They are Nebraska, Kansas, Utah and Oregon.

—Unanimously turned down a plea by Memphis school officials for delay in the ordered busing of some 14,000 children.

The action was significant in that the officials based their request partly on the recently enacted Broomfield Amendment, which states that desegregation orders for the purpose of achieving racial balance shall not take effect while an appeal is pending.

—Unanimously rejected a plea by the Richmond, Va., school board for preliminary moves toward the consolidation of the city's mostly black schools with two adjoining white suburban systems.

The desegregation plan was proposed last January by U.S. District Court Judge Robert R. Merhige Jr. and reversed in June by the U.S. Circuit Court in Richmond. The high court will rule on the board's appeal for approval of the consolidation later this term.

—Declined, 7-2, to consider an appeal challenging the legality of the Vietnam war through the way Congress has financed it. Justices Douglas and Brennan dissented.

The ruling was the latest in a series by the court over the past several years refusing to hold hearings on the war.

—Stayed, 8-1, a federal court ruling that struck down Connecticut's new abortion law. State prosecutors contended they would have no means of preventing "back-alley" abortions while they appealed last month's decision by the Hartford court.

Also accepted for review was a case from California that tests whether states must justify the levying of any filing fee for political candidates. Last February, the court struck down the Texas system, but there the fees ran up to $8,900.

Another new appeal to be heard early next year is from Georgia and involves an apportionment plan for its House of Representatives.

This case could have a broad impact since it concerns whether states and smaller areas covered by the 1965 Voting Rights Law must submit apportionment plans to the U.S. attorney general or to a federal court in Washington for approval.

In Brief...

UAW Calls Off Strikes

NEWTONVILLE, Mass. (AP) - Nog-Americans and non-whites are referred to negatively almost always then they appear on network children's shows, a study by the Black Efforts for Soul in Television said Tuesday.

The study was commissioned by Action for Children's Television ACT, and was carried out by Gilbert Mendelson and Morrissa Young, of the Washington-based survey group.

ACT said a total of 14-1/2 Saturday network children's programming from CBS, ABC and NBC was examined on videotape.

Minorities Seen Negatively

The United Auto Workers union called off its strike at the main General Motors stamping plant in Mansfield, Ohio on Monday and averted a strike at the Buick plant in Flint, Mich.

Strikers at the Mansfield plant were protesting the speed of the assembly line as well as the number of employes on it.

Geneticist to Ask For Funds For Research

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) - Dr. William Shockley says he will ask the National Academy of Sciences for the third time to study his theory that blacks are genetically less intelligent than whites.

Shockley, who won a Nobel prize for his role in inventing the transistor, said he will attend a private meeting in Washington Oct. 19 to ask the academy to fund research into his contention that heredity is four times more important than environment in determining intelligence.

Senate Votes Foreign Aid Cut

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate voted a sharp cut in foreign aid appropriations Monday, adding another potential roadblock to efforts to wind up the business of the 92nd Congress Tuesday night.

The Senate stripped $515.4 million from the $4 billion annual foreign aid spending level voted by the House Saturday night in adopting a resolution to permit continued spending until next Feb. 28.

The amendment was proposed by Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D—Hawaii, chairman of the Senate appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, and adopted by the full committee and the Senate by voice vote.

Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D—Arks., of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, warned that if the bill comes back from House-Senate conference with substantial increases over the Senate's $3.4 billion total, he would "do everything possible to prevent its adoption."

The Senate, with little else to do, recessed for several hours waiting for its appropriations committee recommendation on the foreign aid issue.

The House, meanwhile, was in recess until Tuesday with action scheduled on compromise versions of the big Social Security bill with its welfare reform provisions stripped in conference, and the controversial bill to increase the national debt limit and impose a $250 billion spending ceiling for this fiscal year.

The House must act first on both bills before they go to the Senate where Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D—Mont., conceded that "considerable conversation" could be expected.

The dispute over the level of foreign aid appropriations cropped up on a resolution continuing authority for foreign aid programs in the absence of a new authorization bill for military assistance.

A prior resolution continuing the programs since July 1 at a $2.9 billion annual rate expired Saturday midnight.

The President's budget for foreign aid this year is $5.1 billion.

Chile Truck Strike Gaining Sympathy

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) - Shopkeepers, striking in sympathy with truckers, kept their shutters closed Monday in defiance of Chile's leftist government.

Riot police spread throughout Santiago's commercial district and used tear gas to break up hundreds of persons shouting: "Chile is and will be a country in liberty!" on Calle Ahumada, the main business street.

The capital province of Santiago and 16 other provinces, of a total of 25, have been under a state of emergency, a form of martial law, since Thursday.

Army Gen. Hector Bravo Munoz, chief of the Santiago Emergency Zone, warned shopkeepers Sunday to open for business or face requisitioning.

The police were ordered to break up immediately any group that tried to demonstrate. For the second time in less than a week, President Salvador Allende's press office took control of all Chilean radio stations for a "national network" of state-controlled news, music and public announcements.

The Calle Ahumada incident was one of several clashes between police and groups of businessmen and youths in the downtown area Monday. By afternoon, the police were reinforced with jeep patrols of soldiers.

The Confederation of Business and Small Industry, which called the shopkeepers' strike Friday, claimed 90 per cent success Monday in the capital and the interior.

By agreement among members of the 110,000-strong organization, pharmacies and stores selling food items were allowed to open. Some basic foods such as rice and sugar are in short supply, however.

Abrams Going To Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, sworn in Monday as the Army's top soldier, was immediately dispatched to Vietnam for a fresh look at the war he presided over for the past four years.

Shortly after administering the oath to the new Army chief of staff, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Larid announced that he asked Abrams "to make an on-the-scene evaluation of Vietnamization progress."

The general is to report back in about a week.

The announcement was a surprise, even to high-ranking Army leaders who Pentagon officials said were unaware of the trip.

"Everybody's puzzled," said one official. Sources said the decision to send Abrams back was made by Laird only hours before the swearing-in ceremony.

Presumably, Abrams' report will be made public shortly before the U.S. presidential election in November.

Praised as "a man of few words and many accomplishments", the 58-year-old general, who made his reputation first as Gen. Patton's top tank commander in a colorful outdoor ceremony as cannons boomed across the Potomac River.

Abrams received still another medal to add to the four rows of ribbons decorating his crisply pressed uniform signifying service in three wars. Laird pinned on the Defense Distinguished Service Medal for "exceptional meritorious service" as commander of U.S. troops in Vietnam from July, 1968, to last June.

Abrams' nomination as chief of staff was held up nearly four months until the Senate Armed Service Committee completed its investigation of unauthorized bombings of North Vietnam last winter.

Abrams was absolved of any responsibility by the committee, which last week rejected the retirement promotion of Air Force Maj. Gen. John D. Lavelle, Abrams' air commander who was relieved in April for ordering the illegal strikes.

As the 26th Army chief of staff, Abrams assumes leadership of an Army slimmed down to a peacetime strength of about 840,000.

His biggest task will be to complete the Army's transition to a force of all volunteers by next summer.

Enemy Expands Viet Action

SAIGON (AP) — Enemy forces expanded operations in the central highlands Monday forcing South Vietnamese militiamen to abandon a firebase under heavy shelling.

The U.S. Command reported that two Americans died and six others were wounded when shrapnel hit a rescue helicopter at the base.

The enemy opened up with mortar and recoilless rifle barrages against a Fire Base.

Field reports said a militia battalion withdrew in the early evening following afternoon-long shelling. There was no report of any ground attack. It was not known immediately whether enemy forces had occupied the base.

The shelling wounded a U.S. adviser at the base, reports said. A mortar round killed the pilot and one other American aboard a helicopter that touched down to extract the adviser.

The South Vietnamese toll was put at two killed, four wounded.

Farther north in the highlands near the Cambodian border, harrassing attacks were reported on road traffic north and south of Pleiku. Four rockets hit Kontum's air field, killing one militiaman and wounding another.

The U.S. Air Force said American jets destroyed an enemy MIG fighter at a base 80 miles northwest of Hanoi in the course of 270 strikes against North Vietnam.

The command belatedly reported that a MIG shot down a Thailand-based F4 Phantom last Thursday. Both crewmen are missing, the Air Force reported.

The loss, 25 miles north of Hanoi, brought the U.S. air toll over the North since April to 112 planes lost and 122 American fliers killed or captured — an average of one airman every 1-1/2 days.

In Saigon, the U.S. Command reported that American troop strength in Vietnam dropped to 34,600 as of last Thursday — a cut of 600 men.

The figure, like the Dec. 1 goal of 27,000, takes no account of some 100,000 American servicemen participating in the war effort from ships and bases elsewhere in Southeast Asia.

President Nguyen Van Thieu met in Saigon with his top ambassadors and cabinet members to discuss the secret peace negotiations in Paris described by U.S. officials as being in an important stage.

U.S. Seeks IBM Breakup

NEW YORK (AP)-The government announced on Monday its long-range goal in an anti-trust suit against International Business Machines Corp.-a breakup of the vast multibillion dollar firm into separate, competing units.

Should the government win the antitrust suit, the Justice Department said in a memorandum to federal judge David Edelstein, it then would seek to "dissipate the enormous market power of the current IBM computer manufacturing and marketing structure."

Its computer operations were the main source of IBM's $8.3 billion in revenues last year.

To replace the present IBM structure, the government said it would seek "formation of the total domestic and international computer systems facilities of IBM into several separate, independent and competitive balanced entities capable of competing successfully in domestic and international markets with one another and with other domestic and foreign competitors."

IBM attorney Thomas D. Barr pointed to the 3-1/2 years already consumed in preliminaries to the trial of the government suit. He said the memorandum contained the first mention of IBM international markets and showed that the government was "trying to move away from rather than toward trial."

"It all shows that the government just doesn't have a case," Barr told Judge Edelstein.

"The government wasn't ready before, and it just trebled the size of its case."

As it has consistently, IBM renewed its claim of innocent to antitrust charges. It has cited 60 computer systems manufacturers and 4,000 firms engaged in computer-related work as evidence in its opinion that the business is "open and strongly competitive."

IBM was sued Jan. 17, 1969, on the last business day of the Johnson administration, in the biggest antimonopoly action ever brought by the government. At the time, IBM already was the target of private antitrust suits by computer industry rivals.

The Justice Department began its investigation into IBM in 1965. Since then the firm's share of the multibillion dollar sales and lease market for computers has been estimated as high as 74 per cent.

The government's memorandum of intent to break up IBM apparently scuttled any hope of a consent settlement, whereby the corporation and the government would agree on a limited satisfaction of demands set forth in the suit.

Nixon Pledges 'No Amnesty'

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has pledged to families of men missing and prisoners of war in Vietnam that he will not grant amnesty to draft dodgers and deserters, who will have to "pay a price for their choice."

Making an unexpected appearance Monday at the annual convention of the National League of Families of POWs-MIAs, the President said he has been criticized by some "as being lacking in compassion" on the amnesty issue.

"When thousands of Americans died for their choice and and hundreds are now POWs or missing in action for their choice, it would be the most immoral thing I could think of to give amnesty to draft dodgers and those who deserted," he said.

Nixon was greeted by an ovation from a gathering of over 1,000 in the ballroom of the Statler-Hilton Hotel. And as he made his way through the crowd, there were tears in the eyes of some of the women. One hugged him, another kissed his hand and he was given a prisoner of war bracelet worn by one family member.

"Your loved ones have and are paying a price for their choice," Nixon said, "and those who deserted America will pay a price for their choice."

Nixon's election opponent, Sen. George McGovern, favors amnesty for those who fled the country or went to jail to avoid Vietnam duty but wants desertions considered case by case. McGovern's office said he declined "with regret" to attend because of a conflicting appearance.

Nixon told the wives that "very intensive negotiations" have been under way in an effort to end the Vietnam war but that he could not comment on them because he did not want to raise false hopes or jeopardize the negotiations.

Supreme Court Upholds Conn. Anti-Abortion Law

WASHINGTON (AP) - The U.S. Supreme Court awarded a preliminary round to prosecutors Monday in the battle over Connecticut's 1972 antiabortion law.

The state attorney general's office said the action meant the law was back on books. However, an attorney for opponents of the law questioned whether it would actually be enforced.

In an 8-1 decision with Justice William O. Douglas disenting, the high court issued a stay order that removed a lower court's injunction against enforcing the law.

The lower court had ruled the law unconstitutional and said enforcement should be prevented while the state appealed to the Supreme Court.

C. Perrie Phillips, deputy state attorney general, said in Hartford that Monday's ruling has the effect of restoring the law to the books until the state's appeal is decided.

But a lawyer for the women's group that challenged the law, Kathryn Emmet, said in Bridgeport that the ruling would have little real effect.

She said the Supreme Court ruling meant "the teeth are temporarily taken out" of the finding that the law is unconstitutional. But, he said, the basic ruling of the three-judge court is still in force and there is doubt that prosecutions under the new law would be upheld.

On the other hand, she said, Connecticut's prosecutors now don't have to risk contempt of court, if they try enforcing it.

"I think it's at a stalemate at this point," Miss Emmet said.

"I don't think the hospitals are going to be performing abortions and I don't think the prosecutors are going to be prosecuting under the law."

She said she doesn't know of any abortions performed in Connecticut since the 1972 law was thrown out.

The law forbids abortions except when a pregnant woman's life is in danger. It was passed by the legislature to replace a 112-year-old statute declared unconstitutional by a 2-1 vote of three-judge panel last April.

Last month, the same judges said the new law also was unconstitutional. This ruling is being appealed by the state to the Supreme Court.

Davis Sees No Anti-Semitism in USSR

NEW YORK (AP) - Black militant Angela Davis, recently returned from a tour of Communist countries, said Monday she found no anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union.

Saying she had talked with many Jews there, Miss Davis told newsmen, "What is an attempt to prevent Zionism is misinterpreted and misrepresented by bourgeois forces and imperialist forces." She added: "You have to make a distinction beteen anti-Semitism and anti-Zionism. I am not an anti-Semite, but I am opposed to the imperialism of Israel."

In Russia, said Miss Davis, an American Communist party member, "there has been a great deal of provocation and attempts to persuade Jews in the Soviet Union to leave and emigrate to Israel."

Many Jews who have done so, she said, now wish to return.

In all the socialist countries she visited, including Cuba, Miss Davis said, she saw "visible material transformations" such as new housing, hospitals and schools.

She and her companions she said, "instinctively compared this to the miserable situation in which black, Puerto Rican and other poor people live. We reflected upon New York...where, within Harlem, there is not a single high school."

Earlier in the day, she appeared at Manhattan Supreme Court's press headquarters to express her "profound solidarity" with militant Puerto Rican nationalist Carlos Feliciano, whose trial on charges of attempting to bomb the General Electric building had been scheduled to begin. The trial was adjourned to Nov. 2.

Hicks Leads

BOSTON (AP) - Rep. Louise Day Hicks, D—Mass., holds a 2 per cent lead over her independent challenger in the 9th Congressional District race. John J. Moakley, according to a copyrighted poll in today's Boston Globe.

The survey, conducted Oct. 8-9 by Becker Research Corp. for the newspaper, shows Mrs. Hicks with 38 per cent of the vote, Moakley with 36 per cent, and Republican Howard Miller with 11 per cent. Fifteen per cent were undecided.

WATERGATE TWOSOME--Frank R. Sturgis, left, and Bernard L. Barker leave court in Miami. Barker appeared at a pretrial hearing on a Florida charge that he misused a notary public seal. The men were two of five arrested last June inside the Watergate office building where the Democratic National Party headquarters are located in Washington, D.C. (AP)

'Fame' Besets Watergate Guard

WASHINGTON (AP)-The security guard who discovered the now famous break-in at the Democratic party headquarters says he wishes somebody else had uncovered it.

"You can't get no complete rest because your doorbell rings and your phone rings. I've had it. I'm just praying for it to end," complained Frank Wills.

Wills, 24, still works the graveyard shift at the Watergate apartment-hotel complex, which houses the Democratic National Committee offices.

"I wish somebody else had found them people," he said in an interview.

"It gets boring. It gets to you. Some of my friends say not to leave myself wide open because 'they could knock you off'.

"But that doesn't bother me," Wills said. "I don't think they would get me. It wasn't anything to get excited about. I was just doing my job."

Wills, a bachelor who lives in a one-room, third-floor walk-up apartment with his cat, said he received no reward for his discovery early June 17 that intruders had entered the Watergate.

His prompt call for the Washington police resulted in the immediate arrest of five men and the subsequent four-month-long controversy in the press, Congress and on the presidential campaign trail.

"The Democrats owe enough bills now," Wills said. "They need all the reward money they can keep."

He did say his employer, General Security Services, had given him a raise of "a couple dollars" a week on top of his previous $80-per-week salary.

Originally from Savannah, Ga., Wills was in the federal government's Job Corps in Michigan in the late 1960s.

Wills said that his discovery had the most effect on his life during the first month after the break-in, but press inquiries, mail and comments from his friends have now slacked off. While he says he will testify in any further court proceedings if asked to, he made it clear he would prefer to see the entire episode end.

He refused to allow his picture taken. He also refused to discuss details of the break-in itself for fear of prejudicing the case before trial.

Campaign '72

Opposition Concerns Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP)--President Nixon was described Monday as concerned about "the techniques being applied by the opposition" and by news accounts accusing his White House and campaign aides of political spying and sabotage.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, however, refused to comment directly on the substance of stories published by the Washington Post and Time Magazine. He said he would not dignify them with White House reaction.

Ziegler did describe the President as concerned at what the press secretary called hearsay, innuendo and guilt by association in news accounts.

Ziegler declared that the President "has confidence in his staff," specifically including Dwight L. Chapin, a deputy assistant to the president, linked in Post and Time Magazine accounts with alleged efforts at political sabotage of Democratic campaigns.

Chapin was said in stories published by the newspaper and the magazine to have hired Donald H. Segretti, a young Los Angeles lawyer, alleged to have been paid for political sabotage missions. After repeated refusals to comment, Ziegler said Segretti was never an employe of the White House.

Shriver Hits Nixon Ticket

WINDSOR LOCKS, Conn. (AP) - With a parting blast at President Nixon and big business, Democratic Vice Presidential candidate R. Sargent Shriver Jr. wound up a low-key campaign visit to Connecticut Monday and took off for Buffalo, N.Y., and more speeches.

Under questioning at a news conference at Bradley International Airport, Shriver brushed off the continued poor showing of the Democratic ticket in the public opinion polls.

While the Republican candidates, Nixon and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, may be ahead now, "on Election Day they're not going to be ahead," said Shriver. "We're the ones that are coming up. He - Nixon is the one who's going down."

Although the Watergate "bugging" incident has not yet had a major impact on the public on the public, "they're beginning to realize it's only part of a wider affair," Shriver said.

Dusting off an old campaign cliche, he said political espionage was just part of "the mess in Washington."

McG Knocks Nixon Campaign Tactics

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern accused President Nixon Monday of conducting "the most ruthless, most opportunistic, most heavily financed campaign in history."

Speaking to a union-sponsored meeting on reconversion of aerospace plants to maintain employment, McGovern said that in the whole executive branch there are only 13 persons assigned to this problem.

But, referring to Nixon campaign associates, he said:

"They hired at least 50 people, according to reports leaking out of the Justice Department, to sabotage and corrupt our political process. They hired 50 people to conduct some of the shabbiest undercover operations in the history of American politics."

McGovern told the conference, sponsored by the United Auto Workers Union and International Association of Machinists:

"I would not eliminate a single job in the arms and aerospace industry until there is another job available to take its place."

McGovern's talk was interrupted when a Los Angeles fire inspector argued with television cameramen over the placing of chairs before the rostrum, and TV film crews began interviewing the inspector.

Showing irritation, McGovern said, "Let's show a little maturity and cover this conference and not some fire marshal."

That brought his audience cheering to its feet and McGovern continued by suggesting that perhaps the American public is ill-informed because the news media are "being diverted by these sideshows instead of covering the fundamental issues."

McGovern, who had sought to link the reported GOP sabotage efforts directly with Nixon's inner circle in his talk, added that he believed this to be "the most corrupt and immoral administration in the history of this country."

The candidate quoted the Washington Post as reporting that White House appointments secretary Dwight L. Chapin was in contact with persons hired to disrupt the Democratic campaign.

Nixon To Sign Revenue Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon will fly to Philadelphia Friday to sign the revenue sharing bill in Independence Hall before the governors, mayors and congressmen he has invited to attend.

The White House said today the ceremony will take place at 12:30 p.m. and that Nixon will be the host at a reception afterwards for the invited guests.

"It is a non-political trip," said deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren in making the announcement.

Nixon plans to return to Washington after the reception.

O'Donnell To Speak For McG

Kenneth O'Donnell, former advisor to John and Robert Kennedy, will be the featured speaker at tomorrow night's McGovern for President meeting.

The meeting will be held in Room 170-172 Campus Center at 8 p.m.

O'Donnell is a graduate of Harvard College and the Harvard Law School. During his undergraduate years, he was Robert Kennedy's roommate. O'Donnell worked for John Kennedy during his 1946 race for Congress. Six years after that, he became the elder Kennedy's chief campaign strategist for his battle for the Senate against Henry Cabot Lodge.

O'Donnell came to Washington after that successful 1952 election, and was a counsel to Kennedy with the Senate Rackets Committee.

In 1960, Kennedy ran for the Presidency, and he appointed O'Donnell to be a campaign advisor. During the Kennedy years in the White House, O'Donnell was a Special Assistant to the President, the chief of the White House staff, and Kennedy's "most trusted advisor". O'Donnell remained an advisor to Lyndon Johnson through 1964.

Returning to Massachusetts, O'Donnell ran for governor in 1966 and 1970, losing both times to Edward McCormack, Kevin White, and Maurice Donohue, who in turn, proceeded to lose to the incumbant Republicans.

O'Donnell was one of the few advisors to Robert Kennedy who urged him to challenge Lyndon Johnson before the New Hampshire primary in 1968. He remained an advisor to him during the campaign.

In 1970, O'Donnell wrote a book on the Kennedy presidency. He claimed that Kennedy was gravitating toward a political rather than military settlement of Vietnam, and would not have escalated the war had he been reelected in 1964.

O'Donnell is now a management consultant in Boston.

The meeting is free and open to the public.

Amherst Selectmen To Allow Dems Signs On Public Land

Amherst Selectmen have informed the Democratic Town Committee that the Committee would be allowed to place campaign signs in the public right-of-way to the same extent as those on the Republican Trailer in the Town Common. Meeting at its headquarters in Amherst Carriage Shops Thursday, the Democratic Town Committee voted not to take advantage of what is regarded as a loophole in Town policy. They will ask the Selectmen for permission to erect only one sign of not more than 10 square feet on public property. This sign will be informational and simply indicate the location of Democratic Headquarters. It will not be a "campaign" sign.

Controversy has arisen in Amherst over the Republican Headquarters trailer on the Town Common. Last February the Selectmen voted to revoke the former policy of a 5 sign limit for each candidate and not allow any signs at all on public property. This fall they again complied with the request from the Republican Town Committee to park their headquarters trailer on the parking lot in Amherst center. Townspeople have observed that the trailer has become a billboard with two or more campaign signs for each candidate. A number of persons have objected to this inconsistency in policy and to the visually flagrant display. When the Democratic Town Committee was told that they could erect an equal number of signs in an equally prominent location, the Committee rejected the offer.

Campus Parking Puzzle

By CINDY GONET

Do you drive one of the 17,000 cars registered on campus? If so, you've probably hassled with rush hour at 8:00, looking for a space, and at 5:00 with the exodus for home.

Spaces available on campus number only 8,000. There are 17,000 cars registered with almost 14,000 parking here daily. Nine thousand of these cars belong to commuters with staff making up another 4-5,000. On campus residents have approximately 1,000 cars.

Assigning lots to students is based upon the statuses they occupy designated by points, said a representative from the Parking Office. A specified number of points provides admittance to a lot. For example, a TA gets 10 points; a grad student, 6; (a student can't receive accumulated points for the two), a commuter receives 6; a student working off-campus daily is allowed 3 points; with children, 2 points; over 40, 2; married, 1 point; veteran, 1; and seniors get 6 points.

On the basis of these accumulated points, lots 2 and 3L require 18 points; lot 15, -6 points; lots 5B, 10, 11, 12, 13 and N, 12 points; lot 8L is open to campus residents with 6 points and commuters with 10 points. Lots 14 and H require 6 points. Lot 0 is mainly for counsellors and students with 6 points. Lot S admits residents of dorms with 6 points and commuters with 9 points. Lots E and F are for Sophomores or better. Anyone is admitted to Lots V and M. No students may park in lots 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, or 20.

Those students with foresight placed lot requests with the Parking Office during the last week of May and the first week of June. All lots were then available. Presently the only lot not filled to capacity is V lot.

A spokesman for the Parking Office at Berkshire told the MDC that the assignment of lots on the basis of accumulated points wasn't rigidly enforced. At the end of spring semester, if a student had a good reason and not sufficient points, the lot sticker desired was usually awarded. Presently, the lots are extremely overcrowded and there aren't sufficient spaces available for this practice.

At this time, different lots are filled to different capacities. In some instances, they hold more than 150% occupancy.

The garage scarecely alleviates the problem. Don Witkowski, manager of the Campus Center Hotel, said that with 750 spaces available and 150 of those permanently rented, the upper levels of the garage may have 200 spaces available at any given time.

This semester, all parking decals, for both students and staff, appear the same. This decreases faculty mobility of previous years.

The staff of the Parking Office went on to say that appeals for lot assignments begin on Monday, October 16. The appeal will entail a resetting of status.

WMPIRG Case

As Ryder stated the case is "like a whole new area of law is opening up. The judge would essentially be making laws as to whether the consumers have property rights or not."

Ryder went on to say that the judge's decision on the case would have ramifications all over the country. If he rules the suit in WMPIRG's favor it leaves all other regulatory agencies in all states in the country open to use this as a precedent.

If the court decides in WMPIRG's favor here, the mechanism used by the DPU in hearing rate increases which is used in other agencies both here and elsewhere in the country would be ruled unconstitutional. This would effect, for example, the Insurance Commissioner. His office is set up in much the same way as the DPU and sets rates for insurance companies (things such as Blue Cross and Blue Shield).

Bogard stated that he intuitively thinks it's right and just for consumers to be represented at rate increase heaings. This would include the Gas case hearing coming up in which consumers are not repreented. "I'm not ready to accept the illusion of representation. I think there should be adequate representation for the other side of the story."

At the preliminary hearing, the judge also decided not to have a three judge panel to hear the case, but rather, to make a decision on the issue himself. Bogard stated that the judge said that the case didn't fall under a three judge statute while he felt it did; however, it doesn't really matter.

Bogard explained that if the suit should be decided against WMPIRG, they can appeal to the Federal Court of Appeals in Boston. This could only be done if only one judge tries the case. If they had lost and it had been a three judge panel, they could not appeal to the Court of Appeals, but only to the Federal Supreme Court in Washington which would cost a great deal of money.

On October 26th the DPU hearings in the WMECO case will continue. Bogard stated that WMPIRG must decide if they will intervene in the hearings or go through with their constitutional case.

WMPIRG, he said, doesn't have the expertise to act in the DPU hearings or the money to hire people for it while others are working on the case in the Federal District Court. Also, if WMPIRG proceeded with the DPU hearings they would in a sense be violating their constitutional rights later on if they won in the federal court.

Thus, no other contrary evidence will be put into the records of the WMECO hearing because WMPIRG will not be there. Without contrary evidence the DPU can't turn down the company's rate increase request. Unless there is adequate evidence to show why the request shouldn't be granted the DPU cannot refuse the increase since they would be denying the company due process of law.

Bogard expects the DPU to grant the $5.7 million increase. Since this decision must be made on December 1st the federal judge wants to act quickly.

Yesterday, Bogard went to the Law Library to research some cases that will establish the idea of consumers having property rights on account of their money. Next week they hope to file a motion for a preliminary injunction.

Bogard feels that the case has at least raised some consciousness about this issue. He says it has gotten some legislators irate about it. "This case is so important and so significant because with welfare and indigent people they have recognized their rights and the rights of criminals. Now it's time for this."

Indochina Film Series

This semester the United Christian Foundation will sponsor a film and speaker series on the war in Indochina. Tonight, Tuesday the 17th, The Back Seat Generals, a film on the CIA in Laos, will be shown in the Council Chambers, Student Union, at 8 p.m. Discussion and a peace action meeting will follow.

Coming films, shown on Tuesday nights in 162 Campus Center, will include the NARMIC slide show on the electronic air war, Village by Village, filmed in North Vietnam, showing interviews with Vietnamese and with American POW's, No Vietnamese Ever Called Me Nigger, and others.

Chavez Fights Proposition 22

A migratory mother with her two children in one of their camps out in California. Migrants are fighting against Proposition 22, which would prohibit migratory and seasonal workers from voting as well as preventing effective boycotts and grant growers a ten-day injunction period during strikes.

SAN FRANCISCO (LNS)--"Ten years ago today the first Farm Workers covention was held in Fresno and because of our successes, Proposition 22 has been proposed by those who want farmworkers to continue to be enslaved," United Farm Workers director Cesar Chavez told a rally of more than 3500 people recently in San Francisco.

"This was prospoed solely to destroy our union," Chavez continued in reference to Proposition 22, which will appear on the state's ballot on November 7. If approved the proposal will establish complex election procedures and requirements within the union that would prohibit migratory and seasonal workers from voting as well as prevent effective boycotts and grant growers ten-day injunction periods during strikes--long enough to get the crop harvested. The measure would effect other unions as well since it covers all the growers' workers. This means employees in canning, freezing, trucking and other phases of food harvesting and production would come under its provisions.

In order to get Proposition 22 on the ballot large agribusiness firms spent a quarter of a million dollars to obtain the necessary 325,000 signatures. Cases of fraud and misrepresentation in obtaining the signatures are now so extensive that even California Secretary of State Edmund Brown has taken court action to have the proposal disqualified. According to Brown more than 63,000 of the 385,000 signatures "were obtained as a result of fraudulent and misleading representation to signers." Among other distortions, the growers propaganda told potential signers that the measure would lower food prices. Brown's court action is, however, considered a token action with little chance of success since the agribusiness firms have Governor Reagan in their corner giving full support to Proposition 22.

Chavez has charged that Del Monte, Sunkist and the Growers Association put up 70 percent of the money used by a front organization to campaign for the proposition. And the interest of agribusiness in passing Proposition 22 is not at all surprising. In California 80 percent of the farmable land is owned by 7 percent of the farms. And the top 2.4 percent of the farms employ 60 percent of the states farmworkers. (Nor is this the first time big business has banned together in California. Earlier this year, in the California primary campaign, a get-tough ecology bill was defeated when a group of oil companies, railroads and chemical companies reading like a list of "Who's Who in Business" joined together to spend $1.4 million to insure its defeat.)

"Proponents have masked their intents by pretending they are concerned about the workers," said Chavez at the San Francisco rally. "But in reality," he continued, "the proposition, if passed would not allow migratory or seasonal workers to vote in the union elections and would prevent 95 percent of the workers who are now voting to vote."

Chavez appealed to "everyone to support us in such a resounding way that those interests will never try this again."

Berrigan Refused Parole Hearing

NEW YORK (LNS)--Phillip Berrigan, entering his 38th month in prison, was just recently denied a hearing before the parole board. After a five month delay in sentencing following the Harrisburg trial the U.S. Parole Board has also delayed its action by refusing to hear Phillips's case--thus insuring that he remain in prison, tucked away from public attention.

Recently Daniel Berrigan wrote of his brother's situation: "They (the U.S. government) have made an entirely correct assessment of this priest as indeed they have correctly assessed the Vietnamese. Both the man in prison and the people in the resistance are a mortal danger to illegitimate, devouring, blind power. Therefore, each must be dealt with: silencing in the one case, extermination in the other."

In response to Phillip's position the Prisoner's Strike for Peace is organizing a week long fast and vigil to be held on the steps of the U.S. Justice Department in Washington from October 25 to November 1. Participants for the whole week will include ex-convicts, members of POW families, and the clergy.

There will be nightly activities at various locations throughout Washington dealing with a variety of subjects from prisons (both here and in Vietnam), to resistance and the war. Guest speakers will attend these sessions though it is not definite as yet who they will be.

For those wishing to join the vigil for a limited period of time organizers of the action set October 28 as they day for mass action. For more information write or call Prisoners Strike for Peace, 156 5th Avenue, Room 438 New York, New York 10010; phone (212) 924-2469.

A Great And Thorough Change

Higher Education in Massachusetts: An Agenda For Debate

Editor's note page seven October 17, 1972 Daily Collegian.

The following is the text of the position paper on higher education which was released by Governor Francis Sargent on Saturday.

America looks in the 1970's for far-reaching reforms in its higher education system. We find ourselves with nearly 3,000 institutions enrolling almost 9 million students at a cost in excess of $25 billion. It is without compare the largest post-secondary educational system in the history of the world.

Yet too much of it is puffed and flabby. In the words of its leading publication, Change Magazine, "Higher education, it must be admitted, is an engine run amuck...Sadly, the academic enterprise feeds on the same American assumptions about the value of growth as General Motors....The return to more human size and human concerns rather than perpetuating functions and procedures represents an extra-ordinarily difficult and elusive goal."

Massachusetts has more than its share of students and institutions. Within our borders, some 300,000 students study in more than 100 different colleges and universities. Students represent approximately 4 percent of our population, and our students represent nearly 4 percent of all those in the United States.

Our institutions include some of the nation's oldest and most distinguished. We also have many of the newest, including most of our public colleges and universities. Two year colleges, four year colleges and full-fledged universities, the public sector of Massachusetts higher education has been the fastest growing of all. Since 1960 it has opened a new campus at least every year, expanded its enrollments from 17,180 to approximately 90,000 -- an average annual growth of 13 percent. Its costs have risen from less than $20 million in 1960 to almost $180 million now -- a growth rate of more than 19 percent per year. Our public institutions are building a respectable record of scholarship and learning.

Nevertheless, I share with many students at our state-supported colleges and universities an abiding discontent with the tendency to substitute bigger for better, discontent with the relentless grip of dated practices and tired ideas. Like many of them, I wonder whether the student paying tuition and the citizen paying taxes are getting the productivity they deserve from the institutions they support.

These concerns are not brand new; nor have they always been confined to public institutions. Writing of Harvard in 1825, George Ticknor observed:

> "It is, I think, an unfortunate circumstance, that all our colleges have been so long considered merely places for obtaining a degree of Bachelor of Arts, to serve as a means and certificate whereon to build the future plans and purposes of life...The recitations become mere examinations, and it cannot be attempted to give more than the most superficial view of very important subjects, even to those who would gladly investigate them thoroughly, because they must keep with the class to which they are bound, and hurry on from a teacher and a subject to which they have, perhaps, important reasons for being attached, to another teacher and another subject, wherein their present dispositions and final pursuits in life make it impossible for them to feel any interest...It is perfectly apprent that a great and thorough change must take place."

It is my view that just as the past decade saw unparalleled growth in our public institutions, so must the next ten years witness unprecedented change. Not because it is faddish or chic, but because the people of Massachusetts have become too sophisticated and demanding to settle for more of the same.

What is the nature of that change in Massachusetts? As Governor, I can only suggest the terms of debate. The Legislature, the trustees, the faculties, and the students have it in their power to respond.

As a general guide, I again call attention to the work of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education. Over the past four years, that distinguished body has charted a course for American higher education for decades to come. They have addressed their recommendations to federal and state governments, to faculties and administrators, to students and alumni. In my judgment, the Commission has performed a superb service; the more of their suggestions we can follow, the better off we will all be.

I have also been impressed by the "Report on Higher Education" prepared by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under the direction of Frank Newman, as well as by several self-studies and long-range plans developed within our own Massachusetts institutions. Capable men and women have devoted many months to these various analyses and recommendations. It would be foolish to ignore their work. It would be foolish to repeat it.

A time of action follows a time of study. Over the months to come, the standards that follow will guide my Administration as we seek to develop a variety of means -- legislttive, budgetary and hortatory -- to carry them out.

1. The quality of instruction. The first priority of higher education should be to engage the intellect in the pursuit of knowledge. The art of teaching is central here. Too much college teaching is uninspired. Too many college students spend class hours wishing they were doing something more interesting. We must ask of our professors that they bend every effort to keep their classes alive, that they bend every effort to keep their classes alive, that they assign themselves the task of intellectual counselors as well as instructors, and that they make themselves available to serious-minded students almost without limit.

2. The pursuit of knowledge. Too often we train students for jobs that no longer exist or in subjects that hold no interest. Not every course need be "relevant" to a job or contemporary problem, but the student should be able to obtain wise counsel and then select for himself the desired mix of subjects, from the loftiest abstractions to the most mundane vocational skills. We have had too much of dated curricula and of letting time spent substitute for knowledge acquired. A student shstick with a subject until he has learned the range of competencies that he and the faculty jointly set for him.

I propose that every student in our institutions should "contract for" an individualized program of study, and should graduate when he has fulfilled his contract.

3. The place of learning. It has become a triuism to say that much learning could take place off-campus, yet we imprison ourselves within the walls of the lecture hall. The time is at hand to create our "Open University" as symbol and as course of unconfined education. Students can learn at home, in the library, on the job or in the fields. They can study at midnight as well as at noon, on weekends as successfully as mid-week.

4. Throughout ones life. College has traditionally been what a young woman or man did between the ages of 18 and 22, in full-time study on a campus somewhere.

I am persuaded that higher education lasts a lifetime, and that it can be acquired throughout a lifetime. Many students should not come straight from high school to college. They should take a job, serve their nation, pitch in to the challenges of state government, start a family or travel the world, coming back to formal study when they feel it is right for them.

A woman of fifty belongs in college as much as a man of twenty -- in many cases more so. A working man without the luxury of full-time study may belong in college in his spare time – in the evening, on a break, on a Saturday -- even if he must strive for many years to finish the program he sets himself. Learning is not the property of the young or leisured. It is for us all.

5. Less time, more options. The Carnegie Commission has urged the creation of three year bachelor's degrees, and of intermediate degrees such as the Associate of Arts and Master of Philosophy. More "entry and exit points," that is, clearer and better defined ways of getting into and out of higher education, should be available. The pursuit of a degree in less time than the customary four years should become a standard of full-time study, just as longer periods will suit those enrolled part-time. High schools may be able to help by taking over more of the work traditionally assigned to the first year of college, and employers should assist by making apprenticeships and other on-the-job learning experiences available for inclusion in "college" programs.

6. Access for all. For too long, higher education has been the preserve of the well-to-do. I agree with President Nixon that "No qualified student who wants to attend college should be barred by lack of money", and I pledge this state to be second to none in its efforts to carry out thatpromise. Nor should low-income students depend solely on "public" institutions for their higher education. The time has come to collaborate with our private colleges and universities to develop means whereby citizens of Massachusetts who have everything it takes but money can study in the institution of their choice. This may require an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth, but I have already supported such amendments and I will do so again.

7. The cost of college. We have in Massachusetts a crazy-quilt of student charges. Each of our public institutions sets its own tuition and fees. Tuition money vanishes into the General Fund and is not used for higher education, while other student charges disappear into trust funds not subject to public scrutiny or legislative control. The total costs are high enough to penalize the poor, low enough to reward the rich. The availability of scholarships and loans is not linked to costs and needs. I offer these guidelines for reform:

—Tuition levels should represent a just share of the actual cost of providing the education. The share should hold constant, with the levels changing as costs change.

—The actual tuition paid by a student should be based on his financial resources and abilities. Students from low income families should pay substantially less than the well-to-do.

—Every dollar of tuition should help support higher education, especially in the form of aid to other students.

—The payment period for a student should be as long or as short as he finds convenient. If he wants to defer payment over a number of post-college years, it should not be difficult or burdensome for him to do so.

8. The place of research. Scholarship is one of the great goals and products of higher education. It sets the standard for an institution and measures its excellence. Our commitment to teaching and public service must never eclipse the responsibility of the academy to advance the frontiers of man's knowledge.

The time is at hand to seek quality in research, to recognize those scholars best able to do it, and to reduce for others the constant pressure toward rapid-fire publication. We must make it honorable and rewarding for a professor to dedicate his efforts to distinguished teaching and public service as legitimate alternatives to publication. In Massachusetts, we are fortunate that our faculty salaries are now competitive with those across the nation, and we benefit also from a goodly supply of potential college teachers. We have the opportunity to seek out professional well-trained teachers who want to teach and who can stay intellectually alive without being coerced to publish.

9. Pacing ourselves. The era of limitless gorwth in higher education has nearly spun itself out. Controlled expansion is far harder, but it is our task in the decades to come. We will continue to add to our institutions, but at a carefully measured pace, never mistaking size for excellence or demand for need. More and more often, a new program will mean the curtailment of an old one; hiring one new professor will mean not rehiring another.

Elementary and secondary school enrollments have stopped growing, and by 1980 that "levelling off" will hit the colleges. If we want to be able to change and renew our post-secondary institutions, it will be necessary to plan carefully for change with lessened growth. Some of our institutions will have to take firm action very soon lest they find themselves with an entire faculty on permanent contract. The paring away of obsolete programs -- much of our teacher training comes to mind -- must get under way without delay if we are to develop the new programs that the students of the seventies and eighties will seek. We must make better use of our physical facilities, for the time of rampant construction is also nearing its end.

10. The structure of change. Virtually all observers agree that the current structure for governing and administering higher education in Massachusetts is something between a comedy and a tragedy. Five separate governing boards, each responsible for between one and a dozen campuses, are loosely coordinated by a sixth board. Policies differ widely; important groups are excluded from decision-making, and joint planning is virtually impossible. It cannot last in its present form.

The time for complacency has ended. The time to finish carrying out the principles of the Willis-Harrington Commission is at hand. If we are to plan effectively for the Commonwealth's needs, if we are to eliminate duplication and waste, if we are to rationalize archaic and inconsistent practices, a change in governance of higher education must come.

We should not sacrifice the principle of lay control through distinguished unsalaried trustees. But more must be done to draw students, faculty, employees, alumni and neighboring communities into the governance of our colleges and universities. More must be done to reconcile higher education with the Cabinet form of government that now oversees every aspect of state administration.

Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph M. Cronin has the responsibility to develop proposals for improving the structure and organization. In months to come, he will continue the process of statewide consultation that is already well underway. It is my hope and my expectation that the proposals we offer the Legislature in 1973 will embrace the principles of reform, of effectiveness and of integrity.

11. Our common interests. There is a tendency in Massachusetts to discuss higher education exclusively in terms of our public institutions and our tax dollars. Yet we have in this state the nation's best-developed and most distinguished network of private colleges and universities. Two thirds of our students are enrolled in them, and their future is intimately bound up with the prospects of the public sector. Indeed, the historic distinction between public and private is steadily eroding.

I have recently shared with Clark Kerr the observation that some of our private institutions are now threatened by insufficient enrollments, as students elect the less costly public colleges and universities. We need to develop a policy of balanced growth in Massachusetts, so that every student can be economically provided with a superior education.

The people of Massachusetts are fourth in the nation in the portion of their total personal income that they devote to higher education. In addition, we are the source of higher education for many thousands of students from other states. In fact, higher education has become a major "export" of Massachusetts, bringing perhaps half a billion dollars annually into our borders. This is largely the work of our traditionally private institutions and is an economic and educational fact of vast consequence for the entire Commonwealth. Public and private must learn to share their resources, to pool their efforts, and to plan together for the common good of our students and our people.

The great and thorough change that we so badly need will require the good will and cooperation of thousands of people, of every disposition, educational philosophy and political preference. These issues rise above minor differences and self-interest, and go to the heart of our greatness as a people and a state. I look forward to thoroughgoing reform that will enable us once again to point to higher education in Massachusetts with the pride it has commanded since 1636.

Blunder At The Top

In a year when UMass is faced with a serious fiscal crisis, with many of our hopes for the future hanging on the delicate balance of a much embattled budget, we find it strange that the President of the University has decided to raise the ire of the State Legislature by allowing UMass officials to sign a five-year, $700,000 contract for a palatial new office in downtown Boston.

We are not disputing here that there might have been need for such space. What we are disputing is President Wood's timing in the matter. The University is faced with a poor outlook at best as far as money goes this year. In Amherst, requests for financial aid are constantly reduced to one-third of what the University asks for. In Boston, the University is about to open a multi-million dollar facility, and the squeeze is on there, too. Why has the President chosen to spend such a large sum at a time like this? We can't see it.

It seems that if President Wood is to have any credibility when he goes before the Legislature to fight for the budget he ought first to set an example himself as a person who can tighten the belt with the rest of us. A few people on Beacon Hill have already expressed displeasure with the expenditure, among them House Speaker and UMass alumnus David Bartley, a longtime friend of the University on the floor of the legislature.

If people like Bartley are upset irreparable damage to the UMass cause may already have been done. We can only hope the legislature will overlook this massive blunder at the top and allow the budget request to go through as is so that UMass can continue on its course of growth and fulfill the potential that it has of being one of the best schools in the East.

Steve Anderson

A Progressive Step

The present system of academic credits at the University is outdated. The idea of five courses at three credits has been abandoned by almost every other school for a four course at four credits system. Five courses at three credits has been an academic handicap and has created problems with the transfer of credits from other schools.

The advantages of a four course four credit system are numerous. First, it means that students can spend more time on courses they are interested in. People generally study more and with greater vigor when they are interested in the subject. They also learn more. Four courses would mean less time in classes. This would mean more leisure and study time.

At the present time almost everyone practices a four at four system anyway. Most people look for three or four courses that they are interested in or have to take and a gut course. This means that people study for four courses and coast in one. Often people do not care what they learn if anything in their fifth course. Studying for five major courses is too taxing. Because so many people are looking for gut courses some courses become overcrowded with people who are not really interested in learning anything. This is very unfortunate for the students who want to learn something.

Four at four would bring UMass into line with the other area schools. The present credit system causes a few problems in logic for Five College Courses. It is very hard to understand why someone from Amherst can get four credits in a course when you can only get three credits in it. When you take a course at another school you get four credits for it. But if you took it at UMass you would only get three for it. Transfers to and from UMass also have interesting encounters. Making fifteen credits equal sixteen and vice-versa is very interesting.

Scheduling problems would be reduced. Instead of looking for five courses you would only have to look for four. This may not seem like much of a reduction in scheduling. Especially when you consider that the enrollment in most courses would be cut. But it still is a twenty percent reduction in the number of courses that have to be scheduled.

A four course four credit system would not be effective under our present system of requirements. Eleven courses are now required by the University to meet the core requirements. With the language requirement this goes up to fifteen course for many students. It would take two years just to meet the requirements. The courses demanded by one's major would also have to be reduced. In fact some requirements should be abolished.

The adoption of a four course four credit system would be beneficial from an academic and financial viewpoint. The reduction of required courses would mean that instructors could be freed from introductory courses and placed where they could be put to better use. It would mean that students would have to spend less money on books and lab fees.

Four courses at four credits and a reduction of required course would be a progressive step for the University.

Form Of Democracy

By BILL WILSON

After reading the article "Third World Case Delayed" (10/6/72) my first response was that Matt Tackeff is one of two kinds of politicians; he is either very sophisticated with a masterful command of diversionary rhetoric which allows him to portray the victim as a criminal or he is basically ignorant and needs additional information. In that I am an incurable optimist I will assume the latter.

Mr. Tackeff appears to have some difficulty in coming to grips with his responsibility as an elected official: he can either be a social engineer and work for a political reformation or as a social breakman and work for political deformation. The choice is clearly his.

Reapportionment is a reform measure. It represents a response to natural strains within the system. It has been suggested that the democratic form of government should be viewed as a dynamic system that is constantly evolving in attempt to assure equitable representation. It is only logical that as population and resources shift, corresponding adjustment should be made to accommodate these changes. This concept is so basic to the democratic form of government that I am almost positive that Mr. Tackeff has no real problem with reapportionment.

However, when Mr. Tackeff called for a new election and the resending of the procedures used to provide for Third World representation in the Senate, it became crystal clear that he does have some basic problems with who is going to be represented and by whom. Needless to say, it would be at the very least hypocritic, enthnocentric and undemocratic for anyone to assume that they can somehow select who a peoples representative should be or to determine whether a people should be represented. Surely Mr. Tackeff accepts that in a democracy all people must be represented and the people must be provided a workable means by which they can select their representative. By all means, he simply could not assume that he can represent all the people all the time. If one is not of the people but yet professes to represent the people one is very likely offing the people. Unquestionably if we disregard this concept as we approach 1976 then indeed 1776 was but a big "con game". If this is so, maybe we need to return to Boston Square, Bunker Hill, Concord and Lexington.

As I hope you are beginning to see Mr. Tackeff, the measure recommended by the Student Senate is very much a part and parcel of the wove and fabric of the democratic system of government as set forth in the constitution and the Bill of Rights from which we draw our guiding principles. Unfortunately, these principles have not always been applied judiciously given to ignorance, greed, and expediency. In a democracy, not only should the will of the numerical majority rule but the rights of a numerical minority must be protected. And in the final analysis, if the numerical majority is kept basically ignorant they can become so involved in ruling for themselves that they tend to rule out the numerical minority.

Mr. Tackeff further stated that the senates reapportionment measure was a "course of action carrying dangerous and negative implications and claims that the implication was that students are racist". It seems to me that the question of students being racist is academic; students are a subset of the larger society and there is no question of the prevelance of racism in the society. At the very least the reapportionment measure is an attempt to counterbalance overt racism. However, to carry Mr. Tackeff's argument to its logical extension, measures taken to counterbalance overt racism are dangerous and carry negative implications. No way!

Mr. Tackeff calls for a reexamination of the latest problems of institutional racism. Obviously he is not serious. It would probably be more appropriate to refer these questions to the Committee on Committees which is a subcommittee on rhetoric and request that their findings be made public in 1984.

Also, Mr. Tackeff states that all students possess the equal opportunity to run for office. This whole equal opportunity question is extremely fuzzy and if it were operationalized we would draw some startling conclusions. For example, equal opportunity in employment is a national goal. The measure of equal employment is pairity in earnings. Based on census data collected between the period of 1945 and 1970 relative income for Third World People increased by 4%. Assuming that this trend is an arithmatic progression, equal employment for Third World People will be achieved by year 2275. Yep, 300 more years. Unquestionably, all students have an equal opportunity to run for political office but, as quiet as it is kept, in a political sense Third World People are running for their lives not for political office. In the course of this foot race if one ends up in a political office, a decent job, adequate housing or whatever, it is purely by chance – not by systems design. At least the reapportionment measure is a step in the direction of putting some equitable design in the political system.

The notion of putting some equitable design into the system to provide for the operationalization of some of these fuzzy national goals cannot be overstated. It has been suggested that these broad and sweeping concepts, such as, "all men are created equal", "non discrimination based on race, creed, color, national origin and sex" and "equal access to housing, education, employment and public toilets" are simply used as a laxative to release the constipated system without really dealing with the fundamental cause of the social-political blockage.

If we are going to deal with fundamental causes we will have to go deep into the bowels of the archives. By doing so we will find that some designs were put into the system that made equal anything impossible. One such finding which is of capital importance and extremely pertinent, is that it was in a Massachusetts court that the legal separation was made between indentured and life time servants.

"Re Negro John Punch, July 1640. "Whereas Hugh Gwyn hath... Brought back from Maryland three servants formerly run away..the court doth therefore order that the said three servants shall receive the punishment of shipping and to have thirty stripes apiece one called Victor, a dutchman, the other a Scotchman called James Gregory, shall first serve out their times with their masters according to their Indentures, and one whole year apiece after the time of their service is Expired...and after that service...to serve the colony for three whole years apiece, and that the third being a negro named John Punch shall serve his said master

'I NEVER STOOP TO POLITICS, MYSELF!'

Letters To The Editor

General Hester Endorses McGovern

To The Editor:

For the first time since the 1944 Presidential elections, the American people have in 1972 a really meaningful choice between candidates for this high office. Almost all the candidates since 1944, with the exception of the present Democratic candidate for that office, have been basically as alike as peas in a pod: all proclaimed their devotion to peace, but most were active war hawks and imperialists.

The 1972 Presidential campaign between U.S. Senator McGovern and President Nixon, however, offers a choice which should be as obvious to the informed as the distinction between light and darkness; as between forthrightness and deception; as between international cooperation and imperilism. All people of good will who want peace–and all of them should–can achieve peace, I believe, after twenty-seven disastrous years of fear, hate and neo-fascism, by uniting in massive support of George McGovern, a candidate who generates light, forthrightness and cooperation: characteristics which are the exact opposite of those of his opponent.

It should now be clear to all–and this applies especially to those of us who have long worked for peace–that only the defeat of Mr. Nixon can bring peace, or restore the good name of the American people. President Nixon has expanded the war to all of Indochina in violation of his oath of office, his campaign pledge to end it, and common humanity. He has also escalated the savagery of these attacks upon the Indochines people to a point never exceeded, and rarely if ever equalled, in the annals of warfare.

In addition, Mr. Nixon is responsible for the death, maiming and wounding of many score thousand of American boys since becoming President. Far more U.S. fire power, according to Pentagon statistics, has been released upon the Indochinese people than by all of his predecessors. Since most of this fire power has been delivered at random, it is certainly rasreasonable to assume that many additional millions of Indochinese civilians have been killed, maimed, wounded and driven from their homes during the past three and one-half years: all in the name of winding down the war.

Putting an end to the Nixon administration war of aggression upon the people of Indochina is only the first step. Many more steps, such as the award of adequate reparations for the massive injuries inflicted by the U.S. government upon these unfortunate people, must be taken as promptly as possible; all U.S. combat forces must be brought home in the interest of peace; the U.S. military force and military budget must be greatly reduced for economic as well as peaceful reasons; and the pactomania madness of the late Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, must also be ended. All military alliances are now outmoded and must be ended. They are inconsistent with the basic purpose of the United Nations, which is peace, and unless ended will make WWIII or its equivalent, World Revolution, eventually inevitable.

In addition, the whole set of priorities between our domestic needs and so-called foreign aid should be carefully re-examined and adjusted. And such resources as then seem available for foreign aid should be administered through the United Nations as a means of increasing its power and prestige. It is absolutely necessary, it seems to me, that this World Organization be given the power to adjudicate or arbitrate the disputes between or among sovereign states which otherwise could lead to war. The U.S. government and people should make this a major objective in order to avoid a world disaster.

Above all else, however, Mr. Nixon must be defeated in the Presidential election, November 7, 1972, regardless of whether he ends the war in Indochina now, if, when or how he ends it. As Americans, we must do this in order to purge ourselves, partially at least, of the crimes of this illegal, immoral and genocidal war of naked and raw aggression, which we as a sovereign people have permitted successive Washington administrations to impose upon a people who have never threatened our security in any way, and could not do so even if they wished, which they do not. Unless and until, as a minimum, we remove from public office all those primarily responsible for these major crimes, the decent people of the world can never forgive us, nor should they.

Approval

To The Editor:

On reading the Friday edition of The Daily Collegian, I was surprised by the Collegian's coverage of my informal talk last Thursday at McNamara dorm...especially the headline..."Wood Asks Student Approval for Tenure, Faculty Moves."

This is not what I said. A more accurate quote is contained in paragraph three of the story..."Students should have a voice in what goes on, especially in matters of day-by-day living and teacher evaluation."

I believe strongly that students should play a part in these matters. Students, for example, already have the opportunity to participate as members of personnel committees in several departments. But, participation is not approval.

Blending opinions and ideas of all segments of our University is a more equitable and realistic means of decision making.

See The CIA

To The Editor:

On Tuesday, October 17, at 8 p.m., the UMass Student Mobilization Committee and the Amherst Peace Action task force are sponsoring the movie Back Seat General, a BBC documentary on CIA involvement in Laos. This film was commissioned by the BBC and immediately banned when it was made.

The CIA involvement in Indochina has been the most secretive part of the US war effort. The American public has been saturated with information, facts and statistics, on open American involvement such as the bombing and shelling of both North and South Vietnam as well as Cambodia and Laos. The CIA effort in Indochina is a supportive one, propping up governments in areas the US considers vital to its interests including the war effort.

This is an open meeting as are all SMC meetings and everyone is invited to come. The meeting and film will be in the council chambers, upstairs in the Student Union. For those people who would like to help with the organization and building of the antiwar movement there will be ideas and projects to work on. I hope to see you there.

Editorial Points

It seems the Republicans have the right idea. They do the political dirtywork, the Democrats accuse them of it, and they play indignant. Perhaps we should return to the tradition of killing the messenger who brings unwelcome truth.

If you take P.T. Barnum's hypothesis that there's one born every minute, there are enough suckers between the ages of 18 and 63 to re-elect the President.

For the first time in history, the United States has two candidates for Vice-President whose children have been busted for possession of marijuana. Neither has become a junkie, but according to Harry Anslinger, it's only a matter of time.

What if Henry Fonda were President, just like in all those movies? America would certainly come home, and just think who'd replace Julie and Tricia.

Satyricon

To The Editor:

As one of the many who was discouraged by the lines for nine o'clock showing of Fellini Satyricon, my chagrin was only mildly tempered by the realization that if the film had been shown one week earlier or one week later, the campus would have been empty, and the lines would have been short. I am sure there are many others like myself who were unable to see the film. I would like to ask the Program Council to try to bring it back some time this year. Perhaps I should have arrived earlier, but then someone else wouldn't have been able to see Satyricon.

He Likes Harmonograph

To The Editor:

I would like to express my admiration and appreciation for the "harmonograph" set up by a student or students of the physics department in the second floor lobby of Hasbrouck. It appeared outside the door of Has. 124 on the opening day of classes and fortuitously provided an excellent illustration for a course in Environmental Design which I am conducting there. Such generous and apparently enthusiastic sharing of insight and information is my idea of what university life should be all about. I am pleased to see that after two weeks it has so far been spared the vandalism that has frustrated other attempts to make the campus environment more attractive and intereying.

Republican Pollution

To The Editor:

It was a beautiful day in early autumn and I was on my way back to the quaint little town of Amherst. Whizzing along route 202 I couldn't help but notice the fall colors appearing on trees and the nip in the air told me that winter was on its way. Finally I crossed the Amherst-Pelham town line and headed towards the town common. But as I approached the traffic lights something caught my attention. It was a house trailer and it was sitting in the municipal parking lot. At first I thought that maybe Holyoke Valve and Hydrant Co. had finally finished their project in Eastman Lane, but I knew better than that. Upon closer examination I discovered it was the headquarters for the Republican Town Committee. SHADES of eye pollution and disgrace to the aesthetic bliss of our community! There was that monstrosity resting in three parking spaces, and reliable sources inform me that the spaces are not even being payed for.

In the town of Amherst, an individual or a group must petition the Board of Selectmen in order to post signs or make use of municipal property. But no one expected to encounter such eye sores this campaign year for the Board had previously voted to prohibit the exhibition of political placards on town property. However, when approached by the Republican Committee, our selectmen reversed their earlier decision. Now of course they had to be fair about the situation, so when members of the Amherst Democratic Town Committee inquired concerning the reversal, they too were offered the right to display their campaign materials on town property. Thank you town fathers, but the Democrats have opted to respect the invaluable atmosphere offered by that which was previously an almost unblemished New England town, something that is rare, and I am personally grateful to them.

Now if you would like to be fair, perhaps everyone should receive free parking privileges until November 7 for this would facilitate visits to the trailor or the Amherst Democratic Town Headquarters at the Amherst Carriage Shops on East Pleasant Street.

One chance is enough and status quo politics is through. Get out and Vote.

Tippo On Rhetoric

To The Editor:

After reading the account of my interview with Don Glickstein published in the Friday, October 13 Collegian, it occurred to me that some readers might interpret my remarks to mean that I was abandoning my long-standing support of the rhetoric requirement. To dispel any such thought, let me say emphatically that–as I told Nick Apostola a couple of weeks ago when we discussed the matter briefly–I continue in the judgment that the rhetoric course may well be the most valuable course in the University-if properly taught. As with all required courses, there should be provision for a student to satisfy the requirement by means of a proficiency examination.

While I have pen in hand, permit me to clarify one further point. Apparently, I was not too clear on the subject of core requirements. My intention was to say that within the core requirements, students should be given the greatest elective latitude guided only by a good counseling system. I did not mean to imply that we should eliminate our minimal requirements of three courses in the three great areas of social and behavioral sciences, humanities and fine arts, and mathematics and natural sciences. I continue to feel that these modest guidelines are useful for the student. Again I would expect that proficiency examinations would be available for those who wished to be exempt from the formal courses. If we were to adopt comprehensive examination for degree certification, I would concede that these requirements would be of lesser importance.

Make The Right Choice

As I sit here in my room, trying to think of something to say, it occurs to me that only three weeks remain before the nation is to go about the business of making a choice as to who will lead it during the upcoming four years. The choice is between the man who has governed that nation for the previous four years, and one who has spent one half of that term trying to fulfill a lifetime ambition, while at the same time, trying to end a war which he has virtually based his career on ceasing.

Richard Nixon is known for his "gradual withdrawal" program, which did not even, in four years, end a war that should have taken four months to end. He is known for his Phase I and Phase II economic proposals, which succeeded in creating unemployment without stopping inflation, and he is known for such lesser, but still important programs as the no-knock laws, the ABM and the Watergate Affair.

On the other hand, George McGovern is known for his long continued record of opposition to the Vietnam War. He is known for his fully-detailed Economic Conversion Act and he is known for his work for party reform and his early exposition and attempts to help the hungry in America and around the world.

But as the election year draws to a close, most students have made up their mind already as to who they plan to support in November. By the turnout and the tremendous enthusiasm at the Shirley MacLaine speech the other day, one can estimate that a large majority of the students at UMass will cast their votes for George McGovern on election day, but that's not enough.

The students are needed for more than their votes. They are needed for their time and their effort. They are needed for their enthusiasm and for their resourcefulness, and they are needed to elect George McGovern the next president of the United States of America. What can students do to help?

There are carloads of canvassers leaving the areas in Connecticut and New York every Saturday from the Circle outside of the Campus Center Parking Garage. If anyone feels that canvassing is not a worthwhile method of attaining votes, then they should be working for Ed Muskie. If you're interested in canvassing, sign up at the McGovern table in the Campus Center, or just show up at 8:30 that Saturday morning.

For those of you who don't want to canvass or just can't take Saturdays off, we have 80,000 leaflets to be distributed across Western Mass. This can be done at night or on Sundays and is necessary to raise funds for the McGovern cause. If you're interested in that, please call Ed Scully at 546-5730, or stop by 406C Brown House.

But that's not all. We have a bake sale planned for this Thursday and anyone interested in baking can call Alex at 549-6352. If you're not a baker, you might be an artist. If so we need you to make posters and signs for McGovern events and you can call Laura at 546-6676.

There are a multitude of things that have to be done to help get Dick Nixon out and put George McGovern in. If you want to get involved or have any ideas, stop by the table in the Campus Center or come to the meeting on Wednesday night in C.C. room 170-172. We need your help.

As I sit here in my room, trying to think of something to say, it occurs to me that only three weeks remain before the nation is to go about the business of making a choice as to who will lead it during the upcoming four years. I hope it makes the right choice.

There's No Other Choice

Many people think that the McGovern campaign and its organization is filled with arrogance and incompetency.

Some feel that George McGovern has these qualities himself, that he can't be trusted, that he's wishy-washy.

Others say that they will vote for George McGovern, but won't work for him because they don't fully support him, and they don't feel he has a chance.

Still others say that you have to put everything into perspective, that we lived through the first four years of Nixon, and they haven't been that bad, and that we can live through another four years, that the human experience is just a cabaret.

Some people are turned off by the intensity of the anti-Nixon, rather than pro-McGovern campaign strategy.

In a sense, it does not matter that it is George McGovern running for President instead of Fred Harris, or Ted Kennedy, or Paul McClosky, or Lindsay, or Spock.

What matters are the nightmares.

I wasn't raised in a terribly religious atmosphere; it was more liberal than holy. What impressed me most was listening to the 6 p.m. news every evening over supper, on that fascinating black plastic and yellowed-dialed radio. I remember the Hungarian Revolution in 1956 and Suez. Then, television. I watched Jack Kennedy in 1960, his inauguration a year later, Cuba, and then the assassination. I was impressionable, and seeing all those freedom marches on TV coupled with approval given them by my parents, made me develop that thing called conscience.

And now, I have nightmares.

I cannot forget the tear-gassed faces of kids I tried to clean with water in Washington in 1969.

I cannot forget the face of Alison Krause's father as she was buried after Kent State. "My daughter is not a burn," he cried.

Nor can I forget the anguished screams of that girl in the photograph, the one with the up-raised arms, kneeling over that corpse.

I cannot forget that little girl running naked with her body burned from our napalm, as sure as if we ourselves had pushed the button.

I cannot forget one of my tenth grade students in Lousiville, Kentucky, who did not know how to read.

I cannot forget hitching from Loisville to St. Louis and getting great rides from people who would not have picked me up if my face was black.

I cannot forget walking along a street in Natick, Mass., and having a guy drive by me, swearing at me, because of the length of my hair.

I cannot forget stepping over a rotting, living body lying in a gutter on Broadway.

I cannot forget the sick smile of Arthur Bremer and the sick smiles of my friends who support Nixon and Schmitz, who are into a god or a chant. It's the kind of smile that says, "My philosophy, my dogma explains everything. I don't have to face human suffering because I can rationalize it away."

I have these nightmares.

So I'm working for George McGovern, not because he is George McGovern, but because he will end the war and be a little more humane. Even with all my doubts about him and his campaign, I cannot afford not to give him a chance.

I have no other choice.

I've just got to get some sleep.

or his assigns for the time of his natural Life here or elsewhere."

It was some thirty years later that Virginia picked up on this legal separation and indeed institutionalized it.

"Bee itt enacted That in case any English servant shall run away in company with any negroes, who are incapable of makeing satisfaction by addition of time, Bee itt enacted that the English so running away in company with them shall serve for the time of the said negroes absence as they are to do for their owne by a former act."

Needless to say, "one who is incapable of making satisfaction by addition of time" was soon to be defined as a slave. It was out of these meager beginnings that a whole new institution, Slavery American Style was brought into existence.

In summary I think it only fitting and proper for the state that implanted the seed and gave life to this monstrous slavocracy to be duty bound to institutionalize corrective methods. It should go without saying that the reapportionment plan of the Student Senate represents a corrective method. And finally to Mr. Tackeff and all the Mr. Tackeffs, we do not need a new election as you have suggested, we simply need to be re-educated which is a cradle to grave proposition.

Aetna Second To Give Rebate

BOSTON (AP) - Aetna Life and Casualty Co., the fourth largest auto insurer in Massachusetts, announced Monday that it will begin mailing refund checks to Massachusetts' motorists in three weeks.

Aetna was the second company to announce it will comply with last week's order by Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan, providing state motorists $37.5 million in rebates on premiums paid for compulsory bodily injury insurance in 1971, the first year of Massachusetts' no-fault auto insurance law.

The rebate was ordered in light of alleged unfair profits earned on compulsory premiums by the industry that year.

The governors's office announced Monday that Gov. Francis W. Sargent would meet Tuesday with representatives of the insurance industry to ask that there be no delay on the rebates.

Aetna, which is based in Hartford, Conn., said in a statement released at the Massachusetts State House that it will begin mailing $2.6 million in refunds to its 170,000 Massachusetts auto insurance policyholders in approximately three weeks.

New Prison Program

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts prison reform began officially Monday when the Correctional Reform Act of 1972 took effect, but no major changes were expected during the first few weeks.

Halfway houses for prisoners returning to society and furloughs for trustworthy inmates are to be instituted in November, according to Department of Correction plans.

Men and women confined within 50 miles of home will be considered for eight-hour passes beginning Nov. 6, department spokesmen said. Those who live farther away may get 12-hour leaves.

The first of up to 120 residents will begin moving into the halfway houses next month, too, officials said.

Concord Prison Quiet Again

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) - Concord State Prison returned to normal Monday after one guard was stabbed in the chest and four others injured in a Sunday night disturbance, officials said.

John Quealy of Lowell, the stabbed guard, was reported in stable condition at Emerson Hospital in Concord. The other guards received only minor injuries, were treated at the hospital and released, spokesmen said.

Hub Committee to Appeal

BOSTON (AP) - Legal counsel for the Boston School Committee said Monday it planned to appeal a court order to begin racially balancing the city's public schools by Jan. 1.

The committee voted unanimously Friday to appeal the ruling of Suffolk Superior Court Judge Robert Sullivan which also released $52 million in state aide to the city.

Attorney James St. Clair said the committee's appeal was undergoing final preparation Monday, and it would be filed at Suffolk Superior Court, from which it would automatically go to the Supreme judicial Court for consideration.

Mobe To Organize Antiwar Activities

An organizational meeting of the UMass Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Southeast Asia will be held tonight in the Student Union following the showing of "The Backseat Generals". The purpose of the meeting will be to build mass, peaceful, antiwar activities this fall. All persons interested in building and participating in mass actions are invited to attend.

The UMass SMC is currently organizing activities geared towards campus and community participation. Activities being planned on the UMass campus include weekly radio programs and newspaper columns concerning the current situation in Southeast Asia and the antiwar movement. A bi-weekly educational speakers series is also being organized.

Major educational programs concerning US technology and genocide in Vietnam will be presented on the five-college campuses October 24 and 25. The teach-ins will serve as a means of establishing a coordinating body within the five-college area.

Community antiwar rallies are scheduled for November 14, which has been projected as "Stop the Bombing Day". On this day activities will occur in communities throughout the country.

The major action of the fall will take place on November 18 when peaceful, legal demonstrations will take place internationally and in cities throughout the country. Demonstrations are already planned for 18 cities: Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Denver, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Portland, St. Louis, Seattle, San Francisco and Washington, D.C.

OH To Hold Art Colloquium

Peter Schjeldahl, New York poet and art critic for the New York Times, is to discuss poetry and read some of his own tonight in the first of a series of events sponsored by the Orchard Hill Colloquium on the Arts.

The evening with Peter Schjeldahl is to begin at 9 p.m. in the main lounge of Emily Dickinson House located in Orchard Hill Residential College.

Schjeldahl has lived in New York for eight years and has written two books: White Country (Corinth, 1968) and An Adventure of the Thought Police (Ferry Press, London, 1971).

His work has been published in numerous anthologies and innumerable magazines.

Poems and criticism from his 1967 wide-carriage IBM Selectric promise to be most interesting.

SGA Conference Postponed

The new conference date will be February 3-4. Further information regarding workshops and schedules will be made available at the end of the Fall semester.

Gahan Wilson, Playboy's macabre cartoonist, will speak in the Student Union Ballroom tomorrow about his horrific cartoons and how he gets the ideas for them. Included in the program will be slides of his work.

Wilson To Explain Cartoons

Gahan Wilson, Playboy's "Master of the macabre", will attempt to explain how he gets "those weird ideas" for his cartoons when he lectures at the Student Union Ballroom tomorrow at 8:00 p.m.

His cartoons, which have appeared in such diverse publications as Adubon and Fantasy and Science Fiction, have been described by various critics as "incomparably ghoulish," "marvelously depraved," and even "genuinely traumatic." His humor has been compared to that of Mark Twain and Jonathon Swift.

Wilson, a descendent of such authentic American folk heroes as William Jennings Bryan and P.T. Barnum, is a graduate of the Art Institute of Chicago and the first student there who was an admitted cartoonist. He cannot remember wanting to be a shortstop or a brain surgeon or anything other than a cartoonist, and there are surviving childish scrawls of monsters done in his pre-literate days which indicate his bent towards the fantastic was set at an early age.

He has three cartoon collections to his credit, GRAVESIDE MANNER, THE MAN IN THE CANNIBAL POT, and the current Simon and Schuster book, I PAINT WHAT I SEE. He has oddly enough-illustrated a quantity of children's books, and has been involved in numerous advertising campaigns, sometimes even animating his creatures for TV.

Although Wilson's work is usually associated with grotesque events and creatures not of this world nor any known other, more and more he has found himself forced into becoming, not without protest, a kind of political cartoonist. The reason for this, he claims, is that the absurdities in the daily papers have made the horrors of the imagination small pickings. "Where is Frankenstein, now that Christian Barnard's here?" he asks, and points out that Dracula pales in comparison with Texas tower snipers or manufacturers of potentially deadly Christmas toys, "Not that I intend to give up vampires." But he finds that his cartoons on ecology, for instance, are being increasingly used by action groups and Senatorial committees to help pound home the point that mankind's ill using his home planet to a near unbelievable degree.

In private life he appears to behave along fairly normal lines, and the rumor that heis annually put away in an institution is firmly denied. He is married, has a dog, and eats three meals a day at the usual times. What he does during nights of the full moon, he avers, is no one's business but his own.

Mr. Wilson's program is entitled "I Paint What I See," and will be illustrated with slides of his work and other oddities.

Meeting To Furnish Study Abroad Info

Tonight, Alpha Lambda Delta, the sophomore women's honorary sorority, will sponsor a meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at which students who are interested in foreign study are urged to attend to learn about the opportunities available and the administrative procedures required to obtain credit for overseas study.

An increasing number of UMass students spend a summer, semester or year studying abroad. Most students are eligible for this experience, and the opportunities are many and varied. UMass, Amherst, offers programs through which students can study at Keele University in England, the University of Victoria in Canada, Albert-Ludwigs University in Freiburg, Germanny, Grenoble in France, Helsinki in Finland, and Chelsea College of Women's Physical Education in England. Apart from these official programs, students can pursue study at other foreign universities and in most cases gain full academic credit for the work they complete. The International Programs Office is currently trying to develop overseas study opportunities at the Federal University of the Cameroon in West Africa and at the University of the West Indies in the Caribbean. Our Boston campus offers a year program in Paris.

Summer foreign programs often offer even more variety to students than those available during the academic year. Among the programs of UMass, Amherst, are the Oxford Summer Seminar focussing on literature and sociology, the Freiburg (Germany) summer program in German language and literature, the St. Vincent (Caribbean) Field Studies Program in Cultural Anthropology which is primarily for graduate students, the Madrid Summer Program (graduate and undergraduate), and the summer program in Bologna, Italy, which offers courses in art, literature, history, language, and cultural anthropology.

Bink Noll To Read Poetry

The poet Bink Noll will give a reading from his own work at 4:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Green Room of the Music Building at Amherst College.

The reading is being sponsored by the College's English department. It is open to the public without charge. Noll is the author of "The Center of the Circle" and "The Feast". He is a professor of English at Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., and was recently poet-in-residence at Princeton University.

A Repeat of Last Year's Sell-out

When this 25-year-old researcher wanted to investigate a possible cancer treatment, we gave him the go-ahead.

We also gave him the right to fail.

At Kodak, it's not unusual for a 25-year-old like Jim Carroll to win the title of senior research physicist. Like any company involved in a lot of basic research, Kodak has felt the pressure of modern technology and the need for young, fresh thinking. So we hire the best talent we possibly can, and then give them as much responsibility as they can handle. Whatever their age.

We have departments and divisions, like any company. What we don't have are preconceived ideas about how an expert scientist's time should be spent. So when we received a request from the medical community for assistance in experimenting with lasers as a possible cancer treatment, we turned to 25-year-old Jim Carroll, who is deep in laser technology, and gave him the go-ahead. He built two half-billion watt laser systems, one of which Kodak has donated to the National Institute of Health.

The lasers proved unsuccessful in treating cancer, but we'd make the same decision all over again. We entered laser technology because we have a stake in business. We let a young researcher help the medical community look for a means of cancer treatment because we have a stake in the future of mankind.

To put it another way, we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our own needs, we have often furthered society's. After all, our business depends on our society. So we care what happens to it.

Anti-HUAC Leader To Speak

Frank Wilkinson, Executive Director of the National Committee Against Repressive Legislation (NCARL) formerly National Committee to Abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities, will be speaking at a UMass seminar on Thursday, October 19, 1972, at 7:30 p.m. in Mark's Meadow Auditorium (School of Education Auditorium).

Frank Wilkinson

His topic will be "The Educational Institution and Civil Liberties." Among other things, he will discuss the history and implications of loyalty oaths, as well as the implications of various Nixon Court decisions on civil liberties of students and faculties. The seminar is being sponsored by the Foundations Center of the School of Education. Undergraduates attending the seminar can receive 25 modular credits from the Foundations Center through Dr. Louis Fischer.

Mr. Wilkinson has lectured throughout this country speaking on topics related to the defense of 1st Amendment rights of freedom of speech and association, currently under attack by the renamed House Committee on Internal Security (HISC), and the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Internal Security (SISS). In addition, his organization opposes repressive legislation and seeks the repeal of laws purportedly enacted to protect the internal security of the nation, but which, in fact, stand in direct violation of the Bill of Rights. In furtherance of these goals, NCARL contributed to the first defeat meted out to HUAC/HISC in the repeal of the Concentration Camp Law (Title II of the Internal Security Act of 1950) on 9/14/71, in a campaign led by the Japanese American Citizens League. Joined with the American Civil Liberties Union, NCARL has concentrated on a campaign to abolish HISC, which has already resulted in the introduction of 69 resolutions to that effect by Members of Congress. Other legislative goals include: the repeal of the Subversive Activities Act, the Anti-Riot Act of 1968, and repressive sections of the DC Crime Act and the Organized Crime Act of 1970 and Omnibus Crime and Safe Streets Act of 1968.

In 1956 in Los Angeles and 1958 in Georgia, Mr. Wilkinson made a First Amendment challenge of the mandate and practices of HUAC, legally represented by the Southern California and National Office of the American Civil Liberties Union. As a result of an adverse 5 to 4 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court, he served a one year prison sentence in Georgia, South Carolina and Pennsylvania.

For further information, contact Bob Suzuki or Louis Fischer at the School of Education.

S.W.A.P.

Conferees Needed

The 1972 S.W.A.P. Conference (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) is scheduled for Friday, Saturday and Sunday, November 17-19. This year's conference will be held at the Oak 'n Spruce Lodge in South Lee, Massachusetts. S.W.A.P. has been held at the same place several times in past years and has proven to be one of the best available locations.

The Lodge provides housing in cabins located approximately 100 yards from the base lodge where most of the discussion sections will be held. Rooms are comfortable with usually four to a room with a bath. And, the committee usually spends a great deal of time placing people with room mates of their choice. Even so, it might be very interesting to live with Dr. Gage or Trustee Rowland for a weekend.

The main lodge is where you will spend most of your time since all meals are served there and meetings are held. Meeting facilities are adequate and comfortable with coffee available most of the time. The dining rooms are spacious and the food has always been great.

Downstairs in the lodge is a nightclub arrangement which is open before and after the evening meals. The lounge is called The Red Garter and appropriately so. It is decorated in the decor of the turn of the century with a dancing floor and bar. It has proven to be a very comfortable spot after a hard day of discussions and debates.

If South Lee scares you, have no fear because the S.W.A.P. committee will be arranging buses to and from the conference site all afternoon on the Friday of the conference. You may drive up in your own car also and directions will be provided with any other materials needed by delegates. Watch the Collegian for further details.

Applications are now available across campus - the information desks in both the Campus Center and Whitmore Hall, the Student Activities Office in the basement of the Campus Center and the Greek Affairs Office 227 Whitmore Hall. EVERYONE - is urged to apply.

Parking Woes?

If your present parking assignment is a hardship, you may appeal your assignment at 103 Hampshire House, Office of the Coordinator of Parking.

There are a limited number of parking spaces available. The reassignments will be made consistent with the present point system.

Guidelines For Group Experiences Set

In the spring of 1971 the Faculty Senate passed a motion about the use of group experiences on campus. Following that resolution the Chancellor appointed a faculty committee of consultants on groups to carry out the charge of the Senate resolution. This committee of consultants has recently decided upon some guidelines that they wish to share with the student body of the University.

Groups are used in the sense of this report in two different ways on the campus. First, they are part of the organization of classes where the major objective is the learning of appropriate content like history of biology. Secondly, they are used to facilitate personal growth in the participants as in sensitivity, encounter or gestalt groups.

More and more emphasis in the last few years has been placed on the quality of the interpersonal environment. Both in classes and in other parts of the University groups have been meeting which have been designed to create more interpersonal involvement between members, both to promote greater group effectiveness and personal growth in their members. Our concern has been with groups that are used to facilitate personal growth.

Students who wish to participate in these groups should be concerned with three questions: first, they should ask, is their participation voluntary and do they, if participation is through membership in a class, have the option of an alternative experience? Secondly, have they been given enough information in advance to understand what the experience will be like, and are they free to terminate the experience if they wish? Thirdly, is the group leader competent by training or through competent supervision to lead the group. Both participants and the leader should openly discuss all three questions before any participant commits himself to be a member of the group.

Should the group experience result in your wish to talk personally with someone about your individual problem, there are resources on campus that you can turn to. These include the Counseling Center and the Campus Mental Health Center.

School Contracts To Be Appraised

State Representative John W. Olver, candidate for State Senate, announced Friday that appraisal contracts for the proposed state purchase of the Northampton School for Girls as a comprehensive center for children's services have finalized and the appraisal will begin within days.

Olver explained that the appraisers, along with state mental retardation officials, will now inspect the school property to assess the costs of the necessary alterations.

Rep. Olver said optimistically, "The plans for the children's center are finally going well and I think we can expect that the program will go forward.

Group Discussing Concept Of Women's Institute Here

A group of women have been meeting for the past three weeks to discuss and explore the concept of a Women's Institute here during the week of January 8, 1972. The overriding idea according to a spokeswoman is to get student, staff and faculty women from the UMass campus together to work intensely on common projects and problems. Currently they are thinking of having workshops, speakers and films.

They also understand the need to combine joy with their work. Therefore, they are contemplating having a Women's Festival during that week consisting of Poetry Readings, Theatre, Music, Art Exhibits and any other celebration of being a woman.

The group meets every Thursday at 12:00 at the Everywoman's Center in Munson Hall. All interested women are welcomed.

State-Paid Newsman Denies Wrongdoing

BOSTON (AP) - The manager and two employees of the State House News Service-a private organization which backstops virtually the entire Massachusetts news media at the State House-currently are or have been on state payrolls.

The News Service is operated by Paul C. Ryan of Brookline, who presently employs three persons. Two of those employes are listed in letters on file at the state comptroller's office, authorizing payments out of the state budget's subsidiary "03", or consultant, account.

Subscribers to the News Service include The Associated Press, United Press International and most of Massachusetts' major newspapers.

In addition to Paul Ryan, his brother Karl and Fred Day of Lowell, both employes of the News Service, are listed on state records as having been on taxpayer-supported payrolls.

Day, who when the legislature is in session covers the House for the News Service, was named in a letter dated Jan. 24, 1972, authorizing payment of $4,000 out of the House Ways and Means Committee's "03" account.

Karl Ryan is authorized for $433.33 per month to a maximum of $5,199.99 per year from state Treasurer Robert Q. Crane's "03" account to "assemble, prepare and distribute information and data regarding the projects, programs and work of the Department of the State Treasurer for the benefit of the general public."

Paul Ryan was listed in an authorization form in State Auditor Thaddeus Buczko's "03" file, but the contract was cancelled by a letter dated May 7, 1971. He said the contract, authorizing $225 per month to a maximum of $2,700 per year, was terminated when he turned 70 in July, 1970.

Ryan said such employment is "perfectly legitimate. There isn't anything unethical about it."

He said "40 newspapermen check us every day" and said in one particular case when he thought there might be a conflict of interest, "we asked the attorney general and he gave the opinion that it was not." Ryan declined to give specifics of that case.

Ryan said at one time it was customary "when the legislature created a recess commission to have newsmen as secretaries to keep a record of the proceedings and to write the report."

"I've served on 30 commissions," Ryan said. "All this is a matter of public record. There is no question of ethics, and there is no question of conflict of interest."

Ryan said his brother, Karl, who was not available for comment, put out stories from the treasurer's office in his job on Crane's "03" account "on treasury balances, bond issues Vietnam bonuses and anything the treasurer thinks would be of interest to the public."

Asked what he does for the Ways and Means Committee, Day said he does "research on every bill" referred to the committee, determining "who it involves and what it affects."

The letter authorizing payment out of the Ways and Means "03" account for Day is signed by House Speaker David M. Bartley, D--Holyoke, and House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Anthony M. Scibelli. It said:

"The House Ways and Means Committee has voted to employ the following: George Spatcher of Attleboro as a field representative at $6,500; and Fred Day of Lowell as a research represenative at $4,000.

"The salaries of these employes are authorized under services, non-employes 03 and are to be paid from the House Committee on Ways and Means account...

"Employment shall continue at the pleasure of the House Rules Committee," of which Bartley is chairman.

Although reporters for various newspapers, the wire services and broadcast stations often cover House sessions, Day generally is the only reporter who sits in on House sessions from beginning to end.

Besides writing stories for newspapers which subscribe to the News Service's overnight report, Day provides running accounts of the House activities for reporters working for newspapers and broadcast stations which subscribe to the News Service.

The "03" account from which the newsmen are to have been paid was originally created to take care of specific short term jobs which no regular state employes were qualified to handle. The State House News Service, Ryan said, was established by Boston newspapers in 1900 as a cooperative.

"It has been functioning on that basis ever since," he said, and "it's the only news service of its type in the country."

Directly or indirectly, Ryan said, "we've got every paper in the state."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo takes compliments and criticisms to heart. These natives find it difficult to relax, seem constantly to be "on stage". When relaxation does occur, it usually involves Aries and Sagittarius, with Libra also very much in picture. Leo natives currently are going through a period of re-evaluation. By November, many of these natives will have bounced back from adversity. There will be greater emotional and financial security. Leo is the natural fifth sign of the zodiac, related to the sun and number 1 and associated with the back and heart.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Family member becomes inextricably involved where your desires are concerned. Home, basic security is featured. Income from professional endeavors also is in spotlight. Cancer person plays key role.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Flexible approach brings desired results. Review ambitions. You may find that what seemed necessary was merely a passing fancy. Sagittarian could play important role. Check travel possibilities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You succeed in removing some basic restrictions. There will be, for you, greater freedom of thought, action. Keep communication lines clear. Write, advertise and publish. Catch up on correspondence. Let others know your views.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your ability to dig for information is emphasized. One close to you asks money question. You have answers. Be direct. Avoid excess modesty. Find expression for feelings. News is received concerning investment.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Home, marriage, domestic situation in general is spotlighted. You learn lessons. All may not be laughter, but there is much wisdom. Listen, observe and learn. Mate or partner takes initiative. Be amiable.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't fool yourself about basic chores, health, details necessary to complete big project. View facts as they exist. Recognize need for change of pace. Pisces person is in picture. Protect right to privacy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on powerful emotional response. You cannot expect anything now to occur in lukewarm manner. Don't play games-stakes are high and for keeps. Love is dominant. Member of opposite sex may have you slightly dizzy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish rather than start. Round out project. Strive to reach more persons with message. Consult expert. Aries could aid. Take chance with pioneering concept. Property value should be considered.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): New people come into your life via short journeys, messages, social introductions. Leo could be featured. Accent new ideas. Original approach has best chance for success. Be independent without being arrogant.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money gained now through conservative approach. You may have to appease family members. Obtain hint from Cancer message. Be practical about possessions. Check values. Don't stretch budget to breaking point.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Contacts made now have long-range effect. One who laughs much may have serious intentions. Know it and prepare accordingly. Make long range plans. Be willing to laugh at your own foibles. Sagittarian figures prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Mystery is solved if you are persistent. Take nothing for granted. Check with representative of special group, society. Be an investigative reporter. Verify information. Discount rumors. You are on brink of valuable discovery.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY project initiated in September is due to blossom--with profitable results. Leo could figure prominently. You are creative, attractive to opposite sex and have knack of achieving goals. In November, travel is on agenda and also an accelerated social schedule.

Harriers Face Stiff Test At Rhode Island

By WALT POWERS

With only three days rest, the UMass Cross-Country team will take on an equally weak U.R.I. team this afternoon in Kingston.

The Minutemen will have their work cut out for them. Of the top seven UMass runners, only Rick Barry and Paul Segerston will make the trip. In many ways it will be an experiment, one that could jeopardize the outcome of the meet. Is it worth it?

"I think it is," said Coach O'Brien. "First of all, this year's freshmen have more potential than any group of freshmen I've ever coached. Yet so far, most of them have not run together in a really competitive varsity situation. This meet will give me a chance to make an accurate evaluation, and all of them will benefit from the varsity experience.

"Secondly, it will give the top runners a chance to rest. A race like this, in the middle of the week, is physically disruptive, and mentally taxing. With our full team, we'd win easily, but it wouldn't do them any good in the long run, and for this reason, they'd be better off staying home.

The race will be run on a relatively flat course, which should benefit the freshmen.

Rhode Island has a 4 and 2 record, with losses to Providence and Northeastern. Led by Tom Grundy, their top three are back from last year, bolstered by three strong freshmen. They appear to be somewhat stronger than the team that lost 18-42 to UMass last year.

It looks like a fast, close race. "Are the freshmen apprehensive? Not really," said O'Brien. "In fact, they're looking forward to it. It will be a challenge, and they're eager to prove themselves. As to the outcome of the meet, I can't make a prediction. This is the first year I've been able to afford running half the team at a meet like this, and it will be a gamble. But I'm anxious to see how well they'll run, and I think I'll find out a lot."

IM Football

By DAVID S. YOFFE

More than sixty contenders are vying for the twenty-nine league championships as the intramural football competition enters its final two weeks. Several races should be decided this week, however, as two undefeated contenders in three separate leagues are scheduled to meet head-to-head to decide the champs. The Adams Smashers take on the Cance Crusaders in the Hampden league, while the Grayson Aces face the Mac-Namara Magicians in a North Central encounter and the Turkeys and ZSD fight it out to see which team carries home the Indian League honors. A three-way race has developed in the Ocean League, where the Harpoons and Reapers also meet to decide the division titlists. Complicating matters are the Buckeyes, who also have a shot at the crown.

Last week's action was highlighted by four rather one-sided games, including the hapless Chewzos' annihilation, 80-0, at the hands of the merciless Tubes, a 70-0 romp by Theta Chi over Alpha Tau Gamma, a 62-0 whitewash of the Zonkers by Pig, and another convincing shutout turned in by Kappa Sigma over Sigma Phi Epsilon, 51-0.

Some interesting statistics so far this season show that the best offensive/defensive point ratio belongs to Kappa Sigma (142 for, 3 against).

In individual statistics furnished by the intramural office, the leading passers are James Coleman (16 for 18) and Dan O'Connell (14 out of 19 attempts). Leading scorer in men's play is Bruce Cobleigh of Kappa Sigma whose total of 70 points surpasses his nearest competitor by 22.

In women's action, Kathy Lawson leads the entire campus with an impressive scoring total of 74 points.

PENNINGTON THE RECEIVER?—Yes, that's the way it was in the second quarter as Paul Metallo hit QB Peil Pennington on the halfback option play, which made the score 21-6 at the time and put the Terriers away for good. (Photo by Doug Horst)

McCafferty Axed In Colt Shakeup

BALTIMORE (AP) — Don McCafferty was fired as head coach of the Baltimore Colts Monday and replaced by John Sandusky, initiating what General Manager Joe Thomas indicated would be a major shakeup of pro football's winningest team since 1960.

"We have to sort of start a new regime with young players," Thomas said. "If we're going to lose, we may as well lose with young players...and let them grow and mature together."

Thomas, who took over as general manager just three months ago when Robert Irsay became the Colts new owner, said the youth movement also would affect 39-year-old quarterback Johnny Unitas-who is in his 17th season with Baltimore.

"Marty Domres will play a lot more from now on," Thomas said, "and he could even start."

McCafferty, who has been with the Colts since 1959 and directed them to Super Bowl title as a rookie head coach in 1970, was told of his dismissal at the team office Monday and replaced by defensive line coach Sandusky, also with the team for 14 years.

Thomas said he decided on a coaching change Sunday night after the Colts' record dropped to 1-4 with a 21-0 loss to the Dallas Cowboys. It was Baltimore's fourth straight loss at home, the worst such streak since 1962 for the National Football League club.

McCafferty entered the 1972 season with a 21-6-1 record, best among active coaches, but fell into quick disfavor with the new general manager.

McCafferty, known as the "Easy Rider" because of his low-key approach, retained his cool after being fired. But he expressed shock over his dismissal.

"It's an owner's prerogative to do what he wants," McCafferty said.

Down 2-0, Reds Must Come Alive

OAKLAND (AP) — Cincinnati's staggering Reds arrived here Monday, hoping to find a way to crack the airtight Oakland pitching that has given the A's victories in the first two games of baseball's 1972 World Series.

"I'm not going to panic yet," said Sparky Anderson, manager of the National League champion Reds. "Maybe I'm supposed to, but I am not going to."

Anderson, who predicted before the Series started it would go the limit of seven games, said he was more certain than ever now.

Why?

"Because I think it will be awfully tough for us to win in six," quipped Anderson.

Only five teams have lost the first two games of the World Series and still come back to win the championship. Last year Baltimore had a 2-0 lead over Pittsburgh before the Pirates bounced back and took the next three games and, eventually, the title in seven.

The Reds whipped the Pirates in the NL playoffs to reach the final showdown against Oakland, and some of the players believe Cincinnati hasn't quite recovered from that emotional series.

"I don't want to make any excuses," said Pete Rose, captain of the Reds, "but it's just that we put so much into that series with Pittsburgh. To us, that was like the World Series, not this."

Rose had nine hits in the five games against the Pirates but has managed only one so far against the A's.

"Don't tell me their pitching is that much better than the Pirates," snapped Rose.

So far though, it has been.

The Reds have managed only three runs and 13 hits in the two games, and most of that offense came in the first five innings of the opening game against Ken Holtzman. Relievers Rollie Fingers and Vida Blue preserved that victory, then Jim "Catfish" Hunter, with last-out help from Fingers and a spectacular catch by Joe Rudi, held Cincinnati to one run in the second game.

That sent Oakland home with a comfortable edge, and this city, which has not supported the club well at the gate, suddenly discovered the A's.

An emotional throng of 10,000 fans-some regular season games didn't draw that many-greeted the team at the airport.

The National Weather Service predicted a 30 per cent chance of showers for Tuesday night's third game in which the A's plan to send John "Blue Moon" Odom to the mound, with the Reds countering with Jack Billingham.

Stickers Bow At West Point

By BILL KING

As the fall breezes blew up the Hudson and set in the fall foliage of New York, the UMass lacrosse team bowed to the Cadets of West Point Sunday, 13-7.

Garbers Gorillas broke slow as the Point stickers blew three fast goals past starting netman John Rutledge. The Minutemen came back at 10:45 of the first period as Fred Michels rifled a score past the Cadet netminder on a good feed from Steve Crimmins.

Army came right back as the second period began with two more before Jack Moran blasted home a man up penalty shot assisted by Co-Captain Hirsch Seidman.

West Point scored twice more and carried a 7-2 lead into the locker room at the half.

Third Quarter action was a repeat of first as the Cadets scored three times in seven minutes before Kevin Bush and Co-Captain Dwight Blomquist boosted the Gorilla effort to three.

The Minutemen finally came alive in the fourth period on a Steve Crimmins unassisted goal. Less than two minutes later Jack Moran scored his second on a feed from Peter Connelly. The never say die Cadets slid three more fast goals past second half UMie netminder Jim Haddad before Gene Hardiman scored on a picture unassisted shot. At 11:28 of the last period Kevin Bush rounded out the scoring for both sides on his second goal assisted by Steve Crimmins.

Head Coach Richard Garber was pleased with his team's overall performance. "The Cadets were better condition wise as we knew, but we came back well in the second half." Coach Garber said his Gorillas needed more work on ground balls but their plays ran well against a tough Army defense. "Mistakes against a good team such as Army can kill you." Garber was particularly pleased with the performance of several of his players. Senior attackman Fred Michels showed good form against Cadet O'Leary, voted first defenseman on last year's All American team. Middies Steve Crimmins, Gene Hardiman, Jack Moran, and Bruce Sibson played well offensively and defensively while Rich Lally showed sound defense against the Cadet attack.

The Gorillas finish off the fall workouts next weekend with a 2:30 scrimmage against the Boston Lacrosse Club Saturday, and a 1:00 scrimmage against Dartmouth, Sunday. Both games will be played on the fields behind Boyden Gym.

Come out and support the Gorillas.

Pats: Who's In Charge?

By ED BRYANT

In a region conditioned to success by the Celtics, the Bruins, and the Red Sox, the New England Patriots are disappointing every armchair quarterback between Presque Isle and Pawtucket. Inebriated with last year's successes, the "fans", as they are euphemistically called, are demanding better treatment from the Patriots, which in the curious relationship of the fan and his team amounts to victory on the field. Of a team still trying to recover from a management that would trade Nick Buoniconti for Kim Hammond and Bull Bramlett, this is perhaps too much to ask. While the charges are perhaps overstated, there are several genuine criticisms which must be raised against the New England Patriots football team.

To begin, the first knock must go to Billy Sullivan. When Sullivan hired Upton Bell, Bell was requested to produce a winning team. The coach he inherited, John Mazur, had a one-year contract, for the 1971 season, during which time the team improved tremendously, largely through the acquisitions of General Manager Bell. At the conclusion of the 1971 season, Bell, who assumed he would be allowed to choose his own coach, was told that it was not his decision. Mazur was given a second-year contract.

Let us be honest and conclude that 1972 is not going to be a Super Bowl season for the Patriots. Sullivan has his General Manager seeking young players for the future, while he has his coach playing to win now, in order to save his job. This absurd situation is the result of the Board of Director's pettiness.

Let the second criticism be levelled at Mazur. There seems to be an operative schizophrenia in his choice of who should play. If there is a veteran with a "good attitude" competing with a rookie who needs experience, Mazur goes with the veteran. If the veteran has a "bad attitude," he is traded away, leaving Mazur to start a rookie in his place. Mazur values experience, yet he seems to overlook competence in his judgment of players. Steve Kiner and Daryl Johnson were both traded because John Mazur didn't like their attitudes. Kiner has been replaced by a succession of newcomers, most recently Ron Acks. Johnson, recovering from a broken leg, wasn't allowed to play in exhibition games, and was finally traded to Cincinnati. When John Outlaw was injured, the Patriots were forced to start rookies Honor Jackson and Ron Bolton at cornerback.

On the offensive unit, Mazur has played incompetent veterans Len St. Jean and Tom Neville, despite their inability to do the job. Sam Adams, a rookie guard, sits on the bench while St. Jean misses his blocks.

The final criticism goes to Upton Bell. He has vowed to make the Patriots a major league operation. He cannot do so as long as he allows mickey-mouse thinking both above him and below him. He should have offered to resign when he wasn't allowed to choose his own coach. Given a free hand to run the operation, and he will be a fair target for criticism. Otherwise his hands are tied. He should not allow Billy Sullivan or anyone else to tie his hands.

A View From The Hudson

WEST POINT, N.Y.–Centuries ago Hurons, Algonquins, and the Iroquois played in these picturesque hills overlooking Henry Hudson's valley. A century later Benedict Arnold became one of the nation's first hypocrites as he sold this fortress for his soul. But yet this small suburbia nestled neatly and quietly above the banks of the Hudson has down through the ages managed to exemplify the utmost in character and national tradition, and I'm sure the UMass lacrosse team left the Point with that impression this weekend.

You know there's so much more to the sport experience than that which meets the eye. As Coach Dick Garber will tell you "winning isn't everything", and he may be one of the only coaches in the country with that unique but not too distant philosophy of sport. But still there's the time before and the time after that helps to add to the sport spectacle and a simple trip to West Point for a harmless lacrosse scrimmage is an excellent example to allude to.

Sport is a microcosm of American society. The playing field is a stage of life. Through sport and its environment you can find much more than the win column. And when you travel in the realm of your season you bring in the perspective of culture and environment-like being invited into someone else's home. And believe me the nostalgia was very much in vogue at the Point this weekend.

It was Sunday and a day in which the outside world came to the Point as tourists and loved ones. The lacrosse game was secondary. But I bet the catharsis was there on the field not so much because Army is in shape and always conditioned to play, but in the preceding twenty-four hours Penn St. shocked the Cadets 45-0 in football at their spacious but traditional Arena. You can bet that hurt their pride just a bit.

But the accent was not on athletics this day and neither was mine; I was a tourist. And even if I dressed for the game I think I still would have been a tourist because being captured by the aura of the Point is all part of the sport experience.

West Point is its own entity. It's like a barge on the Hudson completely sectioned off from Western New York. We finally found the Point from the top of a ridge overlooking her individuality. If only I had a camera to capture half the view of New York hills and the panorama of foliage.

Now after the guard on sentry let us through, I knew I had really found West Point. On the roadside was a contingent of twenty shorthaired Cadets jogging. Hell, I though it was the track team, but an hour later a Cadet settled my curiosity.

"At West Point everyone has to play either a Varsity or an Intramural sport. Every Tuesday and Thursday we have two hours delegated to the intramural sport of our choice." You might say the accent is on sport activity at the Point and from watching the 13-7 loss to Army the difference in conditioning was obvious. It's the life style of the Cadets to be constantly in shape. There's nothing condescending about that.

On our pre-game tour, we saw how the city is structured with officers' homes, the PX, the Chapel, and all the facilities were pretty overwhelming. The parade ground in front of the main set of barracks had something to say. And the Cannons perched listlessly over the Hudson spoke their own language. And as you walked over the hallowed terrain between the many athletic fields, you could feel the nostalgia. And as you saw the 15 buckaneer cannons like something out of Blackbeard pointed in defense of the Hudson, you know that Old Benedict probably got his money's worth.

Yes, the mood of the Point is one of serious business. Life is so regimented that we who have made a different choice about our future should really see the Point and talk to its constituents to really understand it.

No, frosh can't go to upperclass dances, you're up at six and lights out at eleven (you can request late lights for more study), girls can't stay in your rooms, and you should see the way Plebes eat. But outside of this regimentation, I wouldn't want to tangle with any Cadet on the athletic field.

They're tough cookies. Ask Hirsh Siedman or Dwight Bloomquist, they'll tell you. The Cadets battered our team and maybe if I was subject to their life style, maybe if I got a chance to crush a UMie I would just because of the freedom he has.

But I don't think that the win over UMass or any Army win in sport is that much of a consolation. They're expected to be that tough and believe me they are. It's no disgrace to lose to Army, but when it's over you have to feel sorry for the Cadets who return to their regimentation.

As we left and reached the top of the hill overlooking the Point, I put everything that I touched and that had touched me into proper perspective. It's all part of the sport experience.

Mass Transit Starts Here In February

By JEFFREY LEVIN

A $700,000 Mass Transit Program is slated to begin operations in February 1973 here in the UMass-Amherst area.

The University has accepted a $475,000 grant from the U.S. Dept. of Transportation, and the remaining $225,000 will be supplied in money and services by UMass.

The money from the Dept. of Transportation has been provided as a demonstration grant to test an idea. The idea being, whether a no-fare bus system will provide the incentive necessary to encourage the community to shift its mode of travel from automobiles, thereby reducing the heavy inter-campus flow of automobile traffic.

The project will consist of two types of free bus service. The first will include intensive coverage of the campus and dorms. The second will be composed of "outreach" buslines to and from north Amherst, and southeast to Rolling Green.

The implementation of the Mass Transit program has been delegated to a group headed by Professor William Goss of the School of Engineering. Within this group is a policy board chaired by Professor Paul W. Shuldiner, also of the School of Engineering. Shuldiner, in addition to being involved with the Mass Transit Program is also President of the University Transportation Council.

The Transportation Council was formed as a result of recommendations to the Faculty Senate by an ad hoc transportation committee, concerned with a parking fee structure on campus. The Council, which has been functioning since February of this year, is responsible for assisting Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage in developing long range plans and setting policy for all phases of campus development including parking, internal circulation and transportation. Professor Shuldiner, a former member of the U.S. Dept. of Transportation, is responsible for the meshing of the Mass Transit Program activities with those of the University Transportation Council.

In his capacity as a member of the group implementing the Mass Transit Program, Shuldiner stated that the federal grant provides funds for one year and that the University is committed to assume the funding after that. He also said that possible expansion of the Program is dependent upon its success.

At the present, a contract is being negotiated with the Twin Coach Company for the purchase of ten medium-size coaches, each with seating capacity for thirty-five passengers. Also, the Student Senate busses will be leased to the Program.

In addition, plans are being developed to install liquid natural gas, or propane in the busses to reduce to a minimum the pollution effects of the vehicles.

According to Shuldiner, the University is presently in the process of receiving bids for the construction of a storage building, and a fueling facility for the fleet. He also revealed that bus routes are being laid out and studied, and that negotiations are proceeding with apartment complex developers for the siting of bus shelters.

"The Dept. of Transportation grant" declared Shuldiner "represents outside funding for something that the University would have inevitably been pushed to developing."

Students Speak On Study Abroad

By PATRICIA SHERIDAN

In a presentation "Consider Study Abroad", sponsored by Alpha Lambda Delta last night in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union, seven students told of their experiences studying overseas.

The students speaking were Bruce Paynter, on Haiti, Joseph Sherry, World study cruise, Christopher Dennis, on Oxford University in England, Howard Pearlman on Tunisia, Pamela Ramsey on Greece-Pierce College, Thomas Merrigan, University of Nottingham, England, and Brenda Mahar, University of Bologna, Italy.

Bruce Paynter, a sophomore at UMass, designed his own unique study filming conga drumming in Haiti last spring. He was assisted in the planning of his trip by Dean Dwight Allen of the School of Education.

Joseph Sherry enrolled in a "university at sea" last semester, called World Campus Afloat, administered through Chapman College in California.

He traveled aboard an ocean liner for four months with some 450 students from all parts of the country and the world. Sherry visited 14 different countries in Asia and Africa, including Morrocco, Seneca, Kenya, Ceylon and Japan.

Christopher Dennis spent last summer as a student at Oxford University. He found it an extraordinary experience living at Trinity College in Oxford, in buildings 200 to 500 years old.

All courses are taught by Oxford dons. The program included trips to plays in London and Stratford-on-Avon and to homes of such poets as Wordsworth and Colderidge.

Howard Pearlman thought his Arabic adventure in Tunisia was a "good buy" since all but $2000 of his $3,500 trip was funded by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Pamela Ramsey studied in Greece from January to this July. She took courses at Pierce College in Athens and also designed an independent study in Crete and lived with a family on that island.

Thomas Merrigan, a political science major, spent two semesters studying at the University of Nottingham in England.

Brenda Mahar participated in the program at the University of Bologna, Italy this summer. She lived with an Italian family and toured many of the small villages in Italy.

Dr. Barbara Burn, director of the Office of International Programs, explained some of the technicalities of the overseas studies.

To receive credit for foreign study you must first obtain the approval of the Dean of your college, Dr. Burn and the Registrar.

Financial Aid is available through the Financial Aid Office, the Mass. Board of Higher Education.

Some Student Senate funded scholarships are available through the Office of International Programs.

Anyone interested in foreign study should meet with Dr. Burn at room 239 Whitmore.

Kenneth O'Donnell To Speak

Former Kennedy advisor, Kenneth O'Donnell, will speak tonight about the candidacy of Senator George McGovern for the Presidency.

O'Donnell, himself an ex-Massachusetts gubernatorial candidate, will speak in Room 170-172 of the Campus Center at 8 p.m. The meeting is free and open to the public.

Chairman of the UMass McGovern Committee, Mark Mawrence, will also outline plans for the local McGovern campaign during the next three weeks.

"I invite every McGovern supporter," Mawrence said, "to donate time to the campaign." Mawrence noted that anyone wishing to canvass for the Democratic presidential candidate should sign the list at the McGovern table in the Campus Center concourse during the day, or contact the Canvassing Coordinator, Jo Ann Dominick, at 6-7326.

Auden Returns To Homeland

LONDON (AP) — When Poet W. H. Auden returned recently from the United States to his native England, he had to register with the police.

"What do you do," they asked.

"I am a writer," Auden replied.

The policeman wrote down "no occupation."

"I was interested and amused," Auden told an interviewer at his brother's London flat. But the police description did not stray completely from the truth.

Auden, now 65, moved Monday to his old school, Christchurch College at Oxford University, after 33 years in the United States. He will give advice to callers as a sort of writer-in-residence but with no prescribed duties.

He received the use of a cottage in Oxford at a rent of 4 pounds a week, about $7.20, and admits the post was arranged with "a great deal of intrigue."

He will, of course, continue to write.

Yesterday's story on the Amherst selectmen meeting said a petition supporting an injunction against the Paparazzo housing project was presented by the Amherst Growth Study Committee, Inc.

It was presented to the selectmen by a UMass student who said the petitions were collected by students, and not the committee. The Collegian regrets the error.

Fine Arts Council

Third World Cultural Series

By PAT CROWLEY

This year for the first time the Fine Arts Council will be presenting a Third World Cultural Series as a part of the fine arts programming on campus. According to Merlton Miller, the chairman of the Fine Arts Council, the object of this program is to bring aspects of a non-European culture to the students on this campus.

Miller has served on the Council since 1965, the last three years as chairman. The remaining faculty representatives are chosen for three year terms by the Faculty Senate. The five students representatives to the Council are chosen by the Student Senate for a one-year term of office.

Although this years Council has already been selected, the members have yet to meet. Meetings are held at irregular intervals during the academic year. The Council's main function is to decide on a schedule of events for the next academic year and to promote the events scheduled for the present year.

The Council must work to balance the Celebrity Series and does not overtly represent any constituencies on campus. Miller feels that there is "room on the Council for the layman's point of view". Thus, any student is free to petition the Council to obtain a certain artist or act.

At present the undergraduates pay three dollars per semester in fine arts fees. The revenue derived from this fee is used to produce the various shows over the course of the year. These fees make up approximately $100,000 of the $175,000 annual budget. The remainder is obtained through grants and ticket sales.

Terry Schwarz business manager for the Fine Arts Program, is charged with all the professional details that are involved in putting on the cultural series every year. He also serves as an advisor to the Fine Arts Council although he is not a voting member.

Schwarz feels that the Graduate Senate should adopt the fine arts fee. The money raised by this fee would give the Fine Arts Council more money to work with and would also enable the grad students to attend all cultural performances at the reduced rates enjoyed by the undergraduates.

The Council is able to employ a large number of students under the work-study program. Under the professional supervision of Schwarz these students are able to learn about the day to day running of theatrical, musical and other cultural productions.

Miller feels that although the Fine Arts Program has more than doubled since 1965 it is still too limited for a campus of this size. The new Fine Arts Center is due to open in 1974 and will be able to handle a much larger program.

The new center will require an entire professional staff once it is opened. At this time it is anticipated that this will not necessitate an increase in student fees.

According to Schwarz, the object of the Fine Arts Program is to "present a learning experience on campus for the undergraduates. To further this end, every visiting artist is obligated to present one or more workshops in his field of the arts. The forty scheduled events for this year will provide for at least that amoung of FREE workshops for the university community.

Last Spring it was decided that a Third World Cultural Series would be presented this year. The people mainly responsible for this series are Bill Hassan and Acklyn Lynch, of the New Africa House.

Although not members of the Fine Arts Council these two men have worked hard to line up certain programs and insure their success on campus.

Even though non-European programs have been presented in the past Lynch feels that most of these have been the product of "tokenism". Lynch contends that the Third World Series will offer a much wider range of culture to all the students on campus.

In addition, Lynch looks to the Third World Series as a "vehicle for education" and as an important means to "activate Third World creativity". Lynch feels that the free workshops will have a great impact on the fulfillment of the latter aim.

The Third World Cultural Series has been budgeted $25,000 for the current season. If the students respond favourably and support this program Lynch feels that the series can be greatly expanded in the following year.

One of the main problems faced by the Cultural Series is that there is very little media exposure to the events on campus. Schwarz and Lynch agreed that the students need to be made aware of the many opportunities for cultural enrichment that are found weekly on this campus.

Youth Services Head Says Institutions Bad

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY

Last night, Dr. Jerome Miller, the Commissioner of Youth Services in Massachusetts viewed some of the work being done on this campus with juvenile delinquency. Miller attended a practicum in Juvenile Delinquency, taught by Larry Dye of the Center for Human Potential.

Before Dr. Miller spoke, the near capacity crowd in the Blue Room of Worcester Dining Commons witnessed a play entitled "A Trip for Tina" presented by young people from Westfield Detention Center. The play was written a year ago by youths in the detention center to show the public what life is like before and while being incarcerated.

Last night's presentation was a series of short scenarios depicting the life of Tina. She is thrown out her not too harmonic home life and falls under the auspices of a group of juvenile deliquents. After being drugged against her will, Tina finds herself in the midst of a party that has been raided by the police and is sent to court. She is then sentenced to Westfield Detention Center where she is lost and in need of someone to talk to.

The play is an ad-lib presentation but always conveys the same message, that there must be an alternative to detention centers for the young. Over the past year, the play has been changed in terms of dialogue and cast, but the story remains the same; the traumatic situation of being incarcerated as a child.

In keeping with this theme, Ed Budelman, Regional Director in Charge of Institutions stated that "kids don't have to be institutionalized to get help." He then introduced Dr. Miller as a person "whose job I wouldn't want."

Miller came in front of his audience to hare a few ideas, biases, and prejudices on the problem of institutionalizing the young. "To reform Juvenile Institutions is impossible, just as it is impossible to reform adult prisons," said Miller. What is needed is a breaking out of the traditional institutions, and out of training schools. Miller then described a new Adolescent Training School in New York that he feels will not solve the problem of Juvenile Delinquency but hinder it.

According to Dr. Miller, there is no way to change the system by consensus. He feels the change must "come out of turmoil." Miller stated that anything that will give the juvenile delinquent a human experience will benefit far more than detention.

Dorm Security Overhauled

By MARK VOGLER

A general restructuring of the security sector of University Police Department has led to a major change in dorm security priorities, an office source has indicated.

According to staff assistant Dianna White, a decentralization of the student security system has taken place, transferring the bulk of the responsibility for security matters to the respective residential areas.

Up until this year, securing the residence halls was primarily the chief concern of dorm security officials. But as of now, everything is being done autonomously.

"The dorms are taking charge this year," stated Miss White in a recent interview. "Each area has its own arrangement. How much or how little security is being pushed is up to the area directors. Each house decides its own policy."

Since Southwest has the highest crime rate on campus, Miss White claims that she devotes most of her time to studying the security problems of this area.

She reported that ripoffs and party-crashing are the most common and annoying disturbances that student residents must cope with throughout the living areas. Miss White addressed several solutions to these problems.

"We've thought about reprogramming the elevators in Southwest so that they stop at three floors–those being where the heads of residence are stationed. It would be a bit more difficult for stolen property to leave the building.

"As for party-crashing, those desiring to go to a party should submit their names in advance. If one fails to do so, then he should be restricted from the party."

Miss White noted that although the students were generally apathetic toward security matters at first, things are tightening up and reasonable security consciousness has prevailed. "When people start getting ripped off, they start getting tough."

The young staff assistant cited the disconcern of some heads of residence and students as a major shortcoming to promoting efficient security. She was quite concerned with the quality of student receptionists.

"That's our biggest hassle. It's really difficult to get somebody to stay up all night–with the pay not being too hot. When it's hard to get people, you can't be too selective in who you choose.

"Admittedly, there should be a screening process for the selection of student receptionists. But people aren't exactly beating down the doors to get the job. So what can you do?"

Poor locks and easily accessible master keys were other matters of which Miss White expressed discontent about. To solve the latter problem she sarcastically suggested that maybe a computerized voice control mechanism be installed.

"Well, we've got to do something. Sure, we could lessen the availability of master keys. It's less expensive, but it becomes more of a hassle.

"And when it's more of a hassle, it isn't going to get done. The problem is a matter of convenience. If people get in an uproar about the unavailability of keys when they lock themselves out of their rooms, sooner or later there'll be a demand for keys."

Miss White said that dorm security throughout the campus could certainly be much better. She suggested for starters that the towers of Southwest be ripped down.

"There's no excuse for a 22-story dorm. It's ridiculous. A dorm should never be erected to house more than 150 people. This condition in itself encourages serious interpersonal relationships and hassles.

"The major problems are the attitude of the students in general and the lack of money. I realize that the University is on a tight budget, but not that tight. But I'm not putting the blame solely on them since their budget is subjected to the legislature."

In a concluding remark, Miss White stated that dorm security will proceed the way students want it to.

"I'm sure that the heads of residence will abide by the wishes of their constituencies. It all depends on how they assess their priorities.

Wood's Office Controversial

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Consumer Affairs Secretary William I. Cowin says a UMass lease raises a significant question over the right of a public agency to spend "enormous amounts of money in ways divorced from the fiscal constraints that apply to most governmental agencies in Massachusetts."

UMass officials signed the $700,000 five-year lease for office space in downtown Boston after Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn overruled state Building Superintendent George A. Luciano, who refused to approve the lease.

The state comptroller is also refusing to pay about $50,000 in back rents incurred by the university at its previous location. The comptroller claims that UMass officials engaged the space without proper state authorization.

Cowin, incoming secretary of the Office of Administration and Finance, said the decision on whether to challenge the UMass lease will not be made until the Governor's Council approves the nomination of present A&F Secretary Robert Yasi to the Suffolk County probate judgeship.

Frank Philips, UMass vice-president of financial affairs, said the attorney general advised the university that it had the authority to enter into the lease.

"The university's fiscal autonomy permits it to enter into the lease and to obligate the Commonwealth to pay for it," he said.

Philips added that while the rental fee for the new facilities is approximately $100,000 more per year than the previous location, the difference is $7.50 to $9.00 per square foot.

UMass officials informed Luciano after receiving the attorney general's opinion that whether he approved or not the university would relocate the president's office at 1 Washington Mall, two blocks from the president's former office on Devonshire St.

In his advisory opinion, Quinn ruled that the UMass Board of Trustees "have the autonomous authority....to enter into a lease for a term of years for new office space with rental to be paid from state appropriations."

Cowin said in a telephone interview that he has some reservations about the attorney general's decision. He added that he is not binded by Quinn's decision.

"The ramifications of the decision were extensive in light of the fact that it not only applied to UMass, but it also applied to all other public education segments that have fiscal autonomy," he said.

Many people, he said, have an emotional view toward the educational agencies because of the subject matter that they deal with. There is also a feeling, he added, that these agencies should be more independent of the political process than the normal state agency.

"The fact of the matter is that they are governmental agencies," he continued. "They still are spending taxpayers' money. They still are subject to the legislature to the extent of the maximum amount of money that they are given to spend.

"I question the wisdom of relieving them of normal administrative constraints on how money is expended."

"If we decide to reestablish the power of A&F with respect to these leases," he said, "I would like to have it done in such a way that it does not prejudice the moral responsibility of the state to pay these landlords for the space they provided."

Secret Study Recommends Vietnamization

WASHINGTON (AP)-An analysis of the Vietnam war, widely circulated among Nixon administration planners but never released, said 18 months ago that peace negotiations and Vietnamization "cannot be pursued simultaneously, with equal chance of success."

The study said any thaw in peace talks could undermine the "atmosphere of 'struggle for survival' on which Vietnamization depends" and recommended Vietnamization as the best opportunity for U.S. disengagement from the war.

The administration is on record as seeking a settlement of the war through peace talks while pursuing a policy of Vietnamization.

Hours after being sworn in Monday as the new Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, former U.S. commander in Vietnam, left for Saigon to evaluate progress on Vietnamization. Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, presidential adviser for national security affairs, returned to Paris Monday for another round of peace talks with the North Vietnamese.

The study, prepared by a senior RAND Corp. analyst, argued that Communist participation in South Vietnamese government would result inan end of American aid without which a Communist takeover "would only be a matter of time."

Intensive peace talks in Paris last week produced a flurry of rumors that a settlement was near but sources indicated that the question of a Communist role in a post-war South Vietnamese government was a major stumbling block.

Sources familiar with the RAND study, which was sent to the Pentagon in March 1971, said it received attention from top officials including Kissinger. RAND is a public research corporation whose principal client is the Defense Department.

The author of the analysis said that Vietnamization offered the best opportunity for American withdrawal under conditions that would maximize the chances that a viable non-Communist regime would endure in South Vietnam."

Thus, he said, North Vietnam might soften its negotiating stance as a tactic to undermine Vietnamization. The U.S. seeks to strengthen the South Vietnamese government to a point it can resist Communist pressure without direct U.S. military involvement.

The RAND analysis was written by Guy J. Pauker, who spent years in Vietnam and Indonesia and became an influential adviser on Asian policies. He was a Harvard classmate of Kissinger.

His analysis was prepared as an unclassified document but was never released after submitted to the Pentagon for routine security review. A copy was obtained by The Associated Press.

Pauker's analysis said also that Americans who demand that the government of President Nguyen Van Thieu broaden its political base do not understand Vietnamese politics.

"A truly 'broadly based' or 'representative' government is not possible in South Vietnam today," he wrote. "It is a fiction which can only perpetuate chaos and retard the Vietnamization program that will permit American disengagement."

In the last six months, faced with a Communist military offensive, Thieu has moved against domestic political opposition, suspended provincial elections and closed several newspapers.

Kissinger To Meet With Thieu

WASHINGTON (AP) - Presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger made a brief stop in Paris Wednesday for a meeting with second-level North Vietnamese officials and then flew on to Saigon and a conference with South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu.

This latest twist in the hopscotch-like travel by Kissinger immediately reinforced speculation by administration sources and diplomats in Washington that something is in the works regarding a peace negotiating development.

However, the public stance by the White House and State Department remained as it has for several weeks-the Paris talks are in a serious and sensitive stage and there will be no open discussion of the situation.

In fact, the White House returned to its earlier policy of disclosing Kissinger's movements only after he had left Washington.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said first that the national security director had left for Paris on Monday to meet with Xuan Thuy, the No. 2 North Vietnamese negotiator in Paris.

Later, at his regular late morning session with newsmen, Ziegler said the Xuan Thuy meeting was over and Kissinger was on his way to Saigon to see Thieu.

In the face of the renewed speculation over the meaning, if any, of Kissinger's latest trip, Ziegler tried to make the Saigon development a routine one.

He said that when Kissinger and the North Vietnamese met last week they agreed to return for Tuesday's session. And, Ziegler said, Nixon told Kissinger when he returned to go on to Saigon after Tuesday's meeting.

Kissinger is to return to Washington after meeting with Thieu but no date for his return has been announced.

Informed sources and diplomats said Kissinger's trip appeared part of a U.S. effort to convince Hanoi of the seriousness of its Paris stance.

The American position is said to center on working out some sort of cease-fire arrangement that would bring about the release of U.S. prisoners and a political settlement that would not give the appearance of President Nixon reneging on his pledge not to sell out Thieu.

A major task, and one that could explain Kissinger's current trip to Saigon, is to convince the South Vietnamese leader of the necessity of some sort of coalition or dual government with the Viet Cong, the sources speculated.

Giving this position weight is the convergence in Saigon of other U.S. and South Vietnemese officials during Kissinger's visit. For instance, Gen. Creighton Abrams arrives in South Vietnam Tuesday in his first official duty as the new Army chief of staff.

One possibility raised by diplomatic sources who claim knowledge of the Paris situation is some type of joint U.S.—North Vietnamese announcement before the Nov. 7 presidential election.

In Brief...

MARKET RISES WITH PEACE TALKS

NEW YORK (AP) — With an assist from presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger, the stock market pulled itself out of a four-day slide Tuesday.

Many analysts had said Kissinger's trips in quest of a Vietnam peace settlement no longer could stir the market. But when the White House announced Tuesday that Kissinger would visit Saigon to confer with President Nguyen Van Thieu, the market gave a moderate but perceptible spurt.

INVASION OF PRIVACY LAWSUIT

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a $1.1-million invasion of privacy lawsuit, a New England housewife says Republican security men monitored her telephone calls after she placed antiwar ads in Miami newspapers.

Katharine C. Worden, 47, of Weston, Mass., said her calls were intercepted as she stayed at the Hotel Fontainebleau during the Republican National Convention last August.

The lawsuit, filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court by the American Civil Liberties Union Foundation, said Mrs. Worden's calls were screened at the direction of security forces of the Republican National Committee and the Committee for the Re-election of the President.

HIJACKER SOUGHT

McCALL, Idaho (AP) — A man arrested here in connection with an armed robbery in Boise took two hostages at gunpoint Tuesday and fled Idaho in a single-engine plane. The hostages were released unharmed near a ranch in Eastern Washington, police said.

The hijacker then fled in a station wagon after cutting telephone lines to the ranch and shooting out tires of other vehicles and the plane, officers reported.

An air and ground search was underway for the gunman, identified by Idaho State Police Capt. M. J. Bays as Joseph Thomas Johnston, 30, of Portland, Ore.

S. Korean President Declares Martial Law

SEOUL (AP) - President Chung Hee Park proclaimed martial law Tuesday in South Korea, asserting that political parties could not be trusted to push unification talks with Communist North Korea.

In a surprise move, the former four-star general dissolved the National Assembly, suspended parts of the 1962 constitution and clamped censorship on the domestic press. He also closed all colleges and universities "for the time being."

He promised to restore constitutional rule by the end of the year "at the latest." It was the third time he has proclaimed martial law since he took power in a bloodless military coup 11 years ago.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles W. Bray said the United States was "not consulted about the decision and quite obviously" is "not consulted about the decision and quite obviously" is "not associated with it."

Addressing the nation by radio, Park said he would propose constitutional changes by Oct. 27 and submit them to a referendum a month later. The changes, he said, would permit South Korea to face the transition from years of cold war to the present atmosphere of detente which includes moves toward reunification with North Korea.

Park said his measures would bring South Korea into line with present-day realities and "would be best suited for backing up the active pursuit of the South-North dialogue and for coping successfully with the rapidly changing situation surrounding us."

Allende Announces Curfew

SANTIAGO (AP) — President Salvador Allende's leftist government decreed a night curfew in Santiago Province on Tuesday in an effort to calm a week of protests and sporadic street violence.

The midnight-6 p.m. curfew was imposed at the end of a day of unrest in which riot police battled demonstrators with tear gas and Chile's political conflict sharpened.

Communists warned that Allende's administration is threatened by the wave of strikes and protests aimed against government measures in the economy and the short supply of food and other consumer goods.

The government, despite the dissatisfaction, banned the sale of beef in markets and restuarants until December. Beef, scarce for more than a year, previously was allowed to be sold on weekends only.

That and similar consumer restrictions have provoked widespread discontent among housewives who find little left to shop for.

The curfew announcement was read over a nationwide radio network controlled by the government. It warned that military sentries and police patrols have been warned to shoot at anyone disobeying curfew regulations.

Boggs Search Copters Report Locator Beacon

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Coast Guard helicopter pilots reported picking up "very strong" emergency locator beacon signals Tuesday in a mountainous area where House Majority Leader Hale Boggs and three other persons are missing in a light aircraft.

Source of the signals was the subject of a massive air search between here and Juneau, 560 miles to the south. One Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said the signals could be a false alarm but were not being discounted.

Pilots of two Coast Guard jet-powered helicopters said they picked up a signal for about 40 minutes beginning about 5 p.m. EDT, 10 miles west of Juneau. Peaks towering above 3,500 feet have hampered electronic search in the area.

Another signal lasting about 30 seconds was later picked up by the helicopters, pilots said, but also was quickly lost.

No other planes which could have sent such signals were reported down in the area.

"We have experienced false alarms in the past," an FAA spokesman said. "Sometimes people turn these beacons on accidentally. Sometimes they are not in actual distress situations."

Aboard the missing twin-engine Cessna 310 were Boggs, 58; Alaska's lone congressman, Democrat Nick Begich, 40; Russell Brown, 37, an aide to Begich; and Don E. Jonz, 38, the pilot.

Boggs had spoken Sunday night in Anchorage at a fund-raising dinner for Begich's re-election campaign and they were on flight Monday for a similar dinner in Juneau when their airplane disappeared in a rain storm.

Meanwhile, in Washington, D.C., a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board said the pilot had filed a visual flight rules plan from Anchorage to Yakutat and Yakutat to Juneau, a route that would have taken him inland over rugged, snow-capped peaks some 15,000 feet high.

The spokesman said that in terrain of that kind, some downed planes and crews have been located only after weeks or months of searching.

The National Weather Service issued a report that the weather was beginning to "turn sour".

The airplane had been on a 3-1/2 hour, 350-mile flight when it disappeared. The pilot's flight plan called for him to fly over snow-covered Portage Pass and icy Prince William Sound, then down the coast to Juneau.

The weather service spokesman said "ceilings were almost on the deck" in the area, with the visibilities very low.

Senate Opposes Spending Ceiling

WASHINGTON (AP) - A compromise Social Security bill increasing benefits by $6 billion cleared the House and Senate Tuesday, but disputes over a bill to impose a $250 billion spending ceiling on the federal government have stalemated efforts for immediate adjournment.

The Social Security bill sailed through the House by a 305-1 vote and the Senate by a 61-0 margin, marking a big step toward Congress' hoped-for adjournement.

But Senate opposition to the controversial $250 billion spending ceiling sought by the Nixon administration diminished hopes of some that Congress would conclude its work late Tuesday.

The Social Security bill would raise payroll taxes to pay for the liberalized benefits. The maximum tax on a worker, matched by his employer, would be $631.80 next year, compared with $468 this year. But part of the increase would occur even under present law, which would set the maximum for 1973 at $594.

While the bill was hailed by most members as improving the programs it covers, others chided Congress-especially the Senate-for failing once to include reform of the welfare system in the measure.

Rep. John W. Byrnes, R—Wis., said "nobody, nobody likes the present welfare system...and an important attempt to deal with one of the most serious problems before us has come to nothing."

The welfare reform section, which the House passed last year in essentially the form recommended by President Nixon, was drastically revised by the Senate and conferees, unable to reach a compromise deleted the whole title.

Welfare reform died in the previous Congress under similar circumstances..

Senate opposition to the spending ceiling developed after critics charged the measure did not impose sufficient limitations on the President's spending powers. It is the chief obstacle to adjournment.

The House passed 166 to 137 the compromise bill setting a $250-billion spending ceiling and authorizing the President to trim money allocations to fit it.

Exempted from cuts are pensions and medical benefits for Social Security recipients, welfare recipients, veterans, military, civil service and railroad retirees, and the salaries of judges.

Other budget items are grouped in 50 categories, each of which could be reduced not more than 20 per cent.

But within each category individual programs could be denied a greater proportion of funds, or even all.

Opponents emphasized this aspect in last-minute speeches against the measure, but Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D—Ark., argued that the powers granted the President are not so large as some opponents think, since "presidents have been withholding funds since the time of Thomas Jefferson."

The measure faced strong opposition to the Senate, which could try to change it-even at the expense of delaying adjournment.

Industrial Output On Upswing

WASHINGTON (AP) - Industrial production continued its steady upward push in September, rising by 0.6 per cent and reflecting an improving national economy, the Federal Reserve Board said Tuesday.

The board said its index of industrial output, one of the nation's most sensitive economic indicators, went up to 114.5 per cent last month, over the 1967 average, making the index 7.6 per cent higher than it was at this time last year. It was the largest gain in industrial production since the 1.5 per cent increase recorded in April.

In October a year ago the economy began accelerating. The recovery has continued to the present.

Not all parts of the economy produced at a higher rate in September. The output of durable consumer goods declined and output of automobiles remained at the midsummer figure of 8.5 million units at an annual rate.

But these soft spots were more than offset by stepups in production of most final products, including equipment and materials. And the board said things should look better for the auto industry in October.

N. Viets Begin 'Plant The Flag' Campaign

SAIGON (AP) - Enemy troops seized half a dozen central highlands villages in what military spokesmen said Tuesday was a new plant-the-flag campaign with a political aim.

One village was reported retaken by dusk after fighting that took the lives of five civilians, six government militiamen and 12 enemy soldiers.

Behind the wave of attacks, spokesmen said, is a Communist command directive, code named "Resolution X10," that tells Viet Cong political cadres to raise their red, blue and yellow flags in as many villages as possible.

One South Vietnamese officer called it a "form of political struggle" but said he did not know whether the order was given in exnectation of an Indochina cease-fire.

Some sources say that widespread, small-scale enemy activity in recent weeks of the offensive is calculated to create at least an illusion of dominance in the countryside that would support Communist claims at the negotiating table.

Field reports said some civilians were able to flee along with militia troops from the lightly defended villages, but an unknown number of others fell under enemy control.

Government troops reported stiff resistance as they tried to reach one of the villages.

Farther north, more than 100 enemy troops hit a refugee camp five miles from coastal Quang Ngai, a provincial capital, in an old antigovernment stronghold area not far from My Lai. Enemy forces have launched at least five attacks in the area in the last two weeks.

McG Hits Nixon 'Sabotage'

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) - Democrat George McGovern, repeatedly accusing President Nixon of hiring an alleged "sabotage squad," insisted Tuesday he does not enjoy making campaign attacks.

The Democratic presidential candidate contended at virtually every stop during a two-day Texas tour that the Nixon campaign has employed "a network of more than 50 operatives to forge letters, impersonate officials of various Democratic campaigns, incite riots, issue phony press releases in the names of others, withhold evidence from a grand jury, illegally enter the offices of the opposition party, steal private files and unlawfully wiretap the private conversations of Democratic officials."

Talking to a noon-hour rally that attracted a police-estimated crowd of 5,000 to a downtown Fort Worth park, McGovern added:

"I do not enjoy that part of campaigning which comes from attacking the opposition. I'd much rather talk about the issues and principles in which I believe.

"But there are certain dangerous trends that have been set in motion by this present administration that we must talk about because they jeopardize the freedoms and constitutional rights on which our system of government depends."

Fort Worth was the final stop on McGovern's fourth Texas campaign swing. From there the candidate headed back to Washington to tape a half-hour broadcast on economic issues that will be televised nationally Friday night.

To the Forth Worth crowd that waited for a tardy McGovern in 85-degree heat, the South Dakota senator pledged that if elected he would defend "decent and fair profits" and protect the jobs of those employed at the many military installations in the state.

"I don't mind at all seeing big companies make good profits," said McGovern. He said he is disturbed about "special interests" that have no concern for the public.

The Democratic nominee declared he wouldn't close any military bases or ininstallations until he could line up alternative employment for their workers.

For An Effective Legislature
The House of Representatives is losing the "power of the purse." The House appropriates the money spent by the State and should have a stronger voice in how it is spent.
But the House does not effectively review the past performance and future prospects of state programs. In the last session, the House Ways and Means Committee bottled up the 2.2 billion dollar budget in secrecy for four months and then the Speaker called for the vote 24 hours after it was in the hands of the House members. A bill to require that the budget in printed form be available to House members for 7 days prior to a vote was defeated by the majority party. The budget contains thousands of policy decisions on state programs and should be carefully reviewed by the whole House membership.
I will work to return the "power of the purse" to the House, to make it a watchdog over state spending so that the people will get maximum service for each tax dollar spent.

Nixon Gears Up; On Road Monday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon Tuesday pronounced the next three weeks the most important of the presidential campaign, and the White House announced another of his rare vote-hunting journeys, this one to Westchester County, N.Y., next Monday.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon has not yet decided what will be on his political schedule between then and the Nov. 7 election.

Nixon told 34 foreign labor leaders, here to observe the campaign and election process, that "the last three weeks are always the most important weeks of a campaign."

He said the British have a better system, one in which campaigns last only three weeks.

"Our campaigns seem to go on all the time, and traditionally they last eight weeks, 12 weeks, even three or four months," the President said. "By the time the campaigns reach this stage, the candidates are tired and the people also are a bit tired."

Nixon's one-day trip to New York, for a Westchester County motorcade, a reception with campaign and Republican leaders, and a rally in Uniondale, on Long Island, will be the fifth openly political journey since his GOP nomination.

Nixon also is flying to Philadelphia Friday to sign the revenue-sharing bill in Independence Hall, but Ziegler said that trip is non-political.

Jenness To Speak Thursday

On Thursday, October 19, 1972 Linda Jenness, the 1972 presidential candidate of the Socialist Workers Party, will hold a news briefing in the Hampshire College Academic building Lounge at 6:30 p.m. She will then be speaking in the Hampshire College's Main Lecture Hall at 7 p.m. and at the UMass Campus Center Auditorium at 9 p.m. the same night. This speaking tour is part of the Socialist Workers largest campaign in its history, with the SWP appearing on over thirty states presidential ballots, and the largest socialist campaign in America since Eugene V. Debs.

The Socialist Workers Party is not running a national campaign to win the election, because elections in and of themselves have never determined the course of this nation. In contrast the SWP is using the election period to disseminate their perspective on the inevitable in capacity of the two major capitalist parties to solve any of the fundamental social problems facing this country, and secondly to build the independent mass movements for social change, i.e. the Black, Chicano, and Women's Liberation, and antiwar movements, that have been historically proven to be the most effective means of achieving social progress.

Linda Jenness is 31 years old and has been a legal resident of Georgia for most of her life. After graduating from high school, she attended Antioch College where she majored in history; while in school she also studied in France and Spain. After learning school she taught English in Spain for a year and worked as a secretary in Washington, D.C. She speaks Spanish fluently.

Influenced by the Cuban revolution and the war in Vietnam, she joined the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA) in 1966. In September 1968 she represented the YSA in Lares, Puerto Rico, at the hundredth anniversary celebration of the Puerto Rican independence movement. In January 1969 she spent five weeks in Cuba as part of a YSA delegation invited by the Cuban government to participate in activities marking the tenth anniversary of the Cuban revolution. She is also a longtime antiwar activist and feminist in Atlanta and Washington, D.C.

She is the co-author of several pamphlets on the feminist movement: "Women and the Cuban Revolution", "Abortion: A Woman's Right", and "Kate Millett's Sexual Politics: A Marxist Appreciation." She has also co-authored the pamphlet "The Wage-Price Freeze Swindle" and edited the new Pathfinder Press book Feminism and Socialism.

Linda Jenness was nominated at the SWP national convention in Oberlin, Ohio in August 1971. Since that time she has toured over forty states and made an international speaking and fact-finding tour to Mexico, Argentina, Chile, and Peru.

Jamaican Culture Group Here Today

Under the sponsorship of Harambe, the Afro-American Student Organization, and the DuBois Black Studies Department, twenty-one members of a musical group called "The Mystic Revelations of Rasta Fari" will be offering a concert on campus. The concert is scheduled for Wednesday, October 19th, at 8:00 p.m. in S.B.A. 120.

In Jamaica, the people known as Rasta Fari Brethren are a militant, apocalyptic sect, whose religious and political doctrines are a mixture of modern Pan-Africanist impulses, traditional African religious faith, and a rejection of western culture and all its works.

Their unyielding rejection of the hypocrisy of western society and of European domination has put them into conflict with the Government, the westernized middle-classes, and the police, who take advantage of the Rasta Fari's use of marijuana for ritual and ceremonial reasons to oppress them.

The music of The Mystic Revelations of Rasta Fari is as Jamaican as the Rasta Farian "brethren" themselves. The rhythm owes much to Africa; the brass owes much to the liberalizing influence of people like John Coltrane. But the total sound of the group is wholly indigenous--the combination of a driving pulse and a profound emotional conviction that their music speaks truly for them. The result is an erotic, pre-rational statement in music about a particular life-style. It is as multi-faceted and multi-textured as the society that is Jamaica.

A performance is an hour-long experience. It moves through gutsy singing, saxaphones, trumpet, and trombones played in abandon, and a driving beat.

The Narrator is Ras Sam Clayton, who tells the audience what the group is about, and treats you to a little history and Tasta Farian philosophy. The Musical Director is "Im" Brooks. His range on the tenor sax is startling; and he also plays a satisfying flute. The style of the playing is loose, it makes for free experimentation. Sometimes the sound will be oppressive: it will talk of suffering and despair. At other times it will be plaintive, an expression of the faith of the "brethren" in their singular and moving vision of "peace and love." This music grows out of the deeply held religious, cultural and political beliefs of the people who play it. Perhaps that is why the group is splendid in informal surroundings.

Program Council Meets Tonight

The Program Council, designed to bring cultural, social and recreational activities to the University community, will meet tonight at 6 in the Campus Center.

The Council says that in the past it has been difficult to get people to participate on committees, and as a consequence a spokesman said, "the programming left a lot to be desired." In other cases, he said, a few people had to do all the work.

The spokesman said that this year members of the Third World Community have "committed themselves to deep involvement in the Program Council, to see that the entire University community is able to enjoy and participate in a wide spectrum of events."

The spokesman denied rumors that the Program Council is about to disolve itself. "In no uncertain terms is this going to happen. There is work to be done so that the students will receive just benefits for their stay at the University. It is the position of members of the Third World Community that the Program Council and its committees will continue to exist and service the University community, he said.

Wetland Protection Bills Now In Effect

By MDC STAFF

Two pieces of legislation that provide for more protection of wetlands take effect today according to their sponsor State Rep. John W. Olver, D-Amherst.

One bill, said Olver, "puts a brake on projects that would immediately alter or destroy wetlands. Any plans for wetlands must be submitted to the Conservtion Commission within 60 days, before any work is done.

"All health and other permits must also be obtained, and the environmental effect assessed before the work begins," he continued.

"There is an appeal process for all parties."

Olver is attempting to unseat John Barrus, R-Goshen, for the state Senate seat in the 2nd Hampshire District.

The Democratic lawmaker said the second bill mandates the Bureau of Natural Resources to map the Commonwealth's wetlands to aid local communities in determining the wetlands in their boundaries.

"The legislation provides real enforcement strength. It allows most of the decision making to be done at the local level," he said. "The bureau will now have free time and resources to work on the comprehensive planning and mapping of wetland protection."

The legislation combines features of previous legislation so that it covers flood plains, coastal wetlands, wilderness river supervision as well as the wetlands, according to Olver, a UMass professor on leave.

"The wetlands are vital to our environment," added Olver.

"This legislation should significantly help to halt the threatening overdevelopment of this vital resource."

A law that increases the state minimum wage, also sponsored by Olver, took effect yesterday. The measure raises the state minimum wage for most occupations from the present $1.75 an hour to $1.85 an hour.

UMW Officials Indicted

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Two United Mine Workers officials were indicted Tuesday by a federal grand jury here on conspiracy charges in the 1969 murder of UMW insurgent Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski.

The indictments charged William J. Prater, 53, of LaFolette, Tenn., and Albert Pass, 58, of Middleboro, Ky., with conspiracy to deprive Yablonski of his rights under the 1870 Civil Rights Act, and maintained that the murder resulted directly from that alleged conspiracy.

In addition, the panel charged both men with obstructing a criminal investigation and depriving Yablonski's rights guaranteed under federal labor laws.

Pass, secretary-treasurer of the union's District 19, also sits on the UMW's policy-making International Executive Board. Prater is a District 19 field representative.

Yablonski and his wife and daughter were found shot to death in their nearby Claresville farmhouse Dec. 31, 1969, three weeks after Yablonski lost a bitterly fought election to incumbent W. A. "Tony" Boyle for the union's presidency.

Both Prater and Pass are in federal custody here in lie of $200,000 bond each.

No Promise On Auto Rebates

BOSTON (AP) - Spokesmen for several major insurance companies told Gov. Francis W. Sargent Tuesday they can't promise that no member of their industry will try to block the rebates ordered last week on 1971 no-fault auto insurance premiums.

The governor invited the insurance executives to a meeting, he said, to persuade them that attempts to challenge the rebates in court would not be "in the public interest." The six executives who attended the meeting did not comment, but Sargent said he was told that each firm would decide for itself whether to pay the rebates or take the issue to court.

Aetna Life and Casualty Co., and Kemper Insurance Group, the fourth and third largest insurers in Massachusetts, have announced already they are making plans to pay their shares of the $37.5 million rebate total. Both firms were represented at Tuesday's meeting.

Sargent acknowledged that a court challenge by just one of some 100 firms writing compulsory auto insurance in the state would block payment of the refunds by all insurance companies.

The firms have until Oct. 31 to file any appeals of the rebate decision announced last Wednesday.

"I'm convinced after talking with them that these companies will go along with the question of sending out rebate checks," the governor said following the meeting.

He said the spokesmen told him, however, that "although they represent the industry they can't speak for the industry.

"It may well be that certain elements of the industry will not go along with it and will take it to court.

"If one or more of the other companies were to go to court to challenge the amount of the rebate check then it would hold up the whole process.

Cautious Optimism

Governor Sargent's reform plan looks on the surface to be one that shows deep insights into the needs of higher education. While it did contain some new, interesting and sound ideas, it also contained programs which we read in the report of the Future of the University a couple of years ago.

The Governor is certainly correct in seeking out innovative programs at low costs to the state's taxpayer. This is just one part of his whole plan in the reorganization of the state's executive branch.

Sargent speaks highly of improving the quality of instructions. He has set his priorities correctly when he speaks of "the art of teaching" and how some students could be learning more outside of the classroom situation. Degree programs designed to last as long as or as short as the student desires would certainly place more control of education with the students. This is an area where students have been calling for power for sometime.

Sargent's lofty priniciples of education for all, young and old, men and women, rich and poor, certainly is a worthwhile goal to seek for the betterment of society as a whole.

On the other hand, such general statements as "The actual tuition paid by a student should be based on his financial resources and abilities" is too vague. How to implement such a system would have been a much more welcome statement from the governor.

Sargent's feelings concerning the reorganization of the administration of higher education sounds at first like a noble plan. But in the actions which followed the release of his position paper, his agent, Educational Secretary Joseph Cronin revealed options which would virtually do away with most of the lay trustee boards which Sargent said he wanted to keep. It almost makes one doubt the Governor's own words.

While the education process could be more effective, placing it under the more direct control of the Governor could also eventually cause its decay through various political influences.

The Cornered Liberal

It's in the paper every morning. President Nixon is sweeping the polls. McGovern is harrassed by the Eagleton Affair. McGovern looks dire. Well, maybe they're right. The liberals all seem to become Republicans this year. Social change is over, and now it's time to get down to basics; it's time to get back to a firm hand, to order and stability, to a strong executive branch.

Today the 'suck-liberal' has found himself in a corner. Some of the programs that he called for in the 50's and 60's have been realized. Only they worked too well, and now our white man/lib-man has found a black man in his schools, a chicken (and not a steak) in his pot, and he knows that this was the fault of eight years of liberal regime beginning with Kennedy, who spent too much money and was too liberal. Nixon's O.K., he's stopped bussing, put sixteenth century justices on the Supreme Court, instituted surveillance and political espionage as a tactic, and so on.

Nixon has become the new leader. He is the new ideal of the new liberal. The liberal leader of before was the student, who was right.

"Well, you know, John, these kids have got a point."

The point that the liberal politics had was true only until ideals became realities. When decisions were made in the government to give form to ideas, things changed. I guess the kids were right, so long as they remained kids, and the change remained adolescent.

Now the liberal is swinging towards a new image. He is demanding, 'mature responsible leadership', the leadership of preservation that has taken place. The new liberalism is conservatism

Now the liberal is swinging towards a new image. He is demanding, 'mature responsible leadership', the leadership of 'preservation and stability' which will eradicate any change that has taken place. The new liberalism is conservatism in combination with despotism. This conservatism will thwart new changes and reshape old ones. despotism will assure that all change will be held in check.

In other words, this liberal majority that is supposed to be around isn't. The majority of people like ideas, but not action - so they're going to vote for Nixon this election. Nixon is gonna win. So what?

The so what is what are we going to do in the face of four more years? We have been part of the changes of the sixties, the majority was with us. The majority has become conservative, and now we are a minority.

We are students and transients. We are here for four years, and then out to the world. A world which holds the spectre of four more years of Nixon, and a hostile majority.

There are a number of alternatives to involvement within this environment. We could confront it. Some people have already chosen civil disobedience towards correcting the government, such as the Westover Actions. Others have chosen various stages of violent action. This type of action probably necessitates a total commitment. We're sure I.B.M., Raytheon, or Table-Talk Pies will not hire a law-breaker.

Another choice is alternative politics. You could become involved in a third, an interest group party. Again this might mean a loss of opportunity. At least it would involve an earnest commitment, and not the complacency which many students now have toward their respective political affiliations.

You could influence by way of your presence. By structuring your life to uphold (and thus exemplify) your values your life could be an example and an influence to those around you. If you choose this means you may be ostracized from certain employment. Your life style may limit you to a certain extent.

We shall all leave UMass and will all be entering a hostile society, a society that is hostile because it is not so inclined to like us. We could just blend in and neither bear nor accept responsibility for the actions of our society. But then we will become what we have been implicitly or explicitly against for four years at school. Just as when you enter school you must ask yourself what your values are, so too when you leave school.

If Nixon wins, the effect upon our lives will be astounding. We shall feel ourselves very far from any type of American character; we shall become voyeurs. We must determine what our values are and work for them; the American political process cannot respond, nor will it respond.

Asian Contributions

Asian Contribution to the American Renaissance

Recent times have seen America increasingly turning to Asia for cultural, social, political and metaphysical know-how.

Some time ago, a news report had it that Washington was negotiating with Asian countries for aid in simplifying and improving the primitive English language. As of now, the spelling of English words have little or no logical connection with their pronunciation. For instance, the word "cough" would be a lot simpler spelt "cof", removing the absolutely unnecessary "ugh"!

The languages of the advanced cultures of Asia are, for the most part, phonetic, with logical connections between spelling and pronunciation. So D.C. is doing wisely to establish institutions of research for developing backward English language where now confusion reigns supreme.

In recent years, Indian missionaries have been invited in large numbers to open religious centers throughout the United States for teaching transcendental meditation to the pagan Westerners.

As for music, increasingly doors are being opened throughout the dark continent to receive great virtuosos like Ravi Shankar.

In 11th century England, with the coming of the Duke of Normandy and his cultured hosts, the arts, literature and music of the rustic Anglo-Saxons were tempered and polished. One would hope, likewise, that the influence of Indian musicians will provide what Bach and Bacharach failed to provide to mellow and refine "Rock Music" which would better be described as a confused jumble of harsh notes and screaming voices.

In America's pre-medieval years, in the times of the early settlers, her people enjoyed foods that were naturally grown. With the entry into her dark ages, she ignorantly bombarded and contaminated her crops with chemicals that left poisonous residues, bringing her people many hitherto unknown diseases.

The Asian countries have long enjoyed natural foods. With the dawn of America's rennaissance, young Americans are realizing the need to go back to growing foods naturally, an art their country lost during her dark ages.

Today, Huckleberry Finn would scarcely recognize his once-beautiful Mississippi. How he'd weep if he should see her loathsome, lifeless waters! The businessmen of America's dark ages have been indiscriminately polluting their country's air, land and water, interpreting wrongly the ideal of "freedom for all" laid down by their country's great founders in a more enlightened age.

With America's rebirth her people are beginning to realize that the basic test of freedom lies not in what they're free to do, but rather in what they're free not to do.

American import of Asian textiles is rapidly growing. This is, evidently, to clothe the merican females who seem to go with less and less with every passing year. The males seem to be using up most of the available clothing, leaving little for their weaker fellow beings.

In this, of course, they are only practicing the law of primeval times where might was right. However, the American female has hope now as oriental silks and satins are being brought in to meet the shortage.

It is also rumored that white females in increasing numbers are flocking together to fight what they call "male chauvinism" (which, incidentally, would be more logical spelt s-h-o-v-i-n-i-s-m) that they only of late have begun to realize they should not tolerate. They ought to take courage and look for inspiration and guidance to the Asian females who have long since attained equal social status with the males; enough even to become leaders of their countries in India and Ceylon.

So, right on, Shirley Chisholm! "You've come a long way, baby." You have more to go. But courage!—America's renaissance is here.

'WAIT FOR THE DRUM-ROLL . . .'

Letters To The Editor

Quality And Fairness Of Its Service

To The Editor:

As a concerned, registered voter and long time resident of Amherst, I must confess to you that I am ashamed of the Community Chest in this community, and send you the two pieces of this deduction card as token of my refusal to cooperate with such an organization. I expect that you will give my letter a courteous reading, as I read your brochure from cover to cover, and I hope that you will utilize my thoughts and suggestions toward making the "Community" chest more community-oriented.

Roughly speaking, the population of Amherst is composed of fifty percent males, and fifty percent females. Your brochure, and your organizational "aims," ignore this fact. For Amherst boys, you have listed three organizations and three monetary goals:

Amherst Boys' Club: $8,500

Amherst Committee for A.B.C. (A Better Chance): $7,000

Boy Scouts of America: $6,800

Certainly, these are admirable organizations and have useful aims. However, when the reader searches for similar attention and care given to Amherst girls, he searches in vain. Indeed, it would seem that the young girl population of Amherst is practically non-existent!

Western Massachusetts Girl Scout Council: $7,000

Amherst Girls' Club: $2,000

The ridiculous discrepancy in your worthy organization becomes even more obvious when one totals the figures:

Boys' TOTAL: $22,300

Girls' TOTAL: $9,000

It is not merely the monetary inequalities which call attention to the fact that young girls in Amherst are considered second-rate. It is also the "aims" of the various organizations involved, and the lack of certain other "aims." For example, in both the boys' and the girls' organizations, you express the desire to help the youngsters develop manual skills, and the desire to lead and to help. Although these are valuable and constructive aims, you neglect to acknowledge the fact that it is not only boys, but also girls, who may need a better chance. Certainly there are disadvantaged boys in Amherst who are long on talent but short on opportunity. Are there not disadvantaged girls? Or don't the disadvantaged girls count?

Apparently, the Amherst Community Chest has not heard that young girls get pregnant out of wedlock and have nowhere to turn...that young girls are beaten and abused as are young boys by parents who have problems, and have nowhere to turn...that Black and Indian and Chicano girls are prejudiced against, as are boys, and have nowhere to turn...-WHY hasn't the Amherst Community Chest provided them with somewhere to turn to?

The rest of your services, including Camp Anderson, Association for Retarded Children, Children's Services, and Children's Aid, hopefully "protect (ALL) those who can't protect themselves," and hopefully Amherst citizens are sister's keepers as well as "brother's keepers." This, I cannot say. Only Amherst can show this in the quality and fairness of its services.

Perhaps, with a great deal of work and thoughtfulness, Amherst town fathers will begin to make their community less hypocritical. Perhaps, in future years, Amherst girls won't be second class, and Amherst women will be proud of their community. I must say, I for one am not.

Waited Too Long

To The Editor:

In 1970, I sent all the Senators and Representatives a copy of my May 20, 1970 letter addressed to Nixon's psychiatrist, Dr. Arnold A. Hutschnecker. Within a week after my letter, the good doctor went from New York to Washington, so I was told, and Nixon was sent to California. We were trying Manson for murder in California. This mental case came out on television while the trial was in progress and said "Manson is guilty." He screwed up the whole judicial system. A mistrial wasn't called. They couldn't get a jury that wouldn't have been effected by this man's statement.

A mental case will go off half-cocked, and it could happen at any time. The escalation of the war in May of 1970 when Nixon moved into Cambodia with the military is an example. Secretary of State William Roger's face must have been red at that time, as he had been saying publicly and in print that Mr. Nixon is bringing them out like he said he would and there will be no escalation.

Going down to that monument at 5 A.M. to be with those protesters in 1970 is another example -- he is President of the United States. Certainly that wasn't normal. The 1 A.M. telephone call to Shula, coach of the Miami Dolphins, to tell the coach how to run a play against the Dallas Cowboys displayed mental weakness. The Dallas Cowboys are part of America also.

Time and space are too short for me to give you many other reasons to bear out my thinking as to this man's mental inferiority. Certainly he didn't know the answer to the Vietnam war. He wanted to be President and getting it any way he could was his goal.

Today, in less than 4 years since he took office, we are almost 100 billion dollars more in debt under his administration. Thousands more of our fine young men have died in the Vietnam slaughterhouse. Where is our wisdom, if this man continues in office. To me, Hitler got away with murder and many of his associates praised him "Heil, Hitler!" Wake up! Our country is facing the same peril faced in Germany.

One morning on the farm my father said, "Son, do the most important thing first today, and then the next most important thing, etc. You will never get everything done today but you will have done the most important things." Today, the most important thing is the Vietnam war. We have waited too long already.

Nixon will never get my vote. To me, he is the worst example of a president we have ever had, and when you replace the worst, You Can't Make Much Of A Mistake.

Consistent Expressions

Board of Selectmen
Town Hall
Amherst, Massachusetts 01002

Dear Selectmen:

The Amherst Democratic Town Committee at its regular October meeting, Thursday, unanimously voted to decline the offer of the Board of Selectmen to us to visually defile the borders of our Town Common and reduce available parking facilities downtown.

Consistent with past expressions of some members of your board, which were recalled to us ("one sign per candidate", "no more than five signs per candidate", "no visual pollution by proliferation", and comments of like tenor) we prefer to leave the Town Common and Center to the almost unsullied vista presently enjoyed.

The Committee determined that no more mischief will be caused by Democratic candidates placing garish signs in competition with our luxurious foliage nor will we escalate the presence of mobile homes in downtown parking areas. We do understand, however, our opposition's selection of mobile and transitory accommodations emblematic of a very bad and hopefully short fantasy.

The Amherst Democratic Town Committee further decided that it would not invade any downtown parking spaces at the Common or any other available space without compensation to the community.

We believe our actions are consistent with past views of Town Fathers and Mothers which oppose visual pollution and more congestion in Amherst.

The Commitee does hold the view, however, that the offices of political parties should be tastefully communicated to the public at large. We hereby petition this Board of Selectmen for permission to erect a tasteful sign of not more than ten (10) square feet of suitable colors bearing the legend "AMHERST DEMOCRATIC HEADQUARTERS" with an arrow to be located at the East Pleasant Street entrance to our headquarters. No candidates names or signs would be borne by the sign.

Racism Squared

To Yacundu Sukare:

My general feeling upon reading your article, "Very Heavy Games" was that a racist should not complain about the racism of others. It seems that unfortunately you are caught up in your own ethno-centric methodology.

There is no way in which I can really argue with you about Dr. Gage's appointment at this time, since you are apparently much better informed on this matter; but isn't it possible that Dr. Gage was picked over the other candidates (including Dr. Gourdet) on the basis of his being a person as opposed to the product of the dirty rotten filthy pinko racist system? Your own racist background allows you to (in a rhetorically beautiful way which I did admire) attribute the choice of Dr. Gage as the result of a master plan by Mr. Preston, without enough facts to really defend yourself. Yet you, in the same way our government supposedly suppresses and brainwashes people, would have people (including your brothers and sisters) believe something which is composed, in part, by your imagination and theories.

I will skip criticism on much of the rest of your article to center on a few other points.

The first point, and you may attribute this to my racism, is that you make an utterly ridiculous, preposterous, stupid statement "the only purpose the Italian language has served for minority peoples is its utilization as a tool of oppression against Third World peoples in America and around the globe." Then you continue and write about the exploitations of Mussolini. Here, in two sentences you are denying the validity and usefulness of all written culture and the entire history of the Italian people for every Third World person. Could this be because of your own racist tendencies? Let me briefly remind you of some Italian culture-Dante, Rossini DeVinci and how about Marconi, Galileo, etc. Even if these people are of no interest to you, you have no right to say that nothing that has ever been said, written, sung or thought in the Italian language has ever been of any use or interest to any Third World person! Being an Italian-American, I find it very ignorant of you to cast down an entire group of people merely because of one man (Mussolini). I would like to brag for pages about the Italian people but it probably would be of little interest to most people reading this.

Finally, are you implying that UMass. leaves holes in the road and doesn't light the streets in order to get at the cars of Third World people (perhaps UMass owns shares in the Parts Dept. of General Motors)? For your own peace of mind I hope you were not serious. I would like to honestly commend you for your action in trying to correct the many flagrant wrongs in our society. If more people were as interested as you, many more good things could be accomplished in our world with greater understanding. But please try to keep from dragging over-generalities and imaginings of the mind into your work.

To Make Us

To The Editor:

Last Thursday evening President Wood attended an informal discussion with students in the Sylvan Area. To my dismay I found that his statement on tenure and student participation in this process had been grossly misinterpreted and sensationalized by Collegian coverage (Friday, 10/13/72).

The question directed at Wood was, "Do you feel students should be involved in evaluating teachers at the University?"

Dr. Wood's response began by saying he felt that the student's voice was important in University affairs, "especially in matters of day-to-day living and teacher evaluation."

President Wood was very explicit in his suggestion as to the most effective means of student participation in the teacher evaluation process. He stated that most departments have personnel committees on which students have the opportunity to become involved with.

Criteria for teacher evaluation was also mentioned. The President stated that he felt there were essentially three main criteria on which evaluations should be based. They were: 1) teacher effectiveness, as opposed to teacher's personality or wit; 2) contribution to his field of endeavor or research; and 3) public service.

Finally, Dr. Wood said that this participation in the process should not be seen as student approval but as an equal opportunity of involvement in a process which closely effects students' daily lives.

DiGrazia Orders Probe Of Alleged Payoffs

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston police department has been told by its new commissioner to form a team to check reports 58 policemen were on alleged bookie's payoff list.

Robert J. diGrazia, at the annual conference of the International Association of Chiefs of Police in Salt Lake City, said he would supervise the probe after he officially begins work Nov. 15.

"I've talked with them as to how we can proceed," he said. Supt. James L. Buchanan is to choose the men who will investigate.

Police reportedly found the list of names during a raid on an alleged bookie operation in Boston's West Roxbury section last spring.

Dist. Atty. Garrett H. Byrne turned over a copy of the list to department officials.

Byrne's aides said the district attorney felt police administrators should decide if those named-eight superior officers and 50 lower-ranking men-should be suspended during the probel.

BACK TO NOV. 11

GREENFIELD (AP) - Greenfield veterans are organizing a boycott of the Monday, Oct. 23, observance of Veterans Day.

Edward Horton, vice president of the Greenfield Patriotic Society, Tuesday urged all veterans to boycott the Monday observance and to join together in celebrating the holiday on "the rightful day-Nov. 11."

Horton said military units across New England have responded to the town's invitation to participate in a large military parade Satuday Nov. 11, including paratroopers, helicopters, and a 60-foot missile.

"We want to launch a national movement to restore Nov. 11 as the observance for which it was originally intended-Armistice Day and Veterans Day," said Horton. "The only way we can do this is to boycott this arbitrary date in October."

Veterans Day, Oct. 23, is a half holiday under Massachusetts law this year, enabling Bay State merchants to open their doors at 1 p.m.

HOFFA TO SPEAK

CAMBRIDGE (AP) - James R. Hoffa, former president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, will speak on "Prison Reform" at Harvard next Tuesday, the Harvard paw School Forum said yesterday.

Hoffa, 59, was paroled from a federal prison recently after serving time on a jury tampering conviction. He now lives in Detroit.

His talk will be part of a series of lectures and talks sponsored by the forum.

BOAT CRACKS

BOSTON (AP) - An investigation into last week's sinking of a boat off Martha's Vineyard, in which four members of one family drowned, revealed heavy seas forced open the boat's planking below the waterline.

All Mello, supervisor of the state Marine and Recreational Vehicles Division, said Monday he determined the cause after the 30-foot motorboat owned by George W. Jaeger of Oak Bluffs, Mass., had been raised.

Jaeger was the only family member able to swim to safety. His father and three sons drowned.

AN ARM RESTORED

BOSTON (AP) - Two major nerves have been joined in the last planned operation to restore usefulness to the arm of a Gloucester fisherman.

Joseph Brancaleone, 23, lost his right arm May 9 when he fell across a fast-moving cable on a family owned fishing boat. The boat was 190 miles at sea when the incident occurred.

Brancaleone was rushed to Massachusetts General Hospital where the severed limb was surgically restored.

Doctors at the hospital, where the latest operation was performed, said Monday it will be one to two years before it can be determined whether Brancaleone will have feeling or movement in the limb.

Members of the Brotherhood of Utility Workers of New England, Local 322, went out on strike at 7:30 a.m., setting up picket lines in Palmer, and sending pickets to the other Central Massachusetts offices, where union members in other locals honored the lines.

In all, 700 to 800 union employes were off the job according to Donald R. Tefft, assistant to the vice president of the company. Tefft said talks were being set up to negotiate the dispute.

Frank Zolli, manager of the Palmer office, said the unauthorized work stoppage resulted from the union's objection to six hour suspensions given six workers last Friday for allegedly failing to follow direct orders.

FIRE KILLS TWO

METHUEN (AP) - Two children died Tuesday when flames raced through their second-floor bedroom while their parents were away at work.

Police identified the victims as Dominic Sanchez, 3, and his sister, Lisa, 2, children of Mr. and Mrs. Dominic Sanchez.

Norma Clavio, 25, who was babysitting for the couple, suffered burns when she tried to rescue the children. She lives in apartment separated from the Sanchez' by a hallway.

She told police that the parents left for work at 6:30 a.m. She checked the children at 7 a.m. and again at 8, and they were asleep in their cribs.

When she went in again to check at 9 a.m., the apartment was filled with smoke, she said. She rushed to the bedroom, but told police that when she opened the door, she was driven back by a wall of flames.

4 Years Of Nixon Takes 'Kick' Out of Press

NEW YORK (LNS) - "Mr. Nixon approaches public life as if it were a succession of selling jobs. He resents asking questions..which call attention to the fact that whatever he is merchandizing at the moment may not be all that he says it is," commented political reporter William V. Shannon recently.

Shannon is certainly not the first person to notice that. But Nixon has been in politics so long that some people don't even realize that the New Nixon (now known as Richard M. President) is really the used car salesman, the wit-chhunter, Tricky Dick of the 1950's.

And Nixon is trying to keep it that way - especially since this year there are so many current shadows (like Vietnam, unemployment, the 5 or 6 scandals already associated with his administration) which tend to stalk him wherever he walks. So he has constructed a tightly controlled environment for himself. Nixon - "The President" - is mainly staying home this year, "fulfilling the responsibilities of his job." When he goes out, he only does so to the most carefully arranged gatherings - $1000 a plate dinners, Democrats for Nixon cocktail party at John Connally's ranch, a ceremony at the Statue of Liberty only accesible from New York by a ferry.

One political commentator called Nixon "The man in the glass booth" while another said he was "like a touring emperor" - of course, though, one with TV makeup. Yet while the campaign seems to emphasize the fact that he has become a collection of dots on a TV picture and a disembodied voice, who comes into your living room when he wants to, it's not as if this has happened overnight.

Nixon has a real respect for the use of the media. One of the first things he did when he entered office was to appoint a "Director of Communications" - a post that never existed before. The job has become one of supervising the Administration's relationship to all the media, going much farther than the Press Secretary, who merely puts out press releases and speaks for the President.

As Director of Communications, Nixon appointed Herbert Klein, a man with experience in the newspaper field. Klein was the editor of the San Diego Union - one of the most rightwing papers in the country. San Diego, you'll remember was the place where Nixon had another friend, millionaire C. Arnholt Smith. You can be sure Klein's papers didn't do much to uncover the scandals that C. Arnolt Smith was involved in, that Life magazine exposed at the time of the ITT—Dita Beard uproar.

H.R. "Bob" Haldeman, Nixon's chief of staff also has had experience with the media. According to Jack Anderson, "Most of the important campaign decisions have come through him...Haldeman issues political reports and coordinates campaign activities. It was Haldeman, for example who proposed that a special advertising agency be established to handle the President's campaign advertising. This unique outfit, known as the November group, was created for the sole purpose of reelecting Nixon. It is staffed with GOP-minded hucksters carefully recruited from as agencies all over the country."

It certainly is logical that Haldeman should be in such a position, since he's been an advertising man for over 20 years who has only taken time off from the giant J. Walter Thompson advertising agency to work for Nixon. As Anderson put it. "He has used his quick mind to sell bug killer, floor wax, Disneyland, Seven-Up - and, more recently, Richard Nixon."

According to Anderson, "Haldeman largely decides whom the President will see, who on the staff will be heard, what memorandum will make its way into the President's in-basket and who will be promoted." But he has other jobs too that more closely fit his occupation as PR man. During the days following the death of Mary Jo Kppechne in Ted Kennedy's car, Haldeman was calling up important reporters, urging them to keep up the pressure on Kennedy, an ever-present political rival for Nixon.

Haldeman isn't the only ex-PR man on Nixon's staff. Ron Ziegler, Nixon's press secretary, and more recently one of his many hard-hitting surrogates in the campaign trail also got his training at J. Walter Thompson, as well as Dwight Chapin who became Nixon's appointment secretary. John Erlichman, Nixon's special assistant on domestic matters (a domestic Henry Kissinger) was an old friend of Haldeman's at UCLA and came out of the same southern California right-wing atmosphere.

Another Nixon aide, Patrick Buchanan, whose title is Special Assistant to the President started working for him in 1966, monitoring newspapers and later TV, to give Nixon an idea of how he was getting across. When Nixon finally took over the White House in 1968, Buchanan moved in too. Since then Buchanan's role has expanded. He now has an assistant who oversees four other people in going through all the major network TV programs, the two wire services, 30 major daily newspapers and 30 weekly month magazines - all to see how Nixon and the administration are treated. For an administration which is always talking about budget cuts, it seems strange that Buchanan's office even has a machine to video tape public affairs shows.

Buchanan is now much more than the glorified paper clipper he started out as in 1966. He has become one of Nixon's major idealogues on the press in general as well as an advisor in other matters. (a strict catholic he agreed with Nixon's decision to take a strong anti-abortion stand as well as veto the day care legislation last winter. He also pushed to have Nixon veto more funds for public TV).

Buchanan's views on how Nixon is portrayed in the press: "My primary concern is that the President have the right of untrammeled communication with the American people. When that communication is completed, what he has had to say should not be immediately torn apart or broken down even before the American people have had a chance to make their own judgement about what he said."

"Now every American has a right to disagree with the President of the U.S. and to express publicly that disagreement. But the President of the U.S. has the right to communicate directly with the people who elected him and the people of this country have the right to make up their own minds and form their own opinions about a Presidential address without having a President's thought characterized through the prejudices of hostile critics before they can even be digested.

"When Winston Churchill rallied public opinion to stay the course against Hitler's Germany he didn't have to contend with a gaggle of commentators raising doubts about whether he was reading public opinion right or whether Britain had the stamina to see the war through.

"Greham's law seems to be operating in the network news. Bad news drives out good news. The irrational is more controversial than the rational. Concurrance can no longer complete with dissent."

–Spiro Agnew in his speech written by Presidential Aide Patrick Buchanan about TV, November 13, 1969, ten days after a Nixon speech on Vietnam and two days before the November 15th Moritorium.

media (seven days after his speech on TV he gave one on newspapers) are really hard to pin down in their significance. He criticized TV commentators for not being objective. He talked about how so many stations and newspapers were monopoly-controlled and didn't represent the viewpoints of most of the people in the country.

But with Agnew speeches, you have to read a little more into it. Yes, he talked about how certain papers--the NY Times and the Washington Post--are owned by big corporations. He didn't talk about the NY Daily News and the Chicago Tribune which are controlled by an even larger conglomerate and have a bigger readership.

He used TV commentators' analysis of Nixon's speech as a jumping off place (assisted by Dean Burch, the Goldwater Conservative who Nixon had just appointed to head the Federal Communications Commission, who requested transcripts of the commentaries right after Nixon's speech). He talked in both speeches about people he described as "deserters, disrupters of schools, marchers under flags and portraits of dictators, intimidators and harassers of professors" who the media, he thought, seemed too eager to cover. Two days later, the Moritorium, which drew the most people ever--over 500,000--to march on the White House against the war, was hardly covered in the press.

After Agnew's first speech, Herbert Klein said he agreed with Agnew's remarks and said that the criticism should be extended to newspapers as well (which Agnew did a week later). "If you look at the problems you have today and you fail to continue to examine them," Klein commented, "you do invite the government to come in. I would not like to see that happen."

More recently Cassie Mackin, an NBC correspondent did a little homework, "The president accuses McGovern of wanting to give those on welfare more than those who work, which is not true. The president says McGovern is calling for a "confiscation of wealth', which is not true." Before the program was over the White House was on the phone to the president of NBC. "She in effect called the president a liar," accused Kenneth W. Clawson, deputy Director of Communications. "We didn't ask that she be fired or removed from covering or reprimanded. We didn't ask anything. We just wanted to register our protest that she was inaccurate."

A New Kind of Education

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Most adults smugly feel that the education they got is better than the one their children are getting.

Since most of them have forgotten three-fourths of what they learned in school, that would be hard to prove.

But if the purpose of education is to prepare the student for life as it is, then all present educational systems should be scrapped and a new start made.

Here are suggested changes for such a program from a man somewhat disillusioned to find that the formal learning he received hardly qualified him to cope with the problems in living he ran up against later:

Except for students intending to specialize in certain fields, all advanced courses in science, mathematcis, art, music, rug weaving and square dancing would be dropped.

So would all ancinet or modern foreign languages. The only language studied would be the English language or, rather, the American version of it.

This would be divided into two branches: A, the writing and understanding of useful English, and B, the writing and understanding of Government English. A special course in how to solve crossword puzzles and acrostics would be presented. The writing of poetry would be allowed but not encouraged, and no prizes given for it.

After mastering his ABC's, the student would have no further dealings with arithmetic except in these general courses: how to figure out grocery store prices, how to make a bank account balance, how to balance an unbalanced family budget, and how to fill out income tax returns—local, state and national.

After a basic course in psychology, each male student would spend eight years studying how to get along with a woman, each female student would spend eight years studying how to get along with a man.

Since everything in modern life breaks down, every student would spend up to half his time in school learning how to fix things-from toilets to television sets, from zippers to governments.

There would be no essays written on subjects such as "The View from My Window", or "The Most Exciting Thing That Happened to Me During My Vacation". Instead, the students would concentrate on filling out forms of all kinds, and answering the silly questions on them. A prize would be given to the member of each class who managed to crowd the longest explanation into the shortest possible space.

In the last year at college, every student would also be required to take the following subjects-"How to Butter Up Anybody in Order to Get More Bread", "How to Drag Your Feet Successfully in Any Situation", and "How to Write a Job Career Resume Before You've Had Any Career to Speak of."

Wilkinson To Speak On 'Repressive Laws'

Frank Wilkinson, executive director of the National Committee Against Repressive Legislation (NCARL), will speak tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Mark's Meadow Auditorium at the School of Education.

NCARL is the former National Committee to Abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Wilkinson's topic will be "The Educational Institution and Civil Liberties". He will discuss the history and implications of loyalty oaths and implications of various "Nixon Court" decisions on civil liberties of students and faculty members.

The talk is sponsored by the Foundations Center of the School of Education.

Wilkinson has lectured throughout the country on topics related to the defense of First Amendment rights of freedom of speech and association. With the American Civil Liberties Union, NCARL has concentrated on a campaign to abolish the house Internal Securities Committee. Other legislative goals of NCARL include: repeal of the Subversive Activities Act, the Anti-Riot Act of 1968; and sections of the DC Crime Act, the Organized Crime Act of 1970, and the Omnibus Crime and Safe Streets Act of 1968.

Poli-Sci Career Night At Thompson

A "Career Night" for political science majors will be Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m. in Thompson 106.

The more than 600 political science majors will have an opportunity to hear the faculty advisers of the department explore such areas as government service, teaching and graduate study.

Professor Patrick Eagan, organizer of the conference, said that in addition to the presentations to be made in particular career areas, ample opportunity will be given to ask questions about any area. In response to an inquiry as to whether underclass persons could benefit from the meeting, he strongly urged both under and upper class persons to attend. "In view of the competition for spaces in grad schools and government service," he said, "a student can not begin planning too early for his post graduation work."

A variety of literature will also be available.

THE LIGHTS ARE ON...well, sometimes. New globes atop cement standards are lighting up the central campus area near the Student Union and Campus Center. Turned on a few days ago for the first time, they lighted for the first time the dark walkway beside Machmer Hall and the area around the Campus Center Garage. But last night, it was back to moonlight. (MDC Photo by Frank Morra)

Baha'i Opens Center

One of the fastest growing religious bodies in the world, Baha'i bases its tenents on social and racial equality, honors the teachings of other religions and has as its goal the unificiation of all mankind with a new world order. The Baha'i faith is independent and is based on the writings of Baha'u'llah. It was established in 1863.

The faith, since its inception, has spread from a prison cell, in a Garden near Bagdhad to 317 countries and territories. It has adherants residing in more than 46,700 localities. Over 1,126 tribes and cultural groups are represented and its literature has been translated into 434 languages.

The logic underlying the Baha'i belief in the unity of religions is the unity of God's Manifestations, or Messengers. Throughout humanity's evolution, God has chosen individuals like Moses, Christ, Buddha, Krishna and Muhammed to teach basic truths which have guided the development of individual behavior and civilization as a whole. Baha'i followers believe this evolution has brought us to the threshold of a new era at which we now stand. Baha'is believe that divine revelation of truth has never ended, and never will end. They have found Baha'u'llah the Great Teacher for this new era, the One promised by all past Messengers.

Free literature and information on Baha'i is available for those who drop by the Campus Center, Rooms 805 or 811, any Wednesday at 8 p.m. for the rest of this semester.

New Majors Offered

The Board of Trustees has approved new interdisciplinary and interdepartmental majors in Judaic Studies and in Near Eastern Studies.

The Judaic Studies major deals with the history and experiences of the Jewish people from earliest times down to the present day and includes Jewish religion, history, literature, philosophy and languages as well as sociological and anthropological studies of Jewish culture and experience. The major consists of 24 upper level credits selected from an approved list of Judaic Studies courses. A year-long course that surveys the entire history of the Jewish people is required, as are also three years or the equivalent of study of Hebrew or Yiddish language and literature.

The Near Eastern Studies major deals with the cultures, civilizations and nations in the Near or Middle East from earliest times down to the present, and includes courses in history, art, languages, literatures, philosophy, religion, sociology, anthropology and political theory. The Near Eastern Studies major also consists of 24 upper level credits selected from an approved list of Near Eastern Studies courses. A year-long course that surveys the entire history of the Near East from the Sumerians to the Six Days War is required, as are also three years or the equivalent study or Arabic or Hebrew language and literature.

The Judaic Studies Major is administered by an interdepartmental committee consisting of Professor Gilbert Lawall (Classics), Chairman, and Professors Joel Halpern (Anthropology) and Robert Rothstein (Slavic Languages and Literatures).

The Near Eastern Studies Major is administered by an interdepartmental committee consisting of Prof. Lawall, Chairman, and Profs. David Biddle (History) and Walter Denny (Art). Further information about either major may be obtained from any member of the committees or from the Classics Office, Herter 537 (telephone 545-0512).

Volunteers Needed At Detention Ctr.

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension will conduct an organizational meeting in Campus Center, Room 174 tonight. The purpose of the meeting is to tighten up one of the volunteer efforts-planning and carrying through programs at the Westfield Detention Center.

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension also coordinates a volunteer parole program in Holyoke, but the meeting tonight is geared at getting a group of students to defelop planned activities at Westfield.

Being considered is a Halloween party for the children, said a JOE news release;"It is an obvious start for any student group but what is carried off at the Detention Center with kids can come out of anybody's bag of tricks. The key part of this part of JOE is to do things that are special for the kids on a regular basis.

"At the first suggestion of this particular type of volunteer work, an interested volunteer might react in a negative or disinterested way. However, these planned and eventful activities as perceived by the kids at Westfield can be a tremendous help to the staff at Westfield.

"The main goal of the staff is to work for the kid near his own community. Keeping the youths at Westfield and not sending them away to other parts of the state, away from home or familiar surroundings, means that the Detention Center is often overcrowded. Add this to the natural high energy levels of teenagers and you end up with a tense situation.

"However, the tense situation is not the real problem as is the public's concern over the issue of locking up juvenile delinquents. Delinquents should and have been locked up, punished for their wrongdoings. Letting them out into the community to work in alternative situations to better themselves is new to the public and therefore threatening. What makes the tense situation within the building bad and the need for activities for the kids great is the fact that one can rationalize the continued incarceration of youth if they remain rebellious in society's jails. This assumes that jails are good.

"Therefore, if you are interested in working with kids and planned group activities, please come to tonight's meeting. You will be making the handling of kids easier for staff by finding ways to divert youthful evergy and, more importantly, you will be working for reform in our juvenile correctional institutions," the release concluded.

Coxe Piano Recital

Nigel Coxe, pianist, will give a recital tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, as part of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst music department Faculty Recital Series.

The program will include sonatas by Mozart and Chopin, and works by Messiaen and Liszt.

In the summer, Mr. Coxe's concertizing in England included several programs for the BBC in London, some of which are part of the BBC's current series of the complete Scarlatti Sonatas.

The Story On "What's The Story"

In the natural course of a student's matriculation here at the University he will inevitably run into a problem of communication. Oftentimes finding a solution or answer to a problem involves a process which may eclipse the original problem and become a riddle in itself. Many a hapless student has wandered aimlessly through the bureaucratic maze seeking truth but finding only what it feels like to be a pinball, bouncing from one building or department to the next.

Realizing the frustration and red tape often involved in selecting the proper channel for a problem or question to be aired the staff of the Daily Collegian is introducing a column called What's the Story designed to bring the student's questions on any policy or problem encountered at the University to the right pair of ears. Not only that but it will also publish the question with the answer so that other readers may benefit by the information.

The column is made possible by the volunteered efforts of Jay Savereid the University Ombudsman and other administrative members such as Mr. Robert Brooks at Whitmore, who may be called upon to search out the answer to student questions and the reasons behind the answer. The obvious benefits of such a column would include: providing the student with a relatively sure and hassle-free (let your fingers do the walking) means of reaching the right person to hear and answer this query; a greater knowledge of the behind-the-scenes reasons why a policy (which may on the surface seem inane) exists; and perhaps most importantly this open forum may lead to reform of a policy which was inane afterall. For example, some of the questions which the column can handle might resemble ones which have come up in the past, such as, "Why do you need eight authorized signatures to withdraw from school?" (the requirement has since been reduced to three.) or "Why haven't promised basketball courts been installed in Southwest?"

Students are urged to make use of this handy column, which probably will be appearing weekly, depending on the amount of questions submitted. You have a question - don't you? If you do, write it down on anything and mail or bring it to the Collegian office at the Student Union. Address questions to What's the Story?

NEW! ENTERTAINMENT IN THE LOUNGE

Last Roundup For 'Bonanza'?

NEW YORK (AP) — The national Nielsen television ratings for last week are in and they show continued woe for NBC's durable "Bonanza." The program was smote by CBS' "Maude" for the third straight week.

The venerable NBC Western began its 14th season last month on a bright note. It came in fourth in the national ratings and was seen in an estimated 16.2 million households. But then it faltered.

"Maude" picked up steam the next week and the estimated number of households watching the Cartwrights dropped by nearly five million. It dropped "Bonanza" to 39th place in the week's national rankings.

Another 842,000 households apparently defected from the show the following week, according to Nielsen figures.

"Bonanza" registered a mild comeback last week when it was seen in nearly 11.5 million U.S. homes, according to rating estimates, but this was a far cry from the days of the show's peak popularity.

"Maude", who started strong, still is. Her television debut ranked 11th nationally and she has yet to drop out of the 20 top-rated entertainment shows, according to the Nielsen estimates.

Does this mean the men of the Ponderosa family are heading for the last roundup? Not necessarily. "Bonanza" always can be moved to new hour and evening where the competition isn't so stiff.

But regardless of whether it stays put or backs away, a critical factor in its continued life will be its "share of audience."

That's the estimated percentage of how many television sets in use around the nation are turned to a given show at a given time.

The national "share" helps advertisers and networks measure how competing shows are doing-as in the case of "Bonanza", "Maude" and ABC's "Temperatures Rising" on Tuesday night.

"Maude" has gotten the largest share for the past three weeks. But NBC and "Bonanza" advertisers still could decide that their second-place share contains enough viewers to keep the show rolling on and on.

One show that is causing no worry-at least for CBS-is "Bridget Loves Bernie". It hasn't dropped below sixth place in the national Nielsen standings since its debut on Sept. 16.

The show is good, but it also gets a lot of help from the fact that it appears on Saturday night between "All in the Family" and "The Mary Tyler Moore Show". In that time slot, even a rerun of the world chess championships could make it.

Overall, there weren't any surprises in the national ratings for the fourth week of the new season. "All in the Family" and ABC's "Marcus Welby" continued to get high marks, coming in first and third, respectively.

Bob Hope's first NBC special of the season ranked second in the standings and was seen in an estimated 20.8 million homes.

Loretta Lynn Best In Biz

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Loretta Lynn gazed at the Grand Ole Opry audience and, with a proud smile and a southern drawl, told them, "When you're lookin' at me, you're lookin' at country."

And by the time country music's sixth annual awards show ended Monday night, Miss Lynn had walked off stage with three top honors, including entertainer of the year and female vocalist of the year.

She became the first woman ever honored with the Country Music Association's entertainer of the year accolade. When asked if her honors represented a victory for women's liberation, the striking brunette said:

A coal miner's daughter from Kentucky, Miss Lynn, 36, entered country music 10 years ago. Her last CMA award was in 1967, as top female vocalist.

The third award for Miss Lynn was presented to her and singing partner Conway Twitty for best duo of the year.

Top male vocalist was black artist Charley Pride, 34, a former professional baseball player from Mississippi. Last year, Pride attained national acclaim when he captured the vocalist and the entertainer of the year award, the first black to do so.

Donna Fargo, a former Los Angeles high school teacher and a new face on the country music scene, copped the best single of the year for "Happiest Girl in the Whole USA." She sang the song for the Opryhouse crowd on live nationwide television.

A former entertainer of the year and top male vocalist in 1970, Merle Haggard of Bakersfield, Calif., won best album for "Let Me Tell You About A Song."

For the fourth consecutive year, Kenny Davis and the Nashville Brass, captured best instrumental group. Best instrumentalist was harmonica player Charlie McCoy. And best vocal group was the Statler Brothers.

Top song of the year was "Easy Loving" by Freddie Hart.

Named to the CMA's Hall of Fame was former two-time Louisiana Gov. Jimmie Davis, who drew the evening's only standing ovation. Davis, writer of over 300 songs, gained prominence for "You Are My Sunshine."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

When selecting a product, Aries seeks durability. The native of this zodiacal sign desires simplicity. The Aries person is willing to pioneer, to strive for the new and to discard the outmoded. Aries is the inventor, independent and original. This is the natural first sign of the zodiac, associated with the head, related to number 9 and to the planet Mars. Aries harmonizes with Gemini, Leo and Sagittarius, is drawn to Libra and enjoys arranging money transactions with Taurus. Aries should exercise caution in dealing with Cancer and Capricorn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Not easy to keep secrets. Yet, a certain amount of discretion now is necessary for your general welfare. Sagittarian expresses curiosity. Be frank, but keep something in reserve. Clandestine meeting may be on agenda.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check apparent minor matters. Dig for information. Obtain hint from Aries message. Friend may complain about ailment. Be interested, but don't fall for typical sob story. Aid those willing to help themselves.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Sense of perception is heightened. You find answers. Your ability to investigate comes to fore. Virgo is involved. There can be constructive changes. Contract, agreement has loophole. You'll discover it!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Home, family affairs occupy important position. But your thoughts are "at a distance." You strive to get solid footing for leap into future. Status quo no longer satisfies. You will make the change.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are not seeing too clearly. Emphasis is on romantic notions. Positive thinking is fine-but direct action actually gets results. Pisces individual may be whispering sweet nothings. Don't believe everything.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Study Leo message. You may be telling too much. Key is to also gather information. Be especially wary where contracts are concerned. Don't be in a hurry to commit yourself to one course. Look around. Patience is your ally.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish what you start. Overcome temptation to skip essentials. Neighbors seem filled with misinformation. Be a pleasant listener but sift for truth. Some are convinced they can take advantage of you. Protect self.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stress confidence, originality. Imprint your own style. Creative endeavors are favored. Don't lend money. Deception could exist in financial area. Young person is persuasive. Be fair but hold line on budget.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Aura of glamor exists. Take special care with apparel. Avoid the obvious in both dress and actions. Hunch pays off-you penetrate mystery. Those who were indifferent are apt now to sit up and take notice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You change routine. Messages are dispatched and answered. Ideas are evaluated. You are more active than usual. Check directions, reservations. Sagittarian can aid. Don't let pride stand in way of progress.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Tear down if necessary. Be willing to remodel, to rebuild. Money and promises don't blend. Be realistic. Protect assets. Take inventory. Find out what's coming in, what is being dispersed. Avoid loss through carelessness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be independent, confident. One in authority is uncertain. You get what you want through series of judicious calls, inquiries. Don't wait to be told. Instead, be a self-starter. Gemini and Virgo could be involved.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you will travel, make changes in December and have exciting relationships. You can be forceful. You know what you want and are willing to go after it. Confusion clouds will settle. In November, you are on more solid ground. For remainder of October, analyze social and business contacts.

Colts Rustle

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Baltimore Colts accepted blame Tuesday for their 1-4 record and defended fired coach Don McCafferty, but at the same time the players vowed to support his replacement, John Sandusky.

A public statement from the players was hardly more than a mild rebuke of management following a second team meeting in 16 hours. But signs of unrest remained.

McCafferty, who was with the Colts since 1959 and led them to the Super Bowl title in his 1970 rookie season as head coach, was fired Monday by General Manager Joe Thomas.

A brief statement mentioned McCafferty's record as head coach, and said the players felt he "has unjustly been made to bear the burden for our poor performance this year."

"He prepared us well, just as he has for 14 years," the players aid. "The drop off in execution in no way reflects a lack of preparation by him or his staff."

The statement was signed by a seven-man committee, including center Bill Curry whose personal views on the matter were much stronger than the team statement.

On Monday, he called the firing of McCafferty "a real injustice" and contended Thomas had not yet met all the players on the squad or learned all their names.

Curry reiterated his own stand Tuesday and said, "the problem is still a lack of communication. I think it would have been proper for the general manager to talk to the players after firing the head coach. But we haven't seen him yet."

Meanwhile, there were off-the-record comments from some of the veterans on the squad about the announcement by Thomas that young players would be used much more frequently the remainder of the season.

Finley Slips $s

OAKLAND (AP) - Oakland owner Charles O. Finley believes he has the right to sprinkle extra financial cheer around the locker room when his A's do heroic deeds.

"I don't give any bonuses, just raises," barked the controversial Oakland boss. "These are retroactive salary increases."

Finley slipped $5,000 to outfielder Joe Rudi for a homer and fantastic catch in the World Series' second game Sunday in Cincinnati. Reserve first baseman Mike Hegan and catcher Gene Tenace earned similar added payoffs.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced that he would look into Finley' spreading of greenbacks since there was a rule against giving performance bonuses.

Kuhn said in a prepared statement, "I have read Mr. Finley's statements regarding special payments to certain Oakland players. I have discussed the matter with Mr. Finley. I will have no statement to make regarding the matter until after the World Series. In the meantime, Mr. Finley has assured me the entire matter will be held in status quo."

The commissioner did not elaborate as to whether the "status quo" meant that Finley would continue paying his extra cash or what.

Reid Picked by AP

NEW YORK (AP) — "I can't believe this game-ball thing," Cincinnati's Mike Reid said. "It's the first time I ever got one."

To get it in a game like this...I'm at a loss for words."

Kansas City quarterback Len Dawson couldn't believe Reid, the Bengals' defensive tackle. Dawson was repeatedly at a loss for yards-and as a result, the Chiefs suffered a 23-16 loss.

And for his outstanding performance, Reid was selected Tuesday as The Associated Press Defensive Player of the Week in the National Football League.

THE AGONY OF DEFEAT is one thing that isn't showing on this BU football player's face. Our photographer caught this guy's expression late in the game on Saturday when BU was doomed. Wonder if he lost any sleep over the whole deal? (MDC photo by George Withers)

Carlton Wins

NEW YORK (AP) - Steve Carlton, 27-game winner for the lowly Philadelphia Phillies, was lopsided winner of the September poll for the S. Rae Hickok award, it was announced Tuesday.

The left-handed pitcher polled 275 points to 124 for runnerup Joe Namath, quarterback for pro football's New York Jets. Pitcher Luis Tiant of Boston was third with 82, followed by Chicago Cubs hurler Milt Pappas with 68.

Carlton became eligible for the annual Hickok award as professional athlete of the year, joining earlier monthly nominees Jerry West, A.J. Foyt, Bobby Orr, Jack Nicklaus twice, Wilt Chamberlain, Lee Trevino and Nate Colbert.

Up The Charles

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

This Sunday, beginning at noon, the largest regatta in the United States, The Head of the Charles, will take place along a three mile zig-zag upstream course in Cambridge, running from just below the Boston University bridge up to a parking area along Soldiers Field Road after the Eliot Bridge. Seventeen events, including over one thousand participants, highlight of the climax of fall rowing.

Uniqueness abounds at this regatta. First it allows schools, colleges and clubs to row against each other. Also, most types of rowing events are included. Both sweep oared shells (one oar per man) and scullers (two oars per man) will be featured.

Another thing which sets this regatta apart from others, is that the crews are racing against time rather than each other. A complex system, whereby each shell starts in ten second intervals and the results are recorded by a computer system, allows the huge numbers of crews to compete against each other. The crew with the best time in each each event is proclaimed the winner.

Besides the number of oars and men, the events are also broken down according to skill. This is determined by previous races and partly by age. Junior rowers are those who are less than eighteen years old. Intermediate rowers consist mostly of those who have not won a major event and who are older than eighteen (in other words, most collegiate rowers). The elite class is composed of the top rowers.

The Head of the Charles Regatta, which was started as an annual event in 1965 and patterned after the world famous "Head of the River" race in England, provides maximum viewing along its winding course. Much longer than the standard 2,000 meter course, the Charles provides greater excitement in that the endurance of the rowers and the steering ability of the coxswains is taxed greatly. More than one misguided shell has collided with a bridge support.

This is a chance for clubs to compete with colleges and for small budget schools to vie with large budget schools. The featured event will be the elite eight man with a coxswain. UMass Crew Coach Mike Vespoli will be rowing along with others from the Olympic Rowing Team in this event.

UMass last year entered six shells and the intermediate four had the best record, finishing ninth in a field of twenty. Each shell has to pay an entrance fee, so they are paying for the privilege of rowing.

The number of UMass shells entered and their approximate time on the water will appear in Friday's Collegian.

Garber's Gorillas?

By BILL KING

For anyone who has observed the interaction of athletes during a sports match, a beautiful panorama of fluid type motion unfolds before your very eyes. One such fluid type motion and exciting interaction of bodies can be seen as Garber's Gorillas play the gentle Indian game of lacrosse.

Just where did the phrase Gorilla originate in the UMie lacrosse dialog? It seems that All American Co-Captain Kevin O'Connor, of the 1969 squad, had a girl friend, later a wife, named Anne, who was an Art major. In an effort to promote lacrosse at UMass, Anne drew the now famous ape in a stickers suit and voila, the birth of Garber's Gorillas.

In his nineteenth season as head lacrosse coach, Richard Garber and his teams have posted a very successful 132-63-2 won-loss-tie record, including their fourth consecutive New England Championship. The Gorillas have a rather unique thing as far as athletics is concerned. "Lacrosse is a little different from football and basketball. We operate on a no cut system here which allows anyone who wants to play the opportunity to play either on the junior varsity or the varsity." In spite of the great overall record compiled by his teams, Coach Garber feels his team members are the most important aspect of coaching. Much of the success of the Gorillas can be attributed to the fantastic Esprit d'Corps the team has in spite of the difficult schedule of opponents.

Although Coach Garber and lacrosse success are synonymous at Massachusetts, there are others behind the scenes. Standing out in particular are Coach Garber's assistants, the hard charging J.V. leader, Russ Kidd and the gentle giant, Roger Farrar. Armed with such verbal comments as "clean house" and "clock someone", Coach Kid has been instrumental in developing players from the J.V. level to the varsity. "Riverboat Russ" views today's stickers as "good, dedicated, top drawer athletes" and is very proud to be part of the Gorilla pack. From Tufts, east, came Roger Farrar two years ago, to assume the role of assistant varsity coach. While doing grad work in Physical Education, Coach Farrar has given his time and talents to the Gorilla effort.

There is more to UMass lacrosse than the coaches and the philosophy. There are, of course, the players. They come to Minuteman land from all directions. They come in all shapes, sizes and abilities and are molded through endless hours of practice into a running, hitting, and scoring team. The conditioning drills that begin in the snow on Washington's Birthday when lungs are filled with the cold, crisp, Amherst air continue till the last goal of the season is made. The players then backtrack to the direction from which they came to ponder the past season and await the next. After their tours at UMass are completed and graduation places them into society, many long hours and a lot of beer will be spent discussing the agonies and ecstasies of being one of Garber's Gorillas.

With sticks flashing and the towers behind, Garber's Gorillas scrimmage in the late afternoon. (MDC Photo by Mark Majeski)

The only power of the Reds so far, Johnny Bench, takes a practice swing. Due to the soggy field last night, the third game of the World Series was postponed until tonite. The Athletics lead in the Series, 2-0. (AP Wirephoto)

Rain, Hail; Series Soaked

OAKLAND (AP) — A torrential rain and hail storm that hit minutes before the scheduled start of play postponed the third game of the 1972 World Series between the Cincinnati Reds and Oakland A's last night.

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced the postponement 26 minutes after the storm hit and left the already soaked Oakland Coliseum field in unplayable condition.

Record rain that has struck Northern California for 10 consecutive days left the outfield soft and soggy even before Tuesday night's storm. A helicopter hovered over the outfield most of Tuesday, trying to dry the soaked field.

The rainout pushed the entire Series schedule back one day and eliminated the open travel day. Game 3 will be played Wednesday night and Game 4 Thursday night, both in Oakland and starting at 8:30 p.m., Eastern Daylight Time.

Friday, originally a travel date, will be used for Game 5 in Oakland, if needed. That game would be played at 4 p.m. EDT. Should the series need to return to Cincinnati for Games 6 and 7, they would be played as scheduled at 1 p.m., EDT, Saturday and Sunday.

The most rain-plagued series took place 10 years ago when the San Francisco Giants and New York Yankees had to wait out three days of rain in California to play Game 6. That series lasted 13 days-the longest in history.

Ironically, that siege of rain in 1962 was the worst experienced by the San Francisco-Oakland Bay area until this October.

Heavy rain fell Monday night over the area but Tuesday was clear up until game time. Then the storm hit with such suddenness that the formally dressed orchestra assembled in center field for pre-game entertainment was caught right in the middle of it.

The musicians scurried off the field as the groundskeepers started to cover it. Thunder roared in the background and soon the hailstones hit

Eagles Eye Strikes Again

By EARLE BARROLL

Boston College has done it again.

It seems that in the wake of an extremely tough football loss to nationally-ranked Air Force, 13-9, which this writer salutes as a very positive step for New England football, someone's typewriter went on a verbal rampage which has to reflect on the type of people B.C. has.

The very substance of this editorial paragraph that appeared in the student sports supplement The Eagle's Eye (October 17, 1972) is nothing new to anyone who has followed New England intercollegiate sports over the years.

But, before I get into this most recent uprising of Boston College sentiments, let me take you back to the fall of 1970. The football game is between UMass and B.C. And in the program for this game is a preview of the UMass basketball team.

The following editorial appeared in this very same B.C. supplement within the next week:

"Those of you who read the UMass game program must feel that our biggest score is yet to be settled with the Mass. Aggies. BC travels to Amherst for a game with the "Defending New England Champion" Redmen on February 9. That's quite a claim for a team that hasn't beaten BC since 1964. They ought to play a schedule of comparable toughness before making such self-proclamations. It'd be nice to see a large contingent of fans make the trip to UMass for that game to watch the Dalymen stick it to those bums, Erving and all."

On February 9 that article appeared on this very same page. That night some 5,000 plus UMies watched the Bums defeat the Dalymen, 85-77, in the most emotional basketball game that I've ever witnessed at the Cage.

Now the Eagles strike again with the very same slur:

"Will the New England sportswriters know what to do this week? Will they continue to hail the University of Massachusetts as the region's top football team or will they start to look at the results of records and rightfully tab Boston College as the cream of New England? We kind of doubt it though. The New England football poll is an absurdity anyway. You can't rank B.C. with small-time colleges that play football in NE. It looks like the Aggies will stay undefeated until their windup clash with BC up in Amherst."

It kind of has the same ring doesn't it?

It is also not of this writer's nature (and it shouldn't be of any collegiate sportswriter) to stoop to levels of this sort. All that we at UMass can get from this is heavy food for thought.

It's the type of verbiage though that transforms concrete locker room walls into dust.

Field Hockey Team Ties

By AVIS YUNI

It was the last 20 seconds that determined the 3-3 tie outcome of yesterday's game between the Girls Varsity Field Hockey Team and that of Southern Connecticut.

Until the last ten minutes of the game, the UMass team held a 2-0 lead over Southern Conn., with Wendy Alpaugh having scored both goals. However, in the last ten minutes the team got tired, said Coach Jane Farr, while their opponents "weren't tired and kept running. Once they went by us we just couldn't catch them," and they went on to get a 3-2 lead.

In the last 20 seconds of the game, the UMass defense intercepted a Southern Conn. pass and passed it to the forwards. They took it down and passed it to Wendy Small who hit it in to end the game with a 3-3 tie, making the record of the team 4 wins, 1 loss, and 1 tie.

When asked what they're going to do to avoid in the future, the problems that the team had in this game, Coach Farr replied that they're going to "work a little bit on conditioning before the next game and work on shooting for goals and see if they can't get the ball in the goal when they have the opportunities." In today's game the team had many oportunities to hit the ball for a goal but they just weren't successful with them.

In their last two games, the Varsity team beat both Bridgewater on Wednesday, October 11th and Northeastern on Saturday, October 14th.

Against Bridgewater, the score was 2-1 with Wendy Alpaugh scoring both goals. Coach Farr stated that against Bridgewater "the team really didn't look very sharp. I mean we won the ball game, but we didn't look very sharp."

However, against Northeastern Coach Farr said the team was "very sharp," beating them 6-2. Wendy Small scored the first goal and Wendy Alpaugh the other five. Coach Farr stated they "had a few weak moments like the times when they (Northeastern) scored the two goals but they didn't get down to our striking circle very often."

The five goals that Wendy Alpaugh scored Coach Farr attributed to a "Matter of good team play. The defense got the ball and passed it to the open person who happened to be Wendy. It wasn't that she just dominated the game."

The JV Girls Field Hockey Team is now 4 and 1 after their 3-0 win yesterday over Southern Conn. Sandy Read, Linda Lambdin, and Kathy O'Neil each scored one goal in the game in which Coach Farr said, "we just dominated the play. In the first half of the game, our goalie never touched the ball and in the second half she touched it two times."

Against Bridgewater the JV team lost 1-0. "They looked pretty good," Coach Farr stated, "but couldn't put the ball in the goal. We were stronger than they were but we couldn't get a goal."

However, against Northeastern, Coach Farr stated "we were just too strong. It was a very good game." The JV team beat Northeastern 5-0, with Linda Lambdin scoring all our goals. "It was just a good solid team effort" that got the goals Coach Farr stated.

Minutemen Have Last Laugh

Everyone kind of chuckled back on September 20th when Dick MacPherson closed out his remarks to the Varsity M Club by saying his football team was a good one, and it had a good offense and believe him they were going to play some exciting football.

After all, every coach looks at the upcoming season with hopes high and an undefeated redord. (0-0).

But "those who knew" had to chuckle. They'd been at the Cornell scrimmage. They'd seen the Collegian story and the headline that referred to the final 3-0 score as a baseball score.

3-0. Exciting football? About as exciting as watching a

Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Redwood grow. Offense? It looked to be about as explosive as a fly breaking wind.

After four games no one is chuckling at MacPherson and his Minutemen. The offense has been exciting, the defense effective. In fact, considering that the defense is laden with sophomores, the performance of that unit may be more remarkable than that of the offense.

But people are not talking about the defense, and defense, although it may win ball games, does not bring people into the stadium. And it seems that one thing this team must do is bring people into the stadium.

The last couple of years haven't been too bright for UMass football. In 1970, Vic Fusia's last year as coach, the then Redmen went 4-5 in an incredibly "blah" season. Last year, MacPherson's first, UMass had a record of 4-4-1, salvaging some light out of a horrendous start. But still, it wasn't good football to watch.

Maybe the bad taste of two mediocre seasons was what made so many chuckle when MacPherson said we might have some fun this year.

So what's happened? For one thing, they've won. In four games they've matched the victory total of the two previous years. Winning is always fun.

But the most fun of all has been the way they've won. They've won with field goals by Mark Palau and safeties by the defense. They've won on some old-fashioned hard-nosed running by Dick Cummings. But these are tried and true, time-honored ways of winning, essential because they are the backbone of a good football team. No team can win if it doesn't do the simple things right.

Most importantly, from the fans point of view, they've won the unconventional way, via options and sweeps and plays you and I used to use in our four-on-four tackle games in the backyard.

How many times have you seen a quarterback catch a touchdown pass? How many 80 yard punt returns do you see in a year? How often do you see a Steve Schubert running three end-arounds one week (beside making his normal quota of circus catches.) and coming back the next week to score one TD on a punt return, one TD on a fullback option pass, and one the conventional quarterback split end route?

How many backfields do you know of where the halfback and fullback can both throw the ball and figure on about an 80 per cent completion rate?

It's easy to lose a few faces in the fireworks, and those men who keep Peil Pennington healthy and those men who keep the opposition off the scoreboard are as much a part of a winning effort as the people who carry the ball over the goalline. So give them their credit.

Just hope that the Minutemen can keep playing fun football. They've never had to turn people away from that Stadium, and it might be kinda nice to see a "Sold Out" sign hanging from Wally Novak's office just once.

Stranger things have happened. I just might skip a hockey game to see this team.

Student Senate Plows Through Budget Changes

By BOB SCHEIER

In a meeting dominated by budget category changes, the Student Senate last night went through its entire agenda in a first semester meeting for the first time in four years.

Among the category changes approved were actions requested by the Collegian, the Senate Transit Service, Spectrum, and the Science Fiction Society.

The nomination of Julie Clark as the sixth undergraduate member of the Athletic Council was approved by the Senate.

Also approved were the nominations of Elliot Sherman to the Parking Council, Sandy Lederman and Daniel Sloser to the Appeals Board, Mike Gregory to the Master Planning Board, and David Booker, Bert Emmons, and Erica Sherman to the On-Campus Recruitment Board.

The Senate approved a $500 increase in the Collegian income due to increased advertising, and $700 in category changes for increased food expenditures.

Category changes for the Transit Service were approved after a report from the Financial Affairs Committee which committee chairman Paul Hamel called the group's budget "one of the screwiest I've ever seen."

Hamel was referring to a $250 uniform category and a uniform maintenance budget of $1,000. Hamel pointed out that uniforms for the Transit Service were overalls.

After lengthy debate, category changes were approved for Afro-Am, partly for $50 for support of two intra-mural bowling teams.

Senator Paul Doran said it set a bad precedent to start funding teams, and said if the Senate passed the category change "any dorm could ask us to fund them, too."

A motion by Nick Apostola, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee, to reaffirm an earlier Senate action calling for the abolishment of the foreign language requirement was passed unanimously.

Several minor changes made in the reorganization of the Student Union-Campus Center Governing (SUG) board were passed, and several others remain in a conference committee between the graduate and undergraduate senates.

After more lengthy debate, category changes were passed allowing WMUA to pay an air conditioner rental bill accumulated over the summer, and to establish an assistant engineer at the station.

The Science Fiction Society category change, removed it from spending rules required for any group allocated SATF (Student Activities Tax

Motions asking for feasibility studies on the incorporation of the Student Government Association, as well as the Student Senate Lecture Note and Auto Pool Services were passed.

The Services Committee was also charged with making a report on the University Towing Service by November 29.

Moves to study the possibility of locating a cafeteria in the present Goodell Library building when the library moves into the new tower, and an amendment to the judiciary act prohibiting a student senator from serving on the court were also passed.

A total of $650 in category changes for WTOY, the video-tape program, for the purchase of monitors and a telephone were approved, along with Action Lab category changes for $200.

Tom Merrigan, the co-chairman of the SWAP (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) program urged members of the Senate to participate in the program, to be held this year from November 17-19.

Belchertown Drive For Homes Fails

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

An effort by parents of Belchertown State School residents to obtain four homes on the grounds for use as rehabilitation units has been unsuccessful following a five-month campaign, according to the Belchertown Friends Association.

A building inspector for the Massachusetts Dept. of Public Safety ruled that the homes do not meet the necessary safety standards for children even though the homes are now occupied by families of top administrative staff members.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends Association, said the homes are now occupied by staff members who receive salaries ranging from $10,700 to $17,860 and pay a rental fee that is 40 years out of date.

Ricci said the steward whose salary is $17,800 is paying $54 per month rent for seven rooms while the head farmer whose salary is $10,800 is paying $58 per month rent for eight rooms.

The UMass professor said Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt is studying the situation and needs more information.

"Commissioner Greenblatt's expected response is translated as stalling, frustrating, and protecting the bureaucracy from those intruding parents," he said.

Violations cited by the building inspector included lack of fire stopping, emergency lights, exit lights; inadequate toilet facilities and ventilation; and a chimney that does not meet the necessary standards.

Ricci said if the "same standards" applied to all dormitories at Belchertown, all but one building, would fail to gain approval as residences for human beings.

Ricci is also the leading organizer of a class-action suit against the Dept. of Mental Health. The suit filed last February in U.S. District Court in Boston charges that the state has been negligent in the care of residents at the school.

Dr. Roland Nagle, who was superintendent of the school at the time of the inspector's report, said: "The infirmary has all kinds of safety violations for which they would close a private hospital or nursing home and the state okays that year after year.

"We have some 230 people there and there would be death on the second floor if we had a fire. We could never get them all out in time. But that passes inspection year after year."

In response to Ricci's proposal, Greenblatt said there was a lack of staff members to adequately man the homes, and raised the question of building safety.

Ricci said UMass graduate students could serve as house parents and would be compensated by receiving free room and board. He said less rigid safety standards will apply to the houses if the Friends Association is allowed to operate them. He added that the Amherst Junior Women's Club has given its support to the project.

Ricci said it is "hypocrisy of monumental proportions" when an inspector would report subsafety requirements despite the fact that one of the families now occupying one of the homes has seven children.

A five-month campaign by the Belchertown Friends Association to turn this home into a rehabilitation unit for residents of the Belchertown State School has been unsuccessful. This is one of four homes now occupied by families of top administrative staff members who pay a rental fee that is allegedly 40 years out of date. (MDC Photo by Robert Callahan)

Bromery: Office Of President Not Plush

By BILL MANBURG

Chancellor Randolph Bromery said yesterday that the University President's office in Boston is to the best of his knowledge not overly elaborate. Bromery said he believes the real controversy doesn't involve the price, but the autonomy of the president's office and the governor's office of finance and administration.

Speaking in a Collegian interview, Bromery also discussed the recent Student General Court decision upholding Third World Representation in the Student Senate, Governor Sargent's reorganization plans for higher education in the Commonwealth, and the University's budget.

Concerning the recent Student Judiciary decision to allow increased Third World representation in the Student Senate, Bromery stated that if an appeal is made to him, he will judge the facts of the case by the Senate's Constitution, and will make a judgment on fact of law.

On the governor's reorganization plans, Bromery said the Regent plan appears to be similar to California's system of higher education, in which the governor has much more power. Bromery questioned that higher education would best be served by local boards, as Massachusetts now has, or a Board of Regents picked by a governor.

The Chancellor also commented on "recent budget discussions, not budget controversies," between University officials and the governor's office. He pointed out that the University can be, and is being made, more efficient, but that annual total costs of the University due to inflation, costs of living raises, and merit raises, will go up, even as the costs to individual students goes down.

Bromery cautioned against overnight reforms. He said, "The University shouldn't innovate for the sake of innovation."

Wood Rebukes Sarge On Budget

By JAMES E. GOLD

UMass President Robert Wood declared yesterday that Governor Francis Sargent's proposed three-year degree program won't save any money over current operational procedures and may even end up costing more.

Speaking in a telephone press conference, Wood commented on other aspects of Sargent's reorganization plans for higher education, his new offices, the 1974 budget fight progress, and UMass-Boston governance.

Wood said he was "glad that the governor is interested" in higher education reform. He stated, "We're looking (at the position paper)" which was released Saturday, "to see how we stack up." He noted that the 1970 report of the Future of the University, a study commissioned by him, received no recognition by the governor.

At a meeting Saturday of the trustees from all the state's public higher educational institutions, Sargent revealed in a position paper and a speech what he called an "agenda for debate" for reforming higher education.

Wood, commenting on reorganization, said that he was opposed to the consolidation of the lay trustee boards. This was one of five alternatives outlined by Education Secretary Joseph Cronin at Saturday's state trustee conference.

Wood said he believes the boards do not consider themselves as taking part in partisan activities. He warned against placing them too much under the governor's control. He termed the trustee matter the "key" issue.

He also pointed out that Cronin has accepted the proposed fiscal 1974 budget in order to review it. This was the budget that had been turned back to the trustees for further cuts last month. They didn't cut it and gave it back to the governor's office.

When asked about the uproar over his new offices at Washington Mall in Boston, Wood replied, "any controversy is between the Attorney General's office and the comptroller's office."

The president's office recently moved into its new headquarters and is paying more in rent than the comptroller's office says is right. However, an opinion by Attorney General Robert Quinn's office said that under fiscal autonomy the University can have the state pay for the new office.

Wood said that this is the only office which met trustee specifications as determined two years ago.

Asked if more people are employed there than trustees had specified, Wood said that two vice presidential positions have not been filled and that the staff associates are "right on line." He added, "We are not endowed in any way with excess personnel."

Speaking on the 1974 budget, Wood said that any increases reflect commitments of four to five years ago. He said 44 per cent of the raise is due to opening new facilities, especially at Boston and Worcester, 20 percent is cost of living increases and 20 percent is for enrollment increases.

Wood said that he expected the tuition issue will probably be raised again. With the $50 per year increases instituted this year, he said he had hoped that the matter would not come up again so soon.

Howland To Investigate Grad. CC Fee

By BARBARA VOORHEES

The Graduate Student Senate has appointed Student Lawyer Dick Howland to investigate the legality of the current mandatory campus center fee for graduate students.

The motion to appoint Howland, who will be assisted in his investigation by several graduate students, was passed at Monday night's meeting of the Graduate Student Senate.

Currently, graduate students are charged a campus center fee of $31.25, the same as undergraduates. This money is used in paying the debt on the campus center building.

Vida Ross, President of the Graduate Student Senate, said that she felt this was illegal because, "The only real space that graduate students use in the campus center is the same as that used by the faculty who are not charged a campus center fee: The Blue Wall, The Hatch, the coffee shop, and the store. However, graduate students have only one office in the building while the rest of the office space is used by undergraduates."

Howland will report results of his investigation to the Graduate Student Senate on December 11.

Ross said that if the administration opposes the cancellation of the graduate student campus center fee, test cases of graduate students refusing to pay the fee will be used in January.

Also passed at the Monday night meeting was a motion to make the $3.00 Fine Arts fee mandatory for graduate students for the 1973-74 calendar year. The fee, which entitles the student to a discount on all Fine Arts Council productions was originally a voluntary one for grad students.

Language Board To Discuss Alternatives

By MARK VOGLER

The university's Foreign Language Review Board will convene this afternoon and tomorrow to discuss possible alternatives to the present language requirement as offered by the College of Arts and Sciences.

The Board plans to propose certain suggestions for the requirement because "it is evident that the current policy has proven to be unworkeable."

Eight members, two of whom are student representatives, presently comprise the review board which functions out of CASIAC.

Dean James Wozniak, Assistant Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts (CASIAC) and also a member of the review board, said in an interview yesterday that a permanent plan should result from the meetings and will be submitted to the College Faculty.

The faculty will then be asked to vote on the foreign language program in the near future, carefully considering other alternatives as well as the language review board's proposal.

Wozniak said that the Student Senate might possibly initiate legislative action considering the issue of foreign language, but he didn't view it as becoming a major issue.

"I'm sure that the language requirement will be hashed around by the senate and the student body. But I don't see it being dealt with primarily as a university issue. I view it more as a college issue.

"Afterall, the requirement isn't a university issue. It's rather a College of Arts and Sciences issue."

Although abolition of the language requirement or its retention are the primary courses to be considered, Wozniak suggested that other alternatives were more likely to arise.

According to Wozniak, "What is really being discussed are foreign language modifications–alternate programs for those students who have extreme difficulty in foreign language. We hope to come up with alternative programs for those students as a substitute for the requirement."

He said that he'd like to see Foreign Culture and Conceptional offerings (Linguistics, Semantics, History of Language, etc...) as definite alternatives.

Wozniak stated that the most recent modification of the foreign language requirement, the Pass-Fail option through all four levels of a language, "doesn't do anything."

"All it does is protect the student's grade quality average. It's not a very sound logic, and I don't have much faith in it. You might as well abolish grades."

Another matter that Wozniak said the review board would address itself to was the language waiver. He declared he was convinced that some of the students who seek waivers, are "con-artists" and that "they were trying to find the easy way out."

"It's hard to determine the con-artists from the sincere people," Wozniak commented. There's no viable test to determine as to whether a person has a mental block or just, for some reason, can't master a language. It's ambiguous."

Wozniak sees the big issue at the moment as being careful not to throw away the good points of foreign language study.

"There are currently no alternatives for students in the College of Arts and Sciences. There are no alternative degrees for students who have difficulty.

"Speaking for the board review members and myself, I hope that we arrive at the necessary alternatives, but not gut ones. They should be of academic value to those who take them."

Wilson: I Like Monsters

By WALTER LALIBERTE

Gahan Wilson, cartoonist for Playboy and National Lampoon, spoke to an overflow crowd last night at the Student Union Ballroom.

Wilson also demonstrated many of his works, often reading captions amid frequent bursts of applause and laughter from the audience.

Claiming "I drew my way through school bored silly with classes," Wilson said he has always been interested in drawing.

One of his earliest drawings he said, was a monster eating a city, a fact which rather upset his mother.

He explained his infatuation with grotesque figures by saying, "I demonstrated affection for monsters. I do like them."

The creatures flow from his unconciousness he later added.

In showing the horrors of modern life, Mr. Wilson compared Frankenstein to a modern corporation. "What would you do if you were Dr. Frankenstein and you were in competition with r and d departments of various monolithic corporations?", he added.

Much of the displayed art concerned social problems. His attention was focused towards ecology, the "obscenities of drug store ads", unthinking American tourists, and the difficulties of growing up in America.

He said that "the most macabre event of modern life is man's destruction of his own planet."

Mr. Wilson's early career saw him leave Chicago for work in New York, where his first published works appeared in Fantastic and Amazing magazines.

A lucky break gave Wilson a position with Collier's magazine for two years before that publication folded.

From there it was on to Trump, "a super-slicko magazine", and finally, Playboy, but not before an unsuccessful attempt at a "respectable" job with an advertising agency.

His other activities include recent works for National Lampoon, "a brave and screwy bunch", and the Review of Macabre and Fantastic Literature.

In the future, Mr. Wilson looks forward to making a film. Various opportunities are available to him he said, but he refused to elaborate.

After the formal speech he added that he has just finished a book, Harry, the Fat Bear's Spy, which will be published in the spring.

In opening remarks, he liken the Campus Center Garage to "a set from a James Bond movie. He described it as "slick, modern, cold, but efficient."

In a different light, he called the Playboy mansion a fantastic place where one can only tell time by the appearance of the "bunnies."

Holt Urges McG People To Keep In Touch

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

John Holt, leading figure in education and author of How Children Fail spoke last night to an informal meeting of Students for McGovern.

"I would urge that win or lose, McGovern supporters who come in contact with each other continue to stay in touch," Holt said. "This is an organization important to keep alive."

"I want to explain why it is worth putting as much time, energy and money as you can afford into this campaign," he told the McGovernites. "The election has not taken place yet. Misleading polls can suddenly change. The vote is secret but the polls are not."

Holt said, "Nixon is saying to the voters, 'there will be no further attempts by the federal government to end racial discrimination.' The reason I think this is unstable is that it's still possible to get a lot of people to understand what the Republican administration means as far as jobs are concerned."

Holt called the replacement of unionized employees in New York City by welfare recipients "the greatest invention since the wheel as far as Nixon's millionaire supporters are concerned. Welfare recipients are obliged to work for $1.20 an hour in place of a man working for $4 to $5 an hour."

"If McGovern loses," Holt said, "it is extraordinarily important how close the margin to winning is. If the margin is wide enough, Nixon and the people behind him will try a lot of things they won't try if the margin is narrow. The margin is a political signal showing how far right it is feasibly predictable to go."

"This election will have a great deal to do with the people who will be running in the next two years from now," Holt claimed. "It is also important by what it will tell Democrats about the campaign in 1976. If the Democrats lose badly a great number of people in the Democratic party will say 'We can't afford to stick ourselves with the peace vote in '76."

"We've got to try to reverse the losing psychology as much as possible," Holt concluded.

In The Nation And The World

SAIGON, Sept. 29-NOT OPTIMISTIC. South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, right, faces microphones during impromptu news conference in Saigon Friday. Serious-faced bodyguards are around him. Thieu said he wasn't optimistic about a peace settlement. Meanwhile, President Nixon is sending one of his special envoys to Saigon to give Thieu a full report on the secret peace negotiations in Paris. (AP)

Kissinger In Nam To Review Peace Terms

SAIGON (AP)-Henry A. Kissinger is in Saigon to review the status of Vietnamese peace negotiations with U.S. and South Vietnamese officials. The North Vietnamese say peace is no nearer despite his series of secret talks in Paris.

President Nixon's national security adviser arrived Wednesday night from Paris, where he had another secret meeting with the North Vietnamese on Tuesday. He will confer with President Nguyen Van Thieu on Thursday, the White House said.

In Paris, Nguyen Thanh Le, spokesman for the North Vietnamese delegation at the Paris peace talks, told reporters: "Up to now the Vietnamese problem is not yet settled."

Indicating no change in the Communist position, he added: "Up to today, Oct. 18, the Nixon Administration refuses to bring an end to this war of aggression, refuses to abandon the traitor Nguyen Van Thieu."

He refused to discuss the recent flurry of secret meetings between Kissinger and Xuan Thuy, head of the North Vietnamese delegation, and Le Duc Tho, politiburo member who has returned to Hanoi.

He declared that the best hope for peace would be President Nixon's acceptance of the Viet Cong peace plan, which calls for a U.S. pullout from South Vietnam and replacement of Thieu's regime by a tripartite provisional government.

There is speculation that the U.S. position is centered on working out a cease-fire arrangement that would result in the release of American prisoners of war and a political settlement that would not give the appearance of a sellout of Thieu by the Nixon administration.

Sources here speculated that Kissinger's mission in Saigon may be to convince Thieu of the necessity of some sort of coalition or dual government with the Viet Cong. Thieu has said repeatedly he never will accept a coalition government with the Viet Cong.

Kennedy Attacks Anti-Crime Efforts

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Wednesday Nixon Administration anti-crime efforts are inadequate and it has taken to doctoring FBI reports to hide the bad results.

Brooke Endorsed

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts Chapter of the Americans for Democratic Action, a liberal political organization, Wednesday endorsed the re-election bid of Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke.

Rumanian Vessel Boarded

BOSTON (AP)- A Coast Guard officer boarded a Rumanian fishing vessel Wednesday night about 14 miles south of Chappaquidick Island when it was determined the vessel was too close to the American 12-mile contiguous fishing zone, the Coast Guard said.

A spokesman said it had been determined during a two-hour surveillance, that the Rumanian vessel, the refrigerated transfer ship Polar II, had not actually crossed into the American zone.

Congress Adjourns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 92nd Congress finished its business and adjourned Wednesday night after two years of work highlighted by enactment of a $20-billion revenue-sharing bill, giving 18-year-olds the right to vote and a standoff on the Vietnam war.

Anxious congressmen adjourned and headed home for neglected re-election campaigns after overriding President Nixon's veto of a $24-billion water-cleanup bill and rejecting his $250-billion spending limit.

With the elections only three weeks away, many of the congressmen didn't wait around for Congress to quit.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., threatened at one point to snarl the adjournment rush by demanding a roll-call vote knowing a quorum of at least 51 senators couldn't be mustered for one.

More than two-thirds of the 533-member House had left town by the time, leaving the House without a quorum to act on the $6-billion highway bill, which also would have authorized $3.4 billion for mass transit.

The House adjourned at 8:47 p.m.

As the Congress rushed toward adjournment, the Senate and House rejected the spending ceiling despite Nixon's assertions that such action would place the blame for inflation and a future tax increase on Congress.

Both the Senate and House acted by voice vote.

The House originally voted to give the President unrestricted authority to trim the budget by $7 billion to meet the limit. The Senate had voted to prohibited cutting any one program more than 10 per cent.

Earlier, the House joined the Senate to enact the water-pollution control bill over the President's veto.

Nixon vetoed the $24-billion, three-year anti-pollution bill after calling it a "staggering, budget-wrecking" measure that included $18 billion more than he requested. The Senate overrode the veto 52 to 12 and the House 247 to 23.

US-Soviets Sign Trade Pact

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States and the Soviet Union Wednesday signed a breakthrough trade agreement designed to settle World War II lend-lease debts, flatten tariff barriers, grant credits and triple the volume of trade in the next three years.

Hailed by Secretary of State William P. Rogers as a step toward "creating a climate for peace," the agreement follows by five months President Nixon's Moscow summit meetings which set the negotiations in motion.

As outlined by administration spokesmen, the major provisions of the agreement include:

—Settlement for $722 million the Soviet debt of $11.1 billion and lend-lease aid extended by the United States during World War II.

—Granting of most-favored-nation treatment to the Soviet Union. If approved by Congress, this step would remove discriminatory trade barriers and put Moscow on the same footing as free world nations.

—Make the Soviet Union eligible for Export-Import Bank credits. These credits could be used by the Soviets to purchase products mentioned in the agreement, including machinery, plant equipment, agricultural goods, industrial products and consumer goods.

The United States will, in turn, import increased volumes of Soviet raw materials. The agreement states that the goal is to triple to a three-year total of $1.5 billion the volume of trade between the two countries.

Other provisions of the agreement call for each government to establish in the other's capital a commercial office, and clear the way for private firms to establish business facilities. The Soviets agreed to construct a large trade center in Moscow.

The portions of the agreement requiring congressional approval could trigger a major controversy on Capitol Hill. More than 70 senators are backing legislation to forbid granting of most-favored-nation treatment to any country charging excessive exit fees-a measure aimed directly at the Soviets' tax on Jewish emigres.

Asked about this, Rogers told a White House briefing that the Jewish exit tax question is being handled through diplomatic channels and that "quiet diplomacy holds out promise of great success."

Rogers said most Jewish leaders agree that this is the best method to follow in dealing with the issue.

Since Congress is on the verge of adjourning, the legislation to carry out the agreement won't be sent to Capitol Hill until January.

This means, said Secretary of Commerce Peter G. Peterson, that the administration has four months before it must squarely face any congressional opposition.

Although the agreement does not require Senate ratification as such, its provisions will not go into effect until Congress approves the most-favored-nation treatment.

Common Market Leaders Converge In Paris

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON

PARIS (AP)-Leaders of Europe's enlarged Common Market, assembling to map strategy for the world's biggest trading bloc, were reported split Wednesday over future links with the United States.

On the eve of their nine-nation summit conference, qualified diplomats said West Germany favors, France opposes and Britain is undecided about creating some sort of organ that would bind the old world to the new world.

The underlying idea, one informant explained, foresees close consultation and planning between Europeans and Americans to head off dangerous quarrels over trading, money and diplomatic policies.

Heavy Fog Hinders Boggs Search

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Heavy fog that prevented pilots from seeing the noses of their airplanes forced down most searchers Wednesday in their attempt to find the missing plane carrying House Democratic Leader Hale Boggs and three others.

Two Coast Guard helicopters were flying to an island logging camp 80 miles southwest of Juneau where loggers reported they heard a "loud booming sound" Monday afternoon, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

The loggers also said they heard a light aircraft just before the boom.

The plane disappeared Monday on a flight from Anchorage to Juneau.

About 500 miles northwest, a 10-man Army mountain rescue team was preparing to climb to the top of 2,500-foot Portage Pass to attempt the first visual search of that area. Planes have not been able to penetrate that area because of rain and fog.

Mrs. Boggs, who came to Elmendorf Air Force Base in Anchorage Wednesday, told a news conference she was "very hopeful" that her husband and the other three men aboard would be found alive.

"The brave men of the Air Force have done everything that is possible and will continue to do everything that is possible," she said.

Only six of the 46-aircraft armada participating in the search early Wednesday were still in the air Wednesday afternoon. All six aircraft dispatched from Juneau were forced down and pilots said they could not even see the noses of their planes.

The Coast Guard and the Air Force, coordinating in the search since the Cessna 310 disappeared Monday en route from Anchorage to Juneau, reported no further trace of possible emergency locater beacon signals picked up Tuesday by helicopter pilots over the rugged southewastern Alaska coast.

It was thought that the signals might have come from a beacon the aircraft was carrying, but Cmdr. Paul Breed of Coast Guard headquarters in Juneau cautioned against undue optimism. An Air Force spokesman mentioned that the signals could have come from other pilots "trying out" their locater beacons.

Air Force Maj. Ken Barker said the locater signals were the only clues along the 560-mile flight route.

Forty planes flew out of Anchorage under Air Force direction, and three planes and three helicopters flew out of Juneau.

With Boggs on the flight were Alaska's only congressman, Nick Begich, 40; Begich aide Russell Brown, 37; and Don E. Jonz, 38, the pilot. They left Anchorage Monday morning on a 3-1/2 hour flight to Juneau. Boggs was making campaign appearances for Begich.

Begich's wife and six children, all of school age, remained at their home in McLean, Va., "until there is something definite," a Begich aide said in Anchorage. Air Force officers said they would brief Mrs. Boggs on the progress of the search.

Three 180-foot Coast Guard cutters and a 95-foot patrol boat sailed from Juneau along the rugged southeastern Alaska coastline in a general search of beaches and waters. Because weather has hampered the aerial search, the Coast Guard said it was thought that surface vessels might provide better coverage.

"Search conditions could not be described with any degree of comprehensiveness as good," a Coast Guard spokesman said. The weather was described as "mottled with patches of fog and variable cloudiness."

The Air Force was frustrated but not discouraged by the conditions. "If more airplanes would do the job we would get more," said Maj. Baker. "But right now the problems is that with these weather conditions we can't even get one plane into some places."

He said the absence of further clues made the search "more frustrating."

Barker also acknowledged the possibility that the aircraft might not be found soon. He said lost planes in the rugged Alaska region sometimes are not discovered for years. But he said no one was discouraged.

F111 Missing On Viet Mission

SAIGON (AP) — A second swing-wing F111-the plane the Air Force claims is the safest in its supersonic arsenal-has vanished on a mission over North Vietnam, the U.S. Command reported Wednesday.

The plane disappeared from radar screens Tuesday after it descended for its radar-guided low-level target run, spokesmen said.

They added that both crewmen were missing but they had no comment on a North Vietnamese claim that an F111 had been shot down and the crewmen killed. A North Vietnamese spokesman in Paris identified the crewmen as James Hockrige and Graham Allen Upton.

Other F111s were continuing attacks against targets in North Vietnam, military spokesmen said.

Two squadrons of the controversial, $15 million jets have been operating out of Thailand for less than a month. The first sent into action disappeared on Sept. 28 and both crewmen are listed as missing.

That loss resulted in withdrawal of F111s from combat for six days of tests and evaluation.

The command also announced that an Air Force F4 Phantom crashed from unknown causes north of its base at Ubon, Thailand, on Wednesday as it was returning from North Vietnam. The two fliers were rescued by helicopter without injury.

Reported U.S. plane losses over the North during the enemy's current offensive now stand at 114-about one plane every 1-1/2 days. The U.S. Command lists 124 American fliers killed or captured during the period.

The bad weather season has held down large-unit military action in the northern part of South Vietnam, and only small, scattered actions were reported across the country Wednesday.

B52 bombers dumped 900 tons of bombs in a northern arc 25 to 50 miles from Saigon in an effort to thwart enemy attacks that have been moving toward the capital.

Lt. Gen. Nguyen Vaan Minh, commander of the Saigon military region, said the enemy had occupied 18 hamlets north of Saigon in a surge of attacks over the past two weeks. Three are contested and 15 retaken, he added.

Associated Press correspondent Richard Pyle reported after a flying tour of the area that numerous villages were in ruins from ground fighting and air strikes.

Watergate Trial Date Set

WASHINGTON (AP) - The trial of the seven men charged in connection with the break-in and alleged bugging of Democratic National Headquarters will start Nov. 15. The action Tuesday by Chief Judge John J. Sirica of the U.S. District Court sets a date eight days after the Nov. 7 presidential election, confirming earlier indications that a courtroom airing of the case would not come before the election.

Democrats have alleged that the bugging was planned by President Nixon's re-election organizers.

Sirica did not consult attorneys for either side before setting the date. He said he acted to comply with guidelines that call for holding trial within 60 days of the indictments, which were returned in this case on Sept. 15.

Defense attorneys have proposed Dec. 18, Jan. 8 or Jan. 22 for the t to start, saying the Nov. 15 date gives them too little time. They said they would appeal to seek a delay.

Elsewhere, The New York Times reported today that Donald H. Segretti, named in news reports as a key figure in efforts to sabotage Democratic political activities, has been linked with phone calls to the White House and a man indicted in the Watergate case.

The Times said it has learned that at least 28 calls were made to the White House, to the home of Dwight L. Chapin, an aide to President Nixon, and to the home and office of E. Howard Hunt Jr.

Hunt, a former White House consultant, has been indicted in connection with the break-in.

Some of the calls made last spring by the 31-year-old Segretti, an attorney, were made from his home telephone and others were charged to his credit card, the newspaper said.

Segretti has denied news reports concerning his involvement in an espionage campaign.

McGovern Raps Budget

DETROIT (AP) - Sen. George McGovern said Wednesday former President Dwight D. Eisenhower "must be stirring uneasily in his grave" because of President Nixon's military spending policies.

He said Nixon would leave the "bloated military budget" untouched and slash domestic programs to avoid increasing taxes.

The Democratic presidential nominee recalled Eisenhower's warning in 1961 to guard against unwarranted influence "by the military-industrial complex."

McGovern spoke to the Detroit Economic Club as House and Senate conferees in Washington decided to drop Nixon's request for authority to cut federal spending to $250 billion.

Earlier the Senate had agreed to the spending ceiling with strict limits on what Nixon could cut, but then rejected a House-Senate compromise that would have given Nixon a freer hand.

McGovern issued a statement saying the death of Nixon's request for a spending ceiling shows that "Congress has recognized that Mr. Nixon cannot be trusted with the power to allocate our scarce resources among competing national needs..."

He also repeated his feeling that under the Constitution the President should not be given any of Congress' spending powers.

McGovern cited Nixon's eleventh-hour veto late Tuesday of a $24.6-billion bill to clean up America's waterways as evidence the President would misuse any authority to cut spending.

"In his view cleaning up the environment must wait, while the money goes first to Gen. Thieu, to added military overkill and to tax breaks for the rich," McGovern said.

Congress overrode the veto Wednesday, brushing aside Nixon's contention that it would wreck the federal budget.

In his remarks to the Economic Club, McGovern said Nixon has "carried out a deliberate policy of putting people out of work in the name of combating inflation.

"And still, rising prices cut deeply into earnings, savings and retirement income."

McGovern said the budget ceiling would have been a "disaster."

"The human cost of the ceiling would be enormous," he added.

Vital domestic programs would have suffered at expense of the military, McGovern said-a charge he has leveled at the administration frequently, even when a spending ceiling was not at issue.

McGovern plans a nationwide television address on the economy Friday night. It will be one of at least five more national addresses before Nov. 7.

White House Denies Political Spying

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's chief spokesman Wednesday denied that the White House directed a campaign of political sabotage, spying and espionage against Democratic presidential candidates.

"If anyone had been involved in such activities," said press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, "they would not long be at the White House" because political sabotage is "something we don't condone and won't tolerate."

Newsmen asked if Chapin's office, like others in the White House kept a log on incoming calls. Ziegler replied he didn't know and "to my knowledge we have no such log."

Campaign '72

John B. Connally, the former secretary of the Treasury who now heads Democrats for Nixon, announces he will discuss issues on behalf of the Nixon campaign Friday night on national television Tuesday during a Washington news conference. Connally said he believes there's too much attention being paid to the sideshows and not enough to the real issues. (AP)

Ziegler's comments came after the New York Times joined the Washington Post and Time Magazine in publishing stories linking White House aide Dwight Chapin to a key figure in the reported sabotage campaign, California attorney Donald Segretti.

The Times said in Wednesday's editions that it had learned that at least 28 calls made from Segretti's home telephone and charged to his credit card were directed to the White House, Chapin's home, and to the home and office of E. Howard Hunt, Jr., a former White House consultant indicated in the June 17 break-in at Democratic National headquarters.

Earlier news reports said that Chapin and Hunt served as Washington contacts for Segretti, identified by the Post as an important operative in what it described as a campaign to disrupt and harass Democratic candidates.

Earlier in the week, Ziegler said he would not "dignify with comment stories based on hearsay, character assassination innuendo or guilt by association."

On Wednesday he repeated his charge that the stories were based on hearsay, then went on to assert that "no one in the White House directed activities of sabotage, spying, espionage..."

He refused to say whether the White House had investigated the reports of political sabotage. He said his denial was "an assertion" based on his knowledge of "what is tolerated or condoned in the White House."

Ziegler also repeated his previous statements that no one presently employed at the White House "had any involvement, awareness or association" with the break-in at Democratic headquarters in the Watergate complex.

After Wednesday's Times article, newsmen asked Ziegler whether Segretti had made calls to Chapin at the White House.

He responded that he had no way of knowing where the Times obtained its information and that "probably 3,000 phone calls are made in the White House every day....."

NE Government Passes Media Center Proposal

By STEVE RUGGLES

The Northeast Area Government passed Tuesday evening a proposal putting $860 into an Area Media Center.

Also authorized, were proposals concerning seven area colloquia, including bartending and a Red Cross safety course.

The Council approved $360 for darkroom equipment for the area Media Center located in Knowlton. The proposal was submitted by Ira Miller, who also asked $1,000 for working 25 hours a week teaching two colloquia and running the Media Center. The Council okayed $500 and to negotiate job specifications with Miller.

Bob Winfield, a doctoral candidate, has been given a contract to teach a colloquium; "Practicum in Self Education". This would be similar to independent study. Winfield will oversee learning through journals and personal interviews with his 25 students. He will receive $300.

Gordon Bennett, a professional bartender, is being paid $150 to teach a colloquium in "Bartending". A sum of $15 has been set aside for breakage fees.

The Northeast Area Government voted also to donate $100 to the Red Cross. From this will come $25-$50 for traveling expenses for the instructors. The remaining money is an outright donation to the Red Cross.

For a Basic Sewing colloquium, home-ec majors Pat Stone and Kathy Vorse will receive $50 each. Expenses for the course will total $35.

In other business, Area Director Steve Dimock spoke about the prospects for renovating Hamlin House in the Quad. The dorms in the Northeast and Central residential areas are the oldest on campus, he said, and several are in need of renovation. The two oldest dorms in the Quad, Thatcher and Lewis, were renovated within five years. Last year, Chadbourn in Central was redone; starting in January, Greenough will undergo renovation. Because of the tremendous cost involved in restoring these buildings, only one dorm is done per school year.

Dimock hopes that Hamlin will undergo refurbishing in January 1974. The question, Dimock stated, is what can be done with Hamlin until the time of renovation, and how will the dorm return to the Quad? Dimock asked for suggestions. At present, there are a number of University students being housed there because of lack of space elsewhere. The students there would like to stay together. In January, Greenough House students will live in Hamlin until their dorm is ready.

Area Government President, Dana Marchant, announced that the Northeast Area would have a representative on the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors. Anyone who would like to apply for this position should submit his name to the Area Director. The only requirement for this position, is that the applicant live in the Quad. In two weeks or so, a committee of Area Government members, area residents, and someone from the Area Student Affairs Office will make an appointment.

In final action, the government expressed it's support for a proposal in the Student Senate which says that the Student Senate Contingency Fund should go into a special Presidents' Fund. The Presidents of Area Governments would allocate the monies.

The Northeast Area Government will not meet next week. The next meeting will be held on Tuesday October 31.

McG Committee Prepares Finale

"Four Weekends to End the War" will be the theme of the final month's election push for the UMass McGovern for President Committee.

The Committee hopes to send a total of 1000 students to various districts in southern New England and eastern New York the three weekends before the November 7 election. The students will canvass neighborhoods, trying to reach as many people as possible, urging them to support the Democratic presidential candidate, Senator George McGovern.

The students will also distribute flyers for the Million Member Club, an honorary fund-raising organization of small contributors to the McGovern-Shriver campaign.

A coalition of faculty from the area colleges–Smith, Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke, Amherst, and UMass-have agreed to provide transportation for the students.

A spokesman for the faculty, Dr. Joseph Frank from the University, in urging faculty support for the campaign, said:

"McGovern isn't beaten yet, unless we are all lethargically resigned to four more years of Nixon."

Frank added that a McGovern administration would provide a "potentially better future for all of us."

Other activities planned by the UMass McGovern Committee are:

—A bake sale in the Campus Center concourse on Thursday, Oct. 19

—A kite flying festival by the campus pond on Oct. 23

—Canvassing of the UMass dormitories to encourage students to request absentee ballots if they are not voting locally

—A fund-raising Beatles movie on Oct. 26 in the Student Union Ballroom

Any person interested in providing transportation for the canvassers should contact Frank at 253-9848.

Any interested canvasser should contact UMass Canvassing Chairman, Jo Ann Dominick, at 546-7326, or 5-College Coordinator, Cele Gardner, at 584-6484.

Male Vasectomies Can Be Reversed

NEW YORK (AP)-The birth control surgery that makes men sterile can apparently be reversed so they could father babies again, a surgeon reported Wednesday.

The operation, known as vasectomy, cuts the tubes, the vas deferens, through which spermatozoa pass. Once performed, it has been considered to make men sterile forever.

But the tubes can be rejoined in surgery performed under a microscope, Dr. Julius H. Jacobson of Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York told a conference in Vienna, Austria.

The microscope vision makes the tiny severed tubes appear 25 times larger than they actually are, so the surgeon can sew the ends together again and make sure the tubes are open once more, he said.

Speaking to the International Symposium of Microsurgery, Dr. Jacobson said he has done the reversal operation on 19 men. Eighteen of them became able to produce motive or active sperm on ejaculation, he said. The other man had suffered damage to his testes during the vasectomy, and did not produce sperm.

All 19 had undergone vasectomies from two to 13 years earlier.

Dr. Jacobson said he knew of babies having been born in the families of four of the men on whom he operated. More may have been born, he said in an interview before leaving for Austria.

In 1970, some 750,000 American men had vasectomies, and there now are about 350 clinics or hospital facilities where vasectomies are being performed, says the Association for Voluntary Sterilization.

Vasectomy does not interfere with ability to have sexual relations. It simply means no sperm are ejaculated.

But some men may wish to have fertility restored if they decide they want more children, if their existing family is lost or if they remarry, Dr. Jacobson said.

More men might have vasectomies, a relatively simple, half-hour procedure done under local anesthetic if they knew fertility could be restored again, he added.

Dr. Jacobson said his restorative surgery takes about 1-1/2 hours, and is done under a general anesthetic.

One experimental method of reversing a vasectomy is to insert a microscopically small valve into the sperm-carrying tubes. The valve can be turned, by a surgeon, either to permit or prohibit passage of sperm. This valve technique now is being tested.

NERC 'Boon To Boondoggle'

(AP) - New England politicians' views of the New England Regional Commission run a spectrum from boon to boondoggle.

The thinking about the commission has resulted from a recent copyrighted series by The Boston Globe. The Globe dubbed the NERC "a classic do-nothing bureaucracy."

Its articles charged that the commission has spent $23 million since it was chartered in 1967 to combat economic problems, but so far has failed to produce one new company or new job.

The commission "has become a high-level pork barrel operation that has squandered millions of tax dollars on salaries, shelved studies and barren programs," the Globe said.

Stewart H. Lamprey, of Moultonboro, N.H., a former federal co-chairman of the NERC, says, "I think all of the regional commissions should be abandoned at this time."

Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis of Maine while not going quite that far, said recently that he believes the Appalacian Regional Commission is "the only top-notch regional commission functioning properly in the United States today."

However, Curtis also said he feels the commission has not been funded properly and said he believes it needs more money for more extensive projects.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts took a more centered approach to the commission is excellent," he said. "The difficulty is that there have been a great many studies undertaken and very little that we could see in the way of concrete results."

Tom Reardon, Sargent's press secretary, said the governor prefers not to voice his feelings on what direction the commission should take until its staff presents a complete report to the governors at their meeting in December. That report was requested at the governors' July meeting.

Meanwhile, after the appearance of the Globe reports, the U.S. Department of Commerce called for a "top to bottom review" of the NERC.

Robert Ruddy, director of the department's special services office, said the review will be made by Russell Merriman, a 42-year-old insurance executive appointed Oct. 11 by President Nixon to be the next federal co-chairman of the commission.

"I know there has been trouble with the regional commission," Merriman said, "and I intend to meet it head-on. We have got to get going.

Gov. Deance C. Davis of Vermont suggested getting the commission going by streamlining the structure of the commission and a reorganizing its staff with emphasis on technical competence and management control.

"The staff got a little top-heavy," Kerr said. "Gov. Davis is looking for a leaner staff."

Davis' son, Thomas, was mentioned in one of the Globe stories as being the $25,000-a-year director of a commission agency called the Dartmouth College Public Affairs Center.

It is studying a proposal to set up a school at Dartmouth where public officials can take courses. A commission conference killed the idea two years ago, the Globe said, but commission Director Richard E. Wright revived the study because "I believe in it."

Historic Stowe House Sold

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) - Brunswick's historic Stowe House, where Harriett Beecher Stowe wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin," has been sold.

Robert Mathews of Brunswick said Wednesday he has purchased controlling stock in the 168-year-old Federal Street property from artist Stephen Etnier and David Collins, both of Harpswell.

Collins has managed the Stowe House as a restaurant and motel for the past decade.

Stowe House was the residence of Poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow when he was a member of the Bowdoin faculty more than a century ago.

Philadelphia Orchestra To Perform Tonight

The Philadelphia Orchestra will appear on campus tonight, Thursday, October 19th as the first event in the 1972/73 Celebrity Series sponsored by the Fine Arts Council. The concert will be under the direction of the Orchestra's permanent conductor, Eugene Ormandy and will take place in Curry Hicks Cage at 8 p.m.

The Fine Arts Council wishes to remind those within the University community expecting to attend this concert that most seating will be on a first-come-first serve basis. Season subscribers to the Celebrity Series have been given reserved section seats. It is advisable to plan to arrive at the Cage as early as possible. IN ADDITION, UMASS UNDERGRADUATES MUST HAVE THIER ID'S AS THEY ENTER. The audience with tickets is instructed to enter the Cage from the south entrance. Those requiring tickets and picking up paid reservations are asked to use the Main Entrance of Curry Hicks Bldg.

The program for The Philadelphia Orchestra will include Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 4; Ralph Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 3 ("Pastoral") and Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 2. This concert marks The Philadelphia Orchestra's second visit to the University. Tickets for this event are priced at $2.50 to full-time UMass undergrads and $5 to others and may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 5-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the Main Entrance of the Curry Hicks Cage tonight from 6:15 p.m. on.

Conn. Planners Warned

MILFORD, Conn. (AP) - The state Department of Environmental Protection served notice Wednesday on planners of power-line and dam projects it would block projects under its jurisdiction which cause unjustifiable harm to the surroundings.

The action came in Commissioner Dan W. Lufkin's refusal to approve both a plan by the United Illuminating Co. to build an overhead power line through a redeveloped area and over two rivers, and a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dam across the Pequonnock River in Trumbull.

Neither project developer had immediate comment on the action.

Lufkin said the state's opposition to both glans "articulated its stand" on similar cases in the future.

The New Haven power company had planned to stretch an overhead line from a $100 million power plant now being built on the shore of New Haven Harbor to the English power station across the Quinnipiac and Mill rivers to the east.

In a letter to UI, Lufkin said the power lines would be submerged in the two rivers rather than strung through the Fair Haven renewal area and across the rivers.

He said his department would consider plans for such a project, but was rejecting the overhead proposal.

The commissioner noted that it would cost about $4.17 million to put the power lines below the surface compared to about $1.35 million overhead. But he argued that even non-customers would end up paying for the environmental impact of the overhead lines, while the cost of burying them would be them would be borne by customers only.

The $13 million multi-purpose dam in Trumbull was proposed by the corps primarily as a flood-control project, Lufkin said. However, it also would provide water through the Bridgeport Hydraulic Co. as well as water-quality control and recreation.

"We ask the Army Corps to work with us to find nonstructural solutions to flood protection associated with the Pequonnock Valley and the towns of Trumbull and Bridgeport," he said in a letter to the federal agency.

Lufkin said he was referring new zoning to guard against construction where flooding could cause damage and low-rate insurance for persons already occupying such terrain.

'Debate' Is The Word

Governor Sargent's "agenda for debate", in which he revealed his ideas for educational reform, should at least bring to the fore all the issues involved in running the state's institutions of higher education. As we pointed out yesterday, we did not receive all his ideas favorably. We are, nevertheless, pleased that he is using his office to stimulate some reforms.

While little in his paper is brand new, the ideas are bound to carry more weight when spoken by him than if they were spoken by an academic dean at one of the institutions. Certainly many of the opinions expressed in the governor's position paper have been voiced by students in past years. Other opinions were seen in the report made in 1970 on the Future of the University. Still others were made in the recommendations of the Carnegie Commission of Higher Education. (We're starting to think that the governor would flunk footnoting.)

The issues raised in the position paper will be discussed for quite a while yet. We urge cautious implementation of any of these plans, especially the reorganization of the Board of Trustees. We agree with the Greenfield Recorder in using Sargent's paper as his title describes: An Agenda for Debate. We certainly hope the Governor's office follows suit. Recent actions indicate they may be jumping the gun.

Be Honest, Machines

For many years now there has existed an uneasy relationship between people and machines. The relationship varies depending on the type of machine involved., and reaches its nadir when the machine in question is a vending machine. Vending machines get their name from the Latin root vendio, to sell. There are times when the machines might more accurately be named volling machines, from the Latin root volere, to steal.

The perfect relationship between the vending machine and its customer is easily described. Human Being puts money in machine and makes selection. Machine delivers the goods. In the event of a foul-up on the machine's part, a human being who works for the machine will settle.

Unfortunately, this does not always work. My case in point involves a pinball machine, which goes by the commercial name of "Stardust" and resides in the Blue Wall cafeteria. Stardust is a no-nonsense pinball machine. It has a post, which for the lay person means that the area between the flippers is sometimes protected, keeping the ball in play where it would otherwise go out of play. It also has a hole in it, which after conferring the appropriate reward for getting the ball in the hole, sends the ball back between the two flippers. In other words, if the post is not up, part of your reward for getting the ball in the hole is that you lose your ball. One approaches Stardust with no illusions; you have to be either good or lucky to win, and it helps if you're both.

I went up to Stardust yesterday with a clear mind. I don't always win on it; it is a challenge to me, which I enjoy. All I ask is that the machine give me three games for a quarter, as it is supposed to do, and to give me a free game each time I win one. Stardust and I understand each other, or so I thought.

After asking the person next to me if he was using Stardust, I dropped a quarter in the slot. Nothing happened; evidently I had not achieved the proper spin necessary to awake Stardust from its slumber. Undaunted, I carefully put top-spin on a second quarter, intending to collect my refund for the first quarter when I was through playing.

After three games, I was through, defeated by the hole in the middle, which kept sending balls through the space between the flippers. Walking over to the bar, I asked the bartender for my refund. The bartender in the Blue Wall is the person who works for the machines, in case they fuck up. He informed me that he was no longer allowed to give out money, for refunds on the pinball machines. I persisted, but he was adamant. Finally I asked from whence had come the orders he had repeated to me. He told me they came from Terry Grinnan.

Terry Grinnan, as you may know, is the Manager of the Campus Center, in which the Blue Wall, and Stardust, are both located. I went to his office at ten minutes of five, where I was informed that he was gone for the day, as was his secretary, who gets through at 4:30. The woman to whom I spoke had no money to give to anyone who lost money on the pinball machines in the Blue Wall. Their office, it should be noted, is on the eighth floor, a substantial trip to make if you're trying to keep the use of a machine for any length of time. Not being in that predicament, and having recourse to such methods of protest as this, I restrained myself from any harsh comments. I left confident that the matter could be straightened out, and that not only would my quarter be restored, but that justice would be served, and that the bartenders would once again give pinball refunds.

How Mr. Grinnan came to his decision I do not know. He should be reminded, however, that the impersonal relationships that people find themselves involved in today are getting to be a strain on the qualities of restrant in all of us.

Mr. Grinnan should be aware of them, to the extend that he should see to it that his establishment, for which students pay $62.50 a year, should not rip people off, as do the draft boards and other enemies of humanity. This close to home, we should be able to expect that a minor injustice such as a machine failure should be easily correctable. Taking the money out of the hands of the bartenders is probably an effective way of discouraging the chiselers who claim to have lost money in a machine they have never even touched. This does not justify making a policy change which makes it more difficult for the innocent victim of a machine failure from getting his money back.

Those pinball machines make money, or they wouldn't be there. The parking fee was unattractive at a quarter, so it was lowered to a dime until people were used to its convenience, at which point the management raised it to fifteen cents. Obviously the garage must be made to be as profitable as possible; it cannot be removed. The pinball machines make money or they would have been sent back. We know the management of the Campus Center is not interested in losing money. The money which the machines steal should be given back by the bartender, he being the Campus Center employee closest to these particular machines who also handles money. This should be done in spite of the few who file for fraudulent returns. It should be done for a certain type of person, the one who allows the machines to make a profit.

This person is not a very good pinball player. He or she is an honest schmuck who puts his quarter in every three games, and doesn't complain when he or she loses. These people are making the machines rich in good faith; all they ask is three games for a quarter. They're good business, too. They don't win twelve free games for every dime they invest. The only problem they have is when the machine jerks them around, and there is no human working for that machine to straighten things out. And one of these days, one of those nice schmucky people is going to do damage to Stardust, or Klondike, or Olympic hockey, which will be much to the chagrin of the humans who work for those machines. Hoa binh.

McGovern And Wallace

HENRY Wallace, that is. Remember him? He was Vice-President under Franklin Delano Roosevelt. The chances are that he would have become the President upon the death of FDR had the chief not dropped him from the ticket at the Democratic convention in '44, replacing him with an obscure habedasher from Independence, Kansas. All of which made poor Mr. Wallace quite upset, forcing him to break his long standing affiliations with the Democratic Party. His bitterness, plus his substantial predilection for left-wing inanities, led him into the Progressive Party, a splinter group which was dominated by members of the outlawed U.S. Communist Party, much in the same way that the American Party of George Wallace has come under the working control of the John Birch Society. Mr. Wallace (Henry) was subsequently nominated for President at the 1948 convention of the Progressive Party, and it is interesting to note that at that convention, as a delegate, mind you, was one George McGovern, who in 1972 is busy attacking the integrity of the Democrats who, because of conscience, find it impossible to support the 1972 Democratic ticket, which coinicdentally features that same George McGovern on the top of the bill.

So what is the point of all this business about George McGovern's activities way back in 1948? Is it relevant to 1972? Yes, it most certainly is. The activities of one Richard Nixon, way back in the late forties and early fifties, are a matter of public record. Richard Nixon's early career has been muckraked by every two-bit liberal journalist who could grab a typewriter. Anybody who wishes to know about Nixon's affliations, activities, endorsements, financial status, etc. from the beginning of his political career to the present, can acquire such information from a score of sources. It has become 'chic' to attend reruns of the Checkers speech, or see such pathetic smear jobs of which MILHOUS is the most prominent. Nixon's political past is an open book.

But what about McGovern? Very little has been said about his activities 'way back when" and the American press, which is constantly reminding us about Alger Hiss and Helen Gahagan Douglas, seems to be conveniently glossing over the details of Senator McGovern's early career. Robert S. Anson, who has recently published a McGovern biography, laments about the difficulty he had in gaining the pertinent facts about McGovern's early affiliations, especially from the Senator himself. McGovern obviously doesn't wish to leak any information which might subvert his attempts, mostly recent, to posture himself as nothing but a "loyal" Democrat.

Even without widespread dissemination of the facts about McGovern's past, the Senator seems to be having enough trouble getting votes. His shift to a more "moderate" position in order to appeal to the voters is nothing new to him; he has typically become more conservative in election years. In 1968, when he ran for re-election to the Senate, his rating from the Americans for Democratic Action (a reliable index of left-liberal sympathies) fell from the mid-nineties to the low forties, which placed him in the ranks of the average Dixie Democrat. McGovern's original appeal as a Presidential candidate was to the Democratic left. His apparent shift to the right, after getting the nomination, has dumbfounded many of his original supporters. His shifting on many issues comes as a surprise to many, due to the lack of knowledge of McGovern's long standing policy of disavowing his leftism when it comes to appealing to broader electorates. His political style, taking this into account, is very similar to Nixon's. Nixon was willing to sell out his original followers (the Republican right) in order to appeal to a broader electorate. All of which reminds me of a poem by Bill von Dreele:

I sigh for the days of McCarthy
(The knowing will know I mean Joe),
When Nixon was poison to Harry
And Hiss was securely in tow.
How sweet to recall the revulsion,
When Helen Gahagan got hers;
When Checkers was more than a pastime
And Adams was covered in furs.
I liked him ascending from manholes
Or selling a second-hand heap.
The most I can manage today is
He's better than Little Bo-Peep

Vietnam Vets Action

To The Editor:

To all Vietnam Veterans Against the War:

As the Presidential election approaches, the bombs continue to rain on the Indochinese peninsula, and Nixon's slick public relations spiel continues to immunize the American people against twinges of conscience. We feel that is is the patriotic and moral duty of the VVAW to provide an effective counter presence to the VFW, American Legion and other misled, pro-war veterans organizations.

The Veterans Day parade is on Monday, October 23rd. As before, wear jungles if you have them, anything if you don't. Dress warm. To participate, come to the office, 550 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass., at about 10:00 a.m. from where we will go as a group to the parade staging area in Boston. Permit has been granted. Tactics (non-violent and non-obstructive) will be decided by participants.

It is better to light one candle to curse the darkness - we must continue to place the war before the eyes of the American people even during the festival of war glorification which is Veterans Day.

Meet at the front door of Whitmore, Monday morning at 7:00 to 7:30 a.m. We'll leave from there. Bring a vehicle if you have room for riders.

Contradiction?

To The Editor:

Angela Davis, in her statement published in Monday's Collegian, says that there exists no Anti-sematism in Russia. She says that there is "only" anti-zionism. Might not a white American in the same way argue that there is no racism in America. There are "only" those who are opposed to the rise of Black capitalism, angered at the ghetto uprisings, afraid of the Black Panthers, or to bring the matter to a local level, against the seating of fifteen third world delegates? Would Miss Davis see these as merely anti-issue statements? I think not!

Real Info?

To The Editor:

In response to Ed Bryant's "Pat's: Who's in charge?" article on Tues., Oct. 17, I would like to ask him the question where does he get all his inside information from. To me he has his head up his ass!!!

First of all Mr. Bryant you say Billy Sullivan has his General Manager seeking young players for the future, but wants his coach John Mazur playing to win now. Then you say this situation is a result of the Board of Directors pettiness. Mr. Bryant, Billy Sullivan is no dummy. He is the head of the Board of Directors, and what he says goes regardless of what the other members of the board say.

Next you say if there is a veteran with a "good attitude" competing with a rookie who needs experience, Mazur goes with the veteran. What about the case of Eric Crabtree, who was cut earlier because they thought so highly of Rucker and Reynolds? Or how about Billy Hobbs a veteran linebacker who they got for Houston Antwine. He was cut in order to keep rookies Blanchard and Kadziel. You say Steve Kiner was traded because of his attitude which Mazur did not like. What about when he went to Miami, was cut and picked up by Washington and was also cut there. Could it have been that Don Shula and George Allen, also didn't like his attitude, and thus defended Mazur's cutting him? Don't forget Mr. Bryant, in making cuts both John Mazur and Upton Bell make the deciding decision on who is cut, so don't blame it all on Mazur.

Your comment on Sam Adams being on the bench while Len St. Jean misses his blocks is totally ridiculous. Adams was hurt early in the exhibition season and isn't even on the Patriots active roster right now.

So in the future Mr. Bryant, please know what the real information is before you make me blow lunch while reading your articles.

Bill Ryan

Apathy?

To The Editor:

I awoke the other night after a grim NBC Nightly News trance, during which, "McGovern had another good day campaigning, but another Gallup Poll said his position had not improved, David,..."

Every day McGovern does well, another poll mysteriously appears to deepen my dull "news-trance". For some reason, I asked myself why America's young is sitting on its ass, while a damned decent, if bungling, candidate heads toward defeat at the hands of one of the world's great creeps.

The polls may or may not reflect what people feel today (and thanks to somebody for producing and publicizing so damned many of them). Three weeks of serious jaw-work might have an effect. And what a small price to pay. If you really cringe at the sight of Nixon, what are you doing watching NBC Nightly News?

It appears the UMass student has been as effectively mesmorized as I. LAST WEEK-END THIRTY PEOPLE OF OUR TWENTY THOUSAND TURNED OUT TO CANVAS FOR McGOVERN. And that was a good week-end.

If the student bodies put out that joint for a few weeks, get out of the crib and hustle a bit, maybe they deserve to be busted, surveillanced, dominated by a Republican congress, and to see the Democratic party straighten its tie and get back to "reality".

The issue is not even whether McGovern can win. The point is to "make one thing perfectly god-damned clear" to Nixon, to his news managers, and to his well-mannered, upper-middled, country-clubbed mouthpiece, Mr. Chancellor.

The "McGovern phenomenon" is not a "Goldwater aberration on the left". The "Woodstock Generation" can be counted on for more than trashing, rolling its own joints, and determining hair-styles, skirt-lengths. And it is not, "a good night from NBC News". Goddammit.

Clarification

To The Editor:

The article, "Very Heavy Games", indicates that the activities and goals of the Women's Caucus of the School of Education need to be clarified.

First, the Women's Caucus is an autonomous group of women within the School of Education. We are graduate students, undergraduates, faculty, and staff who come together to share our concerns as women in education and women in the School of Education. We receive no support from the School--neither in dollars, space, and services, nor in spirit.

Second, the mini-marathon, "The Life in a Day of Woman," was not sponsored by the School of Education. Plans for that conference were developed by several women from the Caucus without any assistance or approval from Dwight Allen. We regretted (almost immediately) the use of the term "marathon" because it did suggest an association with the Dean and the School that did not exist.

Finally, we see the activities of the Caucus as reflecting the concerns and actions of the larger feminist movement. The media's image to the contrary, we do not see increased participation of women in institutions which oppress women and minority groups as the goal of feminism. Rather, we see the goal as radical society-wide change through the creation of alternative institutions, life-styles, and values.

The Women's Caucus of the School of Education

Editorial Points

Is Archie Bunker the first T.V. network series character that brings into the American home and mind the ideological, racial, and class conflict that characterize our society? Contrast Archie with "Father Knows Best".

I don't know what Arthur Bremmer thought he was doing when he shot George Wallace, but it certainly didn't hurt Mr. Nixon's campaign for re-election. I guess it takes a real nut.

Quote of the week: "The quality of education is inversly proportional to the degree of political influence."

What happened to the Big Red Machine in Cincinnati? No team in World Series History has ever come back to take the series after losing two games at their home stadium.

The worst place I can think of to have a telephone is in the Campus Center reading room. How is somebody supposed to study with someone else talking in their ears? It just seems a contradiction.

For all those who might have been offended by the second editorial point, it was not meant to ridicule the tragedy of the shooting of Mr. Wallace. It just so happens that most of the 20% of the wallace vote of 1968 is now going over to Mr. Nixon, and that ain't good.

Men

To The Editor:

In our society men are oppressed to conform to stereotypical roles which stress competition, one-upsmanship, and stifle their human emotional needs. Our oppression is different, but is as serious as the oppression of women. Recently, more and more men are questioning the macho, superordinate role, and are searching for ways of being that fulfill their needs and foster co-operation and community. Some men have been getting together in groups with each other to discuss and explore their lives and ways of relating to others.

This Friday, October 20, at 7:30 in Hampshire College's AB (Academic Building) Lounge, there will be a meeting for those men in the area who want to check out or join a men's consciousness-raising or support group. Men who are now involved in groups and others who have been in groups will be there to share their experiences. Let's get together.

Mistake

To The Editor:

The timely article on Cesar Chavez and his Farm Workers' Union's battle against Proposition 22 in California, printed on P. 8 of your October 17 issue, is marred by one serious error. The caption under the picture accompanying the article suggests that the photograph of a migratory worker and her two children is contemporary. It is not. It is one of the magnificent photographs made by Dorothea Lange for the Farm Security Administration during the depression of the 1930's--and should have been so labeled. I don't know whether the mistake is yours or the Liberation News Service, but in either case should be corrected--the case of the farm workers is so clear and just it would be unfortunate to lay oneself open to a charge of distortion. It is also a sad commentary that the situation has not so drastically changed in 35 years that the picture could still be thought contemporary.

Volunteers

To The Editor:

Those of you who are for George McGovern, but haven't actively worked for his election; those of you who don't want this country to continue to go down hill with Richard Nixon but are sitting on the fence—get moving and do some active work for the McGovern campaign in the short time left before election day. If you don't get out and canvass, and talk to people, and do everything you can to help defeat the incumbent, you will wake up on November 8th faced not only with Richard Nixon for four more years, but the legacy of all the rottenness, hypocracy and self-seeking greed that he stands for hanging over you for years to come, perhaps the rest of your lives. Those who won't do something about shaping their own futures have no right to complain of the actions of others.

Nancy Piccus

Enemy

To The Editor:

What the hell is going on with you? In Tuesday's Collegian on page 5, a headline read: ENEMY EXPANDS VIET ACTION. It is precisely this kind of reporting, which one sees every day in the capitalist press, which insures the re-election of Mr. Nixon.

The so-called "enemy" which you refer to, are either liberation forces or at least one side of a Vietnamese, Laotian, Cambodian, and Thais civil war. They are not the enemies of the American people, although they may be enemies of American imperialism.

AH, but if only the Vietnamese would go on home and stop bombing our cities and countryside, then the war would surely end.

Health?

To The Editor:

What is the Infirmary trying to do to us? A while ago, a guy in this dorm was pretty downed out and as a result hit his head. When he went to the infirmary, they handed him a supply of Darvons...just what he needed. Another person I know has slight bronchitis. The infirmary gave her cough syrup which is largely alcohol and contains codeine. I've never taken any of their red antihistamines, but from what I hear, they put you right to sleep. These must be pretty strong, and yet they can be obtained easily at the self-help centers (along with aspirin, which is a pretty strong drug). It is hard enough to keep a clear head at this University without the infirmary helping out by handing out these sedatives and depressants. The infirmary should be promoting health. I think this is a good example of where American society has come to...when the solution to each problem is to escape from your mind, your pain, your self.

'Vietnamese Understand Americans Well'

Editor's note: Deidre Hunter, Australian who has lived in both United States and China, is co-hor of We the Chinese: Voices m China, (1971, Praeger). She ently returned from a visit to noi. The following is excerpted m a much longer article she ote for Pacific News Service.)

HANOI (LNS) - As our plane ared Hanoi we saw the great Red ver, coiling down its valley, reading its wetness as far as the e could see, leaving only tufts of es and houses jutting up. We o saw the millions of angry cles, bomb craters scarring the e-old rectangular patterns of riculture.

Coming down over Hanoi we uld see the famous fuel depots U.S. had bombed, and evidence a lot more damage. But more pressive than the destruction s the peasant life going on as ual--people working in the rice lds, boys taking waterbuffalos a wash in a creek after a hot y's work, peasants walking me to their thatched cottages for e evening meal.

As we left the airport we drove tween the paddy fields on tree-ed roads, winding through clists coming home from work. ere was a lot of laughter among e people we passed--fathers with e of two children on their bikes, l people, soldiers--and all along e roadside little food stalls where ople were eating by the faint ht of oil lamps.

Suddenly the traffic snarled. Mr. n, one of our hosts from the etnam Peace Committee, ex-ained that the bridge had been mbed out and that we would ve to cross the river on pontoons. ere was also a military check-int. By now it was almost dark. I uld just make out the crowded ntoon section of the bridge ross the wide Red River. Mr. n told us that crossing the ntoon was very dangerous. It as long, slow and difficult and a vorite bombing target.

During air-raids, the Vietnamese ways made sure we were up, ssed, had our helmets on and de it to the bomb shelter. Then, ter switching off all the lights, ey themselves would take lter. We were told early in the sit that our personal safety would guaranteed. Only one foreign sitor has ever been killed in rth Vietnam--he had disobeyed curity regulations to go walking a dike, alone, out of earshot and without his helmet.

That last thing I had expected was to find that Hanoi is such a beautiful city after so many years of war. Being in the tropics, its vegetation is luxuriant. There are broad quiet boulevards and avenues thickly shaded by flowering trees. Most of the buildings are surrounded by gardens.

One thing about Hanoi--it is very quiet. This is partly because there is very little industry, partly because many residents have been evacuated, and partly because everyone is listening all the time. I remember when one of our group began absent-mindedly drumming his thumb on the car door as we drove along. The driver turned instantly to see what the new noise was.

Soon after we arrived in Hanoi we were given helmets, and the Vietnamese Peace Committee told us to keep them with us always, to go to the shelter at the first sound of a siren and never to walk more than five minutes away from the hotel.

Fourteen times in six days we needed to heed these instructions; four times in one day in Haiphong. The first raid was the worst. You panic less each time.

Every time there is a raid and you are down in your shelter, you know people are being killed and hurt. The Vietnamese must be thinking of their families--did they make it to the shelter? After the raid they probably listen closely to the reports, which come quickly and accurately every night. From all over the country, information is fed into the center, where it is studied with a view to working out what might be expected next, then back it goes, to every corner of the country.

We visited Hanoi's famous Bach Mai hospital, which had been hit by an enormous bomb the day before. All the Bach Mai patients were safely underground when the bomb hit.

The Vietnamese don't wonder what the U.S. government means by "military targets" or whether attacks on hospitals are "accidental." They know--their lives depend on knowing--that hospitals are bombed deliberately and systematically. If this one is the target today, then the one in Haiphong will be hit tomorrow, and the third biggest in the country will be the choice for the next day.

They keep the most serious cases on the ground floor, the least serious on the top floor. All patients are in the shelter long before the attack begins and the doctors keep operating through the night. Bach Mai lost a doctor and a janitor when it was hit. Everyone else was safe.

A doctor, one of the directors of the hospital, showed us around and pointed out the damage. We went into one room, a female surgical ward that had four beds.

The doctor started out giving case histories, gently and objectively. I tried to copy her spirit. But there was a woman on my left, squatting on the bed, patiently fanning herself. Tears on her cheeks, she corrected the doctor on a detail here and there. She was a 36 year old, the mother of six. She had been sleeping when the bomb killed her children as they lay beside her and blasted her own stomach open.

The director went on to the next: "This girl is two. Her whole family was killed by a bomb, except her mother who was nine months pregnant. She is in another ward; we're trying to save her and the baby. This girl will die in a few hours, we fear. She has a shattered liver, kidney, spleen and damaged lungs."

On the third bed was a young girl who had been hit in a different raid. She had been planting rice in a paddy field with her family. They were all killed and her body destroyed from the waist down.

On the next bed there are four bloody stumps staring up at me. This patient is fourteen years old. None of those around me showed the slightest animosity. By this time I am fighting for self control. The director suggests that we end the visit.

It was one of Haiphong's top administrators who told us: "Let one enemy soldier set foot anywhere on our coast--not only will he be known immediately, but he will be annihilated immediately. If they land commandos, not one will escape with his life."

He said this so fiercely that I was jolted. They clearly expect a landing, and from all accounts, they could well get one. In Hong Kong now, the rumor emanating from R&R (rest and recuperation) GI's is that landing gear has been issued to troops on ships off the coast.

Shellfish Ban Lifted

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Department of Public Health lifted its ban on the importation and sale of soft shell clams and mussels as of 6 p.m. Wednesday, ending a prohibition imposed a month ago as a result of a toxic "red tide" along the state's shores.

The decision enabled seafood processors and retailers to sell uncontaminated shell-fish imported from Canada and Maine.

Thomas McLoughlin, of the Public Health Department's Division of Environmental Health, said clam products would probably be available in markets and restaurants by Thursday morning.

"All they have to do is make their calls and be prepared to receive material to put on the market," he said.

He added, however, that there might not be enough of the shellfish products immediately available to meet the expected demand.

The decision to allo' the sale of imported shell-fish did not affect the continuing ban on harvesting clams and mussels in Massachusetts waters. Harvesting is not expected to resume for several weeks, until health officials determine that the poisonous residue from the red tide no longer represents a public health problem.

To prevent any possible mixing of illegally harvested native clams with the uncontaminated imported product, the Public Health Department and the Department of Natural Resources implemented Wednesday an intensive inspection and surveillance program.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House and Senate cleared the way for lifting the ban on sales when they approved an emergency transfer of funds to pay for the inspection program.

The money, $55,460, will be used for overtime and equipment costs. The inspection program involves stepped up patrols of the closed clam flats, inspections of the processing plants and surveillance and sampling of products on sale in markets and restaurants.

The money will keep the inspection program going for one month, spokesmen said.

Also approved by the Ways and Committees was a $126,000 transfer to cover other expenses of the two state agencies stemming from the red tide emergency in mid-September.

The transfer released money for the program from a $5 million emergency reserve established by the legislature when it made sweeping cuts in a number of subsidiary accounts in the state's $2.2 billion fiscal 1973 state budget.

The inspection program is expected to continue until the native clams are declared safe and local harvesting is allowed to resume.

More than 20 persons fell ill in September from eating shellfish products contaminated by the red tide before Health Commissioner William J. Bicknell banned all sales and harvesting.

Bands Must Tone Down

SPRINGFIELD, Mass (AP) - Rock music groups will be asked to "tone down" their performances when they come to the new $10.3 million civic center here, following a disturbance at the center Monday night, the center commission decided Wednesday.

It decided to cut back to about one rock concert a month, and to seek soft rock, as opposed to hard rock groups.

Center manager Louis Harp said he has to protect the new facility and if there is any more trouble, rock concerts will be banned altogether.

Five youths were arrested and a $300 window broken Monday night when about 300 youths were unable to get in to a sold-out performance Monday.

Goodbye To Nothing

NEW YORK (AP) - Things we could all do without:

People who say, "I told you so."

People who say, "If I were you, I'd -."

People who laugh at other people for wearing toupees.

Editor's note: Boyle must be getting ready to buy one himself.

Puppy love after 40.

Dogs that would rather bite than bark.

The wave of the future. It's all most of us can do to keep our noses above water at high tide now.

Pretty girls who, no matter what you suggest, say, "That's a no-no."

The fatalistic attitude that our present highway mortality toll is simply a necessary price that has to be paid for progress.

Mankind's habit of going to war just to kill time.

Lazy housewives who spend most of the afternoon watching soap operas on television, then rush to the supermarket and crowd it more at a time when people who have worked all day are trying to do their shopping.

Middle-aged tenors at cocktail parties who wait until midnight to prove that they can sing all the stanzas of "Sweet Adeline" without making a mistake.

Snow before Thanksgiving.

Rain on Easter Sunday.

Twins who think it's cute to dress alike after they are 18.

Husbands and wives who, at any age, think it is cute to dress alike.

People so proper that they become shocked and upset if they see a baby lick its runny nose.

Meaningless baseball statistics, such as, "This is the first time in World Series history that a left-handed shortstop with asthma was caught trying to steal second base in the fifth inning of the second game-although, of course, as everyone probably can readily recall, it has happened to five-yes, five-right-handed catchers with varicose veins."

Snobs, blobs and slobs.

Any more postcards of the Grand Canyon, the Eiffel Tower or the Taj Mahal by moonlight.

Letters from stockbrokers that look as if they hold dividend checks but contain only "come-on" prospectuses.

Any more young bushy-haired singers who, it is promised, "will steal away Elvis Presley's place in your heart."

Any new kind of pop top cans that can't be opened except with the help of a pair of pliers.

Canned cat food that even a dog won't eat.

Bus drivers who steer as if their ambition were to throw every passenger to the floor at least once during a trip.

Imitation champagne, imitation jewelry, imitation minds-and mock turtle soup.

From these and many other nuisances and annoyances, deliver us. Amen.

NES Program Set To Ge Begin

Northern Educational Services, a tutoring organization which sends UMass tutors to Springfield, will resume its operation on Tuesday, Oct. 24. At this time only the afternoon sessions will take place. The bus will leave UMass at 2:45 and return to campus by 6:00.

Tutoring will take place at the main office on NES in Springfield. This facility has recently undergone extensive renovation in hopes that a more structured type of tutoring experience can take place than was found to occur in the original store-front centers. Those people who signed up at the orientation meeting in September should go down on the day they requested. Anyone else who is interested should contact the Coordinating Committee at 105 in the Campus Center or call 545-0575.

Mark Those Books!

By TONY GRANITE

TEXT THEFTS are the majority of cases heard by the Texas Tech U. Student-Faculty Discipline Committee, according to a story in The University Daily.

To forestall such thievery, the Student Administration Office is suggesting that book owners mark a particular page in each book, so that they will be able to identify any book stolen from them and sold to a local book store.

One method is to circle the page number that corresponds to the last two digits of his social security number. Writing on the fly leaf doesn't work, students are advised, because thieves can easily rip them out.

Book stores in town keep records of each textbook purchased from students, so that stolen books can be identified. When a student sells a textbook to a store, he must sign a statement certifying that the book is his to sell.

Still, the rip-offs continue?

YEARBOOK TO MAKE $$$ at UKansas, according to a bright story in the Daily Kansan. Editor of the 1973 Jayhawker says he hopes to be as much as $8,000 in the black by cutting out color printing and some pages.

If the predictions come off, the book will be operating in the black for the first time in three years, when it lost more than $11,000.

Meantime, the Kansas State Royal Purple may be discontinued after its 1973 edition. SGA had voted to cut yearbook funds, which represented about half its budget. More than 50 per cent of students on campus buy the book at $8 each.

CATCHING UP - we missed this headline, when it appeared in the Murray (Ky) State News, Spring term 1971, but it's still good for a chortle.

The story dealt with the theft of a promotion gimmick the local University Theater was using for its performance of "The Crucible."

The headline: "Gallows Stolen: A Hanging Offense?"

AD OF THE WEEK comes from the Oklahoma Daily picturing a flexed male bicep: "Sidney Riley says: 'I like Orin's Pizza because it gives me my minimum daily requirement of fat.'"

Fuller: Past Barrier To Peace

WASHINGTON (AP) - Famed engineer and designer R. Buckminster Fuller said Wednesday the younger generation is correct in thinking the outmoded ideas of the past are the only real obstacle to world peace and prosperity.

An apostle of "doing more with less", the 77-year-old Fuller is best known for his design of the "geodesic dome" a self-supporting, lightweight architectural shell.

Addressing a conference on "Environmental Quality and Food Supply", Fuller said today's wars and fears of war stemmed from the outmoded belief that "there's not enough to go around-it's you or me."

But technology and resource conservation could bring prosperity to the entire world as early as 1985 if only society realized the possibilities and applied its efforts in that direction, he said.

Fuller said the older generation, born while technology was still developing, learned to mistrust it, to assume that new things "wouldn't work."

Today's youth, he said, grows up with jet aircraft, electronics and moon walks, and knows what technology can do.

It knows too, he said, that international fears and hostilities no longer have any real basis because starvation and poverty no longer are inevitable.

With its achievement of the enormous power of technology, Fuller said, society was hatching out of "a group egg."

"There is going to be an enormous revolution," he predicted, "but it can be a revolution of thinking or a revolution of blood.

SWAP To Be Held Next Month

S.W.A.P., the Student Workshop on Activities Problems, will be November 17-19, at the Oak'n Spruce in South Lee. The theme for this year's conference will be "The University Community and Public Service". Topics to be discussed in workshop format include: counseling, university governance, communications, and public service. Delegates to the conference will include administrators, staff, faculty, students, and legislators.

Fees for undergraduates are $7.50, all others $40 per person. Subsidies are available on the first come-first serve basis, by departments.

Applications are available at the C.C. Information Desk, Whitmore Lobby, Student Activities Office and the Greek Affairs Office (229D Whitemore). All applications are due in the Student Activity Office by Tuesday, October 24, at 5:00 P.M.

All interested delegates may choose to have an interview, instead of filling out an application form. Anyone desiring an interview should get in touch with Sheila (545-2351), Bill (253-2034), or Colleen (545-2711).

This weekend conference, dealing with University problems and reforms on campus can be a "catalyst for change at the University."

University Theatre Season Opens

Unique adaptations of fiction and films for the stage, a timeless American classic, Shakespeare's comedy and tragedy, an innovative "Ensemble" concept and the exploration of theatre spaces are some of the highlights of the 1972-73 UMass Theatre season.

Ronald Ribman's "The Journey of the Fifth Horse" will open the Bartlett Auditorium season on November 9, 10, 11 and 16, 17, 18 under the direction of Harry Mahnken. "The Journey of the Fifth Horse", adapted from Turgenev's "Diary of a Superfluous Man", was first produced in 1966 at the American Place Theatre and featured Dustin Hoffman, who won an Obie award as best actor for his portrayal of Zoditch, the central character. The play revolves around Zoditch's real world, his dream world, and the world opened up to him by another man's diary. These three worlds interlock and interact.

Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize-winning "Long Day's Journey Into Night" will be presented on November 10, 11, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19 in the Memorial Room of Alumni Hall (opposite Bartlett) at 7:00 P.M. each night. O'Neill's intense, autobiographical study of his own family, "written in blood and tears", is directed by Marya Bednerik and features Bonnie Bishoff who is completing her M.F.A. thesis in acting with her portrayal of Mary Tyrone.

"Long Day's Journey Into Night" will be presented in an actual living room rather than a traditional theatre. Because of this limited seating, the public is urged to purchase tickets in advance at the Bartlett box office. All seats for this play are $2.50.

The December production, Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" under the direction of Gary Stewart, will inaugurate a continuing series of "Ensemble Production" by the University Theatre. The "Ensemble" concept focuses attention chiefly on the actor and his art; thus, stage space, costume, properties and set pieces are neutral in character and essentially generalized extensions of the actor rather than particularizations of time and space. The "Ensemble" form offers a stimulating and challenging experience for both the audience's imagination and the actor's artistry.

"The Taming of the Shrew", Shakespeare's comment on the complexity and ambiguity of male/female relationships and roles, will be a free-form exploration of the text, using unusual visual, musical, and physical techniques. The play will be presented in Bartlett Auditorium on Dec. 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 at 8:30 P.M. Tickets for this and future "Ensemble" productions are $1.00 for UMass students with I.D. and $1.50 for the general public.

The first production of the second semester will be "Frankenstein", adapted from novel and film versions and directed by Dallas Murphy (M.F.A. Directing Thesis production). "Frankenstein" will be presented at Bartlett Aud. on Feb. 15, 16, 17 and 22, 23, 24 at 8:30 P.M.

The second "Ensemble" production of the season (as yet untitled) will be directed by Paul Harrison and presented in Bartlett Aud. on March 8, 9, 10 and 15, 16, 17.

The final production of the 1972-73 season will be Shakespear's "Macbeth", directed by M. James Young. While exploring all aspects of the play's tragic dimensions, the production will also explore the potential of creating a viable "environment" for "Macbeth" within the traditional theatre structure. "Macbeth" will be presented on May 3, 4, 5 and 10, 11, 12.

The Bartlett box office (tel. 545-2579) will open Oct. 30 and handle inquiries and ticket requests for all shows.

You Are Invited....

We would like to invite you to the Student Union Ballroom (UMass) for the weekend beginning at 7:30 p.m. Friday evening (Oct. 20) with the understanding that you are agreeing to take full responsibility for your own experience from the time you enter until you choose to leave. There will not be a leader, nothing is planned to be suggested for us to do, and it is free. Bring musical instruments or anything else you would like to share. We are wondering what will happen.

Above is the invitation extended to all who can hear from the organizers of the Life Concert to be held in the Ballroom this weekend.

"A Life Concert", says Terry Mollner, author of How To Go Through The University of Massachusetts On Your Own Terms - A Guide For Students And Faculty and one of its organizers, "is moments and space and life apart from our conditioned, interdependent world of survival fears, burdensome responsibilities and goal striving, where one may more easily be at one with himself, others, the world and what's happening."

"People come together," Mollner continues, "in a room large enough to accommodate them without any planned activities or designated leader for a period of time. Each person is free to explore the other people in any way he or she would like to. What happens happens as a result of the initiatives and wants of the people present."

Life Concerts differ according to the agreement everyone makes with the others present. The first Life Concert was called "Experience In Living" and was held one evening at the School of Education Marathon a year ago. The agreement was to "not talk." Over a hundred people showed up and had a wildly joyous experience for an evening.

A second Life Concert lasted for a weekend last spring with the agreement being the same as the one for the Life Concert this weekend (see above). Nearly fifty people came. Debbie Chernin, one of the participants, says, "It really was beautiful. We all had a great time and really got into each other without feeling manipulated into it but just because we wanted to and had nothing else to do. By the end of the weekend we were all very much in love with each other without going through the anxiety and anguish that many people experienced in sensitivity groups and the like, and I think everyone learned a lot about community and how we are with other people. I know I did."

Mollner believes it is an enjoyable way for students to become aware of ways they can take a greater ownership of their lives and education. He will be present and willing to help students understand how they can go through the U. of Mass. or any other college on their own terms. Also he is presently Associate Director of Campus-Free College - a new model of higher education - and is willing to share its process with others.

For those who are fearful of something as different and unknown as this Mollner says, "Those of us who have been in Life Concerts before had such a beautiful experience that we wanted to make it easy for others to try it. So it is free and people will find that they will be able to leave at any time without embarrassment because there will probably be many different things going on. So I suggest people come Friday evening intending to stay for the weekend and leave if at anytime they discover it is not for them. They have a lot to gain and nothing to lose."

The Life Concert is being sponsored by the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development and the UMass Graduate Senate.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The vice-presidential candidates--Spiro Agnew and Sargent Shriver--were born under the zodiacal sign of Scorpio. There have been more U.S. Presidents born under this sign than any other, including Theodore Roosevelt, who kept his horoscope mounted on a chessboard in the White House.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Associates tend to argue over minor matters. Leo and Aquarius could be involved. Maintain balance, including sense of humor. One behind the scenes has ax to grind. Make clear that you do not intend to be on chopping block.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Change, travel and variety are featured. Don't mix money and friendship. You could be talked out of valuables. One who does so is apt to become scarce. Know this and avoid loss, embarrassment and sorrow. Hold tight to cash!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready for added responsibility in domestic area. Ride with tide. Means be diplomatic. One who trusts you needs special favor. Grant it. By giving you also will receive. Taurus, Libra persons figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Light touch is necessary. Be willing to wait for answers. Don't force issues. Accent is on ability to perceive difference between necessity and desire. Pisces plays prominent role. Catch up on correspondence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get what you want by maintaining steady pace. Stand fast for principles. Get together with one who shares interests. You are going in right direction despite objections by some who prefer apparent shortcuts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Analyze current situation. You may be carrying burden not rightly your own. Do your share but refuse to be taken advantage of by one who is merely lazy. Be sympathetic, not foolish. You will understand.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New work procedures are favored. Leo can aid in striving for creative path. Older individual does not want to present obstacle. Know it and be kind. Accept new challenge. Welcome fresh contacts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are pulled in two directions simultaneously. Key now is to be true to your own style, desire. Member of opposite sex plays important role. Make changes, but don't throw aside security. Welcome love, but don't be confused by "imitations."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Social activity is emphasized. Gain is indicated through written word. Read and get thoughts on paper. One who has much to do with legal affairs is in picture. Personal environment is of special concern.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't delegate duties. Others exhibit tendency to be careless when handling your affairs. Plug loopholes. Be thorough. Avoid scattering forces. Finish what you start. Job that has been delayed needs your attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Ask questions. Questions regarding budget money affairs can be answered. Key is persistence. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Reject the superficial. Gemini, Virgo individuals are in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Conditions at home require attention, including elimination of electrical safety hazard. Strive to make life more comfortable. Decorate and improve surroundings now play important part in personal progress.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, independent and creative. You also have tendency to be headstrong, to act on impulse and to want always to have your own way. You've recently made valuable contacts, had improved social life. In December, you could make domestic adjustments that result in change of residence.

UM Still No. 1 in New England

Massachusetts, rolling along atop the Yankee Conference standings, continues to lead Dartmouth, an Ivy League power, by a slim margin in The Associated Press' New England college football poll.

Massachusetts' former Redmen, now known as the Minutemen, barely edged Dartmouth's Big Green in the AP's weekly poll of a panel of sports writers and sportscasters in the area's six states.

Receiving nine first place votes, Massachusetts drew 169 of a possible 180 points after hiking its record to 4-0 in a 44-15 romp over winless Boston University last weekend.

Dartmouth, which routed Princeton 35-14, received eight first place votes and shared one with Yale, finishing with 166-1/2 votes. The Big Green have a 3-0 record and, like Massachusetts, were voted no lower than third.

Yale's Elis, who hiked their record to 3-0 by routing Brown 53-19, moved up a notch into third place with 132-1/2 points. Boston College, which suffered a heartbreaking 13-9 loss to nationally ranked Air Force, dropped to fourth with 131 points, being placed as low as eighth on one ballot.

Harvard remained fifth in the Top Ten with 111 points, but Holy Cross moved ahead of Connecticut into sixth after tying Colgate 21-21. The Crusaders received 73 points, while Connecticut received 57 after bowing to powerful Delaware.

New Hampshire, unbeaten Bridgeport and Middlebury, also unbeaten, rounded out the Top Ten.

La. Tech No. 1 in College Poll

(AP) — Louisiana Tech strengthened its grip on the No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press College Division football poll Wednesday after its 38-17 lacing of Arkansas State.

Delaware, ousted as poll leader a week ago, battered Connecticut 32-7 and remained second. North Dakota held third, ripping South Dakota State 51-21 for its sixth victory in a row.

California Poly at San Luis Obispo was tied 24-24 by Fresno State and dropped from fourth to sixth spot. McNeese State downed Northeaxt Louisiana 31-14 and edged up to fourth.

Louisiana Tech grabbed eight of 18 first-place votes in the poll of sportswriters and broadcasters. Delaware received seven, North Dakota got two and Western Illinois one.

Tech led Delaware by 18 points in the tight race, 330 to 312, after being No. 1 by a scant eight points last week.

North Dakota was the only other serious contender for the top spot, polling 236 points.

Western Illinois was fifth, followed in the top 10 by Cal Poly-SLO, Boise State, Tennessee State, Drake and Ashland, Ohio.

Runners Fall To URI

By WALT POWERS

Tuesday, on a cool, windy afternoon in Kingston, an undefeated U.R.I. stunned the UMass Cross-Country team and vaulted into Yankee Conference contention with a 19-41 victory.

UMass was hurting at the start. The team was composed mainly of inexperienced freshmen, and it had not recovered completely from Saturday's race against UConn. Because of these factors, the race against U.R.I. figured to be tough. But nobody was prepared for the onslaught of power and depth that U.R.I. was about to unleash.

Because of the wind, the pace was slower than expected. Paul Segersten took an early lead, and held it until the three-mile mark, where he was overtaken by Tom Grundy of U.R.I. From there Grundy just pulled away and beat Sergesten by seventeen seconds.

After that, U.R.I. dominated. Led by Freshman Tom Pilhot, they took third through sixth. Only Mike Conlin, in seventh, and Mike Roy, who finished ninth, could break Rhode Island's hold on the top ten.

U.R.I. showed surprising strength and Coach O'Brien admitted that "Even if the team were healthy, I doubt that we could have beaten them. Rhode Island, because of their performance against us, has to be regarded as our strongest challenger for the Yankee Conference Championship."

The absence of five of the top seven runners weakened UMass severely. Ken O'Brien did it intentionally, however, and the loss did not particularly disturb him. "Our won-loss record has always been good."

Richard Not Returning

MONTREAL (AP) — Maurice "Rocket" Richard will not return to Quebec City as coach of the Nordiques of the World Hockey Association, it was learned Wednesday.

Marius Fortier, general manager of the club, said in Quebec City Monday that Richard has been given a one-week leave of absence from his coaching job to recover from nervous strain and to consider his future.

Fortier said the Rocket had returned home to rest, but repeated calls to Richard's home here failed to disclose his whereabouts other than that he was "out of town on a business trip."

But Wednesday, Mrs. Richard confirmed published reports that her husband will not return to the coaching job and has already resumed the business career he interrupted to handle the Quebec team.

Coach Optimistic

Fall Baseball Ends

By ROY LYONS

Baseball coach Dick Bergquist said he was "very optimistic" about the team's chances next spring in an interview Tuesday.

The Minutemen concluded the fall season last weekend with a doubleheader split against Dartmouth. They lost the opener, 5-4, but rebounded in the second game, winning 4-1. The team won seven and lost one in the abbreviated season.

Tom White, effective until this final outing, was hit hard in the first game. White allowed seven hits in three innings, including a three-run homer. He allowed all five runs in absorbing the loss. Mike Flanagan pitched the final three innings, allowing only one hit.

Offensively, Flanagan helped his own cause with a bases-empty home run. Eddie McMahon and Pete Backstrom had two hits apiece for UMass. Backstrom has been bothered by a thigh injury recently, but the sophomore outfielder played well in both games.

John Olson and Craig Allegrezza combined to pitch the second game. Both allowed two hits and Allegrezza was charged with the run.

Backstrom added two more hits in this game, totalling four for the day. McMahon doubled in two runs and Steve Newell tripled in another in the Minutemen's one big inning.

Bergquist was pleased with the team's overall performance this fall. He said depth on the mound, behind the plate, and at first base appear to be the squad's strong points. The JV and varsity squads have a combined total of 17 pitchers. The first base and catching positions are both manned by two players of proven ability. Dan Esposito and Ron Beaurivage are the first basemen and Tom McDermott and Billy Ryan will work behind the plate.

Bergquist said overall weaknesses are a lack of good defensive outfielders, right handed hitting, and team speed. He also said last year's team batting average could be improved.

The schedule will be the most difficult ever undertaken by a UMass baseball team. Although some people don't realize it, the spring tournament games in California will count on the team's overall record. One of these will be against Arizona State, winners of last year's College World Series. Another will pit UMass against the second best team in the nation last year, USC.

In regional action, UMass will play Springfield and Dartmouth twice each instead of only once. Dropped were easier opponents, Williams and Tufts.

Bergquist sees Connecticut and Maine as the toughest Yankee Conference foes in 1973. UConn edged UMass last spring for the conference championship, and their ace pitcher is returning this season.

One look at that prodigious schedule makes one thing very obvious. If UMass does win the Yankee Conference next spring, and Bergquist is clearly convinced they can,

Thomas Talks Fizzle

HOUSTON (AP) - The possibility that the Houston Oilers might get running back Duane Thomas, fell through suddenly Wednesday with Oiler Coach Bill Peterson dropping the ax.

"That was an exploratory thing and that's where it ended," Peterson said of a mysterious 90-minute visit to Houston Tuesday by Thomas.

"I'm going to explore everything possible to bring a winner to the Houston Oilers and that was an exploratory thing that's all over," Peterson said.

The Oilers announced Monday that they were interested in the controversial Thomas, who was traded by the Dallas Cowboys to San Diego before the season started. Thomas has not reached a contract agreement with the Chargers and they tried to make a deal with Houston.

Oiler general manager John Breen, who had just returned from an NFL meeting in New York, said the Chargers were asking too much.

"We couldn't get together with San Diego over what we would give them," Breen said. "They were just asking too much."

Peterson said the Oilers received permission from San Diego to talk with Thomas by telephone but San Diego Coach Harland Svare didn't want any contract negotiations.

Peterson said he and player personnel director Tom Williams both talked with Thomas by telephone from Dallas but Thomas didn't want to talk by telephone and flew to Houston Tuesday.

Reds Tip A's 1-0 as Billingham Stars

OAKLAND (AP) - Jack Billingham, a journeyman pitcher with a career won-lost percentage of .500, fired a brilliant three-hitter for eight innings Wednesday night, helping the Cincinnati Reds to a 1-0 victory over the Oakland A's in Game 3 of the World Series.

The A's still lead the best-of-seven series 2-1, but Billingham's strong right arm virtually silenced Oakland's offense.

The American League champions managed only three infield singles against the Cincinnati pitcher, who had only a 12-12 record during the regular season and is 44-44 for his big league career.

When Billingham's first three pitches to Mike Epstein in the last of the ninth were balls, Manager Sparky Anderson lifted him for Reds' relief ace Clay Carroll.

Carroll, who had 37 saves during the regular season, got a strike over to Epstein and then retired the A's slugger on a ground ball. He finished off Oakland by wiping out Sal Bando and George Hendrick, to preserve the victory.

But in the seventh, the Reds finally got the run Billingham needed. Tony Perez opened with a sharp single to left and Denis Menke sacrificed.

Cesar Geronimo, hitless in his first nine World Series at bats, followed with a single through the middle. Perez steamed around third base and then tumbled in the soggy turf, still wet from 10 straight days of rain in the Bay area.

He scrambled to his feet and raced for the plate, sliding in, although the A's made no play on him.

The only hits the gritty righthanded Billingham allowed were a bunt single by Joe Rudi in the fourth, and infield hits by Dick Green in the fifth and pinch-hitter Gonzalo Marquez in the seventh.

He walked three batters and struck out seven in the eigh innings he worked.

The best chance the A's had at him came in the sixth inning when Bert Campaneris walked and Matty Alou bunted.

Catcher Johnny Bench fielded the ball but his throw to first pulled Joe Morgan off the base, and Alou was safe. As Bench began to argue the call, Morgan tried to catch Campaneris rounding second. But his throw sailed into center field and Campy raced to third.

Billingham bore down and got Rudi on a bouncer to third with Alou moving to second. The Reds elected to walk cleanup hitter Epstein, loading the bases. The move paid off when Bando rammed into an inning-ending double play.

Surprise strategy by A's manager Dick Williams cut short a Reds' bid to add to their lead in the eighth. With one out, Joe Morgan walked and Bobby Tolan singled him to third. Fingers relieved Blue, who had come on at the start of the inning and Tolan stole second.

With the count 3-2 on Bench, Williams went to the mound. Catcher Gene Tenace moved outside as the A's appeared ready to walk the Reds' slugger intentionally. But Tenace quickly jumped back as Fingers delivered and Bench was called out on strikes for the third straight time.

Bruins Slashed by New York

NEW YORK (AP) - The New York Rangers trounced the Boston Bruins 7-1 Wednesday night in a National Hockey League game as Billy Fairbairn and Rod Seiling each scored two goals.

The Rangers scored the first five goals, three in the first period, before Boston got on the board.

Vic Hadfield got the first goal at 7:35 of the first period, then defenseman Seiling scored on a 55-footer that went through Boston goalie Ed Johnston two minutes later. In the last minute of the period, Jean Ratelle tallied on a power play.

The second period was scoreless, but Fairbairn scored twice with 1:46 at the start of the third period. Fred Stanfield finally netted a goal for the Bruins, before Seiling and Gene Carr finished up the scoring for the Rangers.

Gilles Villemure had an easy night in the New York goal having only 23 shots directed at him. The Rangers took 41 shots at Johnson.

John Healy (21) leaps high in an all-out effort to block a punt in the second quarter of Saturday's game against BU. Other identifiable UMass players are Doug Winslow (50), Ed McAleney, Paul St. Onge (73), and Bob Parrott (23). (Photo by George Withers)

URI Scouting Report Highlights Varsity M

By BILL BALLOU

If you've ever wondered why a guy like Dick MacPherson left the professional coaching ranks to take the UMass job; cease your soul-searching. He let his secret out at yesterdays Varsity M luncheon.

The UMass cheerleaders were at yesterday's franks and beans special to sell official Minutemen tie clips and the like. Being the gentlemen that he is, MacPherson gave the group a nice introduction which began "People have asked me why I left pro ball. Well, sitting over here to my right is a group of....." And he wasn't talking about the chefs.

Most of the show however revolved around Offensive Coordinator George Flood and his scouting report on Rhode Island. Flood, who has literally worked miracles with the UMass offense over the past two years, talked about the problems UMass teams have had over the years playing in Rhode Island. The Redmen-Minutemen haven't scored more than 14 points down there since 1964. Even in the Greg Landry days things were rough. UMass could only eke out a 7-0 win with Landry at the helm (that game was played in the midst of a hurricane and that might have had some effect).

Rhode Island, with a 3-2 record, could just as easily be 5-0. Couple this with the problem UMass has had through the years playing in Kingston, R.I. and you can see why Flood and MacPherson are more than a little concerned about this one.

Also at the luncheon were two of the best advertisements for college football that can be found anywhere in New England Tom Price and John Hawkins.

Hawkins, a guard, is anything but the stereotyped towelsnapping ox. He's got a 3.4 cum in his major, engineering, and is being recommended for an NCAA scholarship. As an orator he isn't going to threaten William Jennings Bryan, but he is an articulate, intelligent man.

Price must have trouble finding time to eat. Besides being a defensive tackle on the varsity, he's a Student Senator and a member of the Athletic Council. He was also the comedian of the crew, telling about his recent health woes.

Anyway, I was about 120 digits off the door prize, which went to football secretary Carol Fill. However, my feelings on the matter were pretty well reflected by Marty Kelley, who took defeat in stride.

"It was a pleasure watching her win it," he said.

Make No Excuses; Oakland is a Better Team

When Vida Blue said that his team was handling the Cincinnati Reds easier than it had handled the lowly Texas Rangers, many shocked observers felt that this would give the Reds the spark they seemed to be lacking in the first two games of the Series.

Bull.

First of all, it seems highly ridiculous that Cincinnati would need any sort of extra incentive. This is, after all, no exhibition series. This is what makes spring training drudgery and a regular season that seems to last forever worthwhile. This is from whence the glory and prestige are begotten. This is a chance for every winning player to pick up about $16,000 (even though everybody knows that all ballplayers are in it for pride and love of the game).

What are the Reds going to do to cultivate the potential of a statement such as the one Blue made? Paint "Remember Vida" on the clubhouse walls? Or maybe print "Make Blue blue" on all their bats and gloves?

Maybe Pete Rose, Joe Morgan, and Bobby Tolan, the first three hitters in the Redleg batting order, will suddenly break out of their collective batting slump by telling themselves, "I'll make believe the ball is Vida Blue's head...if it's a fastball, I'll hit him in the nose; if it's a curveball, I'll hit him in the ear...."

Or maybe Sparky Anderson, Reds manager, will tell his pitchers that Bench's mitt is really Blue in disguise. That should make them throw at least 101% faster.

Seriously though, Blue had every right to say what he did. He was probably fed up, as many people are, with the aura of superiority attached to the National League. Isn't this why most baseball "experts" explained Cincinnati's losses in the first two games of the Series as a "letdown" after the big playoff with the Pirates? And if it wasn't a letdown on the part of the Reds, it was overconfidence. Very rarely, however, was it attributed to the fact that Oakland had clearly outplayed its opponent in those two games--in every category.

The fact of the matter is that Oakland is well on its way to making this World Series a laugher. Why? Because the A's boast a pitching staff the likes of which the Redlegs did not see during the regular season.

After two games, the Reds had yet to hit any Oakland pitcher well. The only two runs they got against Ken Holtzman in the first game were unearned; then they were unable to touch Rollie Fingers or Vida Blue (although this was before Blue's statement).

Then in the second game, Catfish Hunter proved that he is not overrated, as Sparky Anderson had suspected. He had little trouble through eight innings, and when he tired in the ninth, Fingers was there again.

But of course Holtzman didn't have good stuff, Hunter wasn't overpowering with his speed and control, and Blue and Fingers didn't consistently make the Cincinnati hitters hit their pitches. No, they had nothing to do with it. It was the Redleg hitters--they weren't hungry enough. At least that's what those in the know have been telling us. Maybe they're trying to save face, or possibly trying to wipe some of the egg off.

Well, after the A's finish the Redlegs in a few days, there will be many statements reflecting on the Series. Some will continue to say that the Reds never got over their letdown, and others will relent and give the Athletics the credit they so richly deserve.

And hopefully, Vida Blue will say something like: "The Redlegs? No challenge. Bring back Toby Harrah."

Linda Jenness Blasts Nixon, McGovern

By BUFFY SPENCER

Linda Jenness, Socialist Workers Party candidate for present, said last night the American people have a choice in November between Nixon and McGovern or a real chance for social change.

Speaking before a half-filled Campus Center Auditorium, Jenness began by attacking the positions of Nixon and McGovern on major campaign issues. Her main point was, "Neither of these candidates are speaking for, represent, or come from the merican people."

Jenness spoke at length on the policies of both men concerning Vietnam. About Nixon, she said, "There is absolutely nothing in history we can compare with the bombing in Indochina. He is supporting corrupt generals, millionaire dope peddlers, and torturers."

She dismissed McGovern's stand on the war by saying, "We should be honest and admit that we don't know what George McGovern would do about the war. That is because George McGovern doesn't know what George McGovern would do about the war." She stated that McGovern is against the war, not because he believes in self-determination, but because we are losing.

Her main belief was that the two candidates disagree on technicalities of the war but not on the basic issues.

Jenness said that Nixon's policy towards inflation has caused a situation where "things are humming along nicely for General Motors but not so nicely for the average worker."

She went on to cite Nixon's poor record in the area of equality. McGovern's proposals are to give a few token positions to some Black Democrats, she said.

Jenness called Nixon's and McGovern's stands on Women's Liberation a joke. "McGovern", she said, "even put out disgusting little buttons with the Women's Libertion symbol in the O of McGovern." Since then he has stated that abortion is an issue not relevant to his campaign.

In light of all the contradictions she concluded that it is no wonder American are becoming very cynical towards politics and politicians.

In her opinion the two major candidates represent the capitalists. These capitalists have taken every human emotion and turned it into a product. She gave as an example of this the ad that asserts that ginger ale tastes like love.

Jenness then went on to outline the proposal of the Socialist Workers Party. She said, "It is not a utopian dream to think that control could be taken away from the capitalists in the country." The Black, Chicano, feminist, gay, labor, and prisoner movements are all people beginning to fight back.

"These movements represent the American people," she said. She then predicted a gigantic revolution of which these movements are only a tiny part. This revolution would restructure American society.

In a question and answer period following the talk she went into more detail on the Socialist's policy toward Vietnam. They call for a total and immediate withdrawal. She said that without the support of the United States the Thieu regime would fall. This would leave the Vietnamese to straighten the situation out among themselves. She also touched on issues such as bussing, gun control, and disarmament of police.

In conclusion, she again stressed the choice the American people face. She contends that it is a much wider choice than people think.

Wilkinson Sees Repressive Trend

Frank Wilkinson, speaking at the School of Education last night, said he sees a repressive trend in all parts of the Federal government. (MDC Photo by Kevin Mack)

By STEVE SECHE

Frank Wilkinson, executive director of the National Committee Against Repressive Legislation, speaking last night before a small audience at the School of Education, related a recent State Supreme Court ruling which upheld the legality of loyalty oaths for Massachusetts state employees to a "repressive trend" he sees existing in all branches of the Federal government.

Referring to the controversy over the oaths--which involves the refusal of professors at both UMass and Berkshire Community College to sign it--Wilkinson said, "You have to fight even an innocuous oath like this, because it is so insidious."

Wilkinson, who is in the middle of a tour that will take him to a dozen states and over one hundred speaking engagements, encouraged "mass opposition" to the oath, saying that "clearly a political approach is needed, even while we address ourselves to the legal avenues that are still open."

In a discussion period that followed Wilkinson's address, James Matlack, professor of English, and one of the UMass faculty who has refused the loyalty oath, said that a meeting last week in Boston with American Civil Liberties Union lawyers had suggested that the law might be questioned on the grounds that it is applied unequally--because in many cases it has not been applied to municipal employees.

Both Matlack and Wilkinson agreed that the chances of the U.S. Supreme Court striking down the oath were slight, even though the oath, according to Wilkinson, is "patently unconstitutional."

Wilkinson expressed his fear for the future of the Supreme Court, with four seats presently held by men appointed by President Nixon, who together, Wilkinson said, present a "formidable conservative bloc, the effects of which are already being felt."

Justice William Rehnquist, the most recent appointee, came under particular scrutiny from Wilkinson, who referred to him as "the most evil genius presently on the bench."

Yet Wilkinson was quick to point out that all decisions the Supreme Court has handed down recently have required the agreement of supposedly "liberal" Justices such as Byron "Whizzer" White, an appointee of the Kennedy administration.

Specifically, Wilkinson said he was disturbed by three decisions the Supreme Court had handed down during its last session:

--the ruling that no longer requires the unanimous verdict of a jury in state level criminal proceedings;

--the upholding of a New Jersey grand jury ruling that jailed a Newark newspaper reporter for contempt of court when he refused to reveal a news source;

--the decision to allow the U.S. Army to utilize House Internal Security Committee files in its surveillance of private citizens.

Wilkinson, who has spent much of his career fighting for the end of the HISC, (formerly the House UnAmerican Affairs Committee), promised that "regardless of what happens November 7th, the committee will come down."

Enumerating several of the "repressive" practices of HISC, Wilkinson cited a computer data bank in Washington with 754,000 names of people the committee considers to be "Communist influences."

This list, and a similar list which comprises an entire 994 page book published by the U.S. Government Printing Office, includes people as diverse as Muhammad Ali; John Ciardi, the poetry editor of Saturday Review; and John C. Bennett, former dean of the Union Theological Seminary.

Campus Center Garage Now Breaking Even

By CINDY GONET

The figures in the financial ledger for the Campus Center Garage are now appearing in black. Last year there was a slight deficit in funds for the Garage, but so far it's breaking even, said Mr. Don Witkowski, manager of the Campus Center Hotel.

Designated as Project 11 on campus, the Garage is financially autonomous from the Campus Center. Due to this monetary independency, the Garage is not allotted any portion of the student Campus Center fee.

Originally, the building cost was $4 million. As yet bonds have not been issued and the Parking Garage is solvent due to temporary financing. This type of payment deals only with interest. Bonds are structured through the UMass Building Authority which assigns a project number to new construction and, after a number of years, issues its approval for bonds.

On a competitive basis for the best interest rate, municipal bonds are adjusted on a building. The state legislature sets a ceiling as to the ultimate percentage it will allow. If bids are over the established ceiling, the process of rebidding begins. Bonds usually liquidate after 30 years.

Witkowski told the MDC that the Garage can function on an annual budget of $325,000. This sum includes maintenance, operational costs, interest, and a percentage of the principal.

240 Major In BDIC

By MARY GOODYEAR

Students at UMass are now given the opportunity to construct individualized majors through the recently established Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program.

BDIC offers an alternate plan for those students whose needs and interests are not satisfied by the ciriculum of the traditional departments. The program allows the participating student to work for a B.A. or B.S. with an individual concentration in his specialized field.

Courses taken for the completion of the degree may include those from a variety of departments or schools and from any of the five colleges.

BDIC originated in 1970 when the University's board of trustees approved, for a two year trial period only, a joint proposal from the School of Education and the Academic Matters Committee of the faculty senate, for an individualized major program. BDIC operated for the two year trial period with sixty students participating each year. Last spring the trustees approved the permanent establishment of the program on the Amherst campus.

Dr. Arthur Kinney, BDIC director, said the program "provides the necessary flexibility for students within a structured university." He feels from his experience in the program that the students involved are generally introspective, aggressive, and very self-confident. They have to be in order to successfully devise their own majors to stick with it and to honesly believe it is better for them than any of the traditional majors which have been around for so many years.

Any student with at least four semester of undergraduate work remaining at the University is eligible for admittance into the program. The interested student is expected to draw up a formal proposal for an individualized major, which should include the area in which he wishes to specialize, reasons for persuing that major, a list of courses felt appropriate for that particular area, and how those courses interrelate to form the major. It is necessary for the student to find a faculty member who will sponsor him and the particular program of studies he has devised. Finally, the proposal should be handed in for consideration to the BDIC office, room 321 in Arnold House.

Presently there are 240 students participating in BDIC. That number is expected to increase in the future but because no faculty member can sponsor more than two students, a natural limit will necessarily be created.

Committees Fail To Report Finances

BOSTON (AP)-The Committee to Re-elect a Democratic House of Representatives in 1972 and the Committee to Elect a Republican State Senate failed to report their primary election records of contributions and expenditures to the secretary of state's office by yesterday's deadline.

The Committee to Retain a Democratic Senate and Sustain a Veto SAVE, a House Republican committee, filed by the deadline.

State law requires that candidates for the legislature and legislative election committees file reports with the Public Records Division of the secretary of state's office within 30 days after the state primary. Similar reports are required 30 days after the general election.

The law previously required that the reports be filed 14 days after the election and primary, but it was changed by the legislature during the last session.

The four committees are similar to ones generally in existence during the past legislative elections, providing the leadership in both parties money to dole out to members and candidates in their election campaigns.

Both the House and Senate Democratic committees headl major fund-raising affairs during the past year to bolster their coffers. The Republican solicitations have been confined to mailings and smaller functions, and each GOP group received a $1000 contribution from the Sargent Committee, Gov. Francis W. Sargent's permanent fund-raising operation.

A spokesman for the Public Records Division said the usual procedure is to notify the delinquent committees, providing them an opportunity to file, before turning the matter over to the state attorney general's office.

Ben Ricci Blasts Governor Sargent

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

FRAMINGHAM - The president of the Belchertown Friends Association lashed out here yesterday against Gov. Francis W. Sargent's refusal to act as a "humanitarian first and a Republican second" at a conference of the Massachusetts Public Health Association.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci told 300 persons at the new Sheraton-Tara Motor Inn that there is an appalling lack of programming at the Belchertown State School that is directly traceable to the governor.

"He recently trimmed the 1973 Belchertown budget and cut the requests for additional money," he continued. "As chief executive officer, Gov. Sargent is in a unique position to reorder the priorities of the Commonwealth, but he has failed to do so."

Ricci, a UMass professor is also the leading organizer of a class-action suit against the Dept. of Mental Health. The suit filed last February in U.S. District Court in Boston charges that the state has been negligent in the care of residents at the school.

The headquarters of the Dept. of Mental Health, he said, "teems with bureaucrats who are rewarded for having been chronic failures."

Ricci said the goals of the suit against the state, including quality care and the availability of essential services, have been "hindered, obstructed, frustrated, but not defeated" by Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt.

Greenblatt is both "indifferent and inept" and has displayed the "same beyond-reproach posture of many of the officials of the Commissioner William J. Bicknell that Belchertown residents are being tended mainly by medical doctors who are not licensed to practice medicine except at institutions within the Dept. of Mental Health.

On Sept. 10, Ricci added, an unlicensed medical doctor at the school prescribed medication without "benefit of physical examination, chemical assay, or even seeing the resident.

"Commissioner Bicknell, is not one of your publics the retarded at the Belchertown State School?" he asked.

The Dept. of Mental Health has demonstrated consistently an "almost fantial desire" to reduce institutional populations without concern for the welfare of the retardate, he said.

"This is an example of a sick numbers game Commissioner Greenblatt condones, abets, encourages under the glorious banner of release into the community," he said.

TOC: A Place For Students

By GARY TWARDZIK

Top of the Campus, Inc. and Top of the Campus might seem identical to many UMass students. Actually, they are separate entities designed to serve different purposes.

Top of the Campus, Inc. is a "dummy" corporation set up to hold an alcoholic beverage license for the Campus Center and Student Union. A club license was required by state law in order to obtain the UMass liquor license.

The name itself is arbitrary, according to Mike Egan, director of the Campus Center Food Services. "We could have called it the Campus Center Drinking Club instead," he said in an interview. The club itself has not profit, and for all practical purposes there are no expenses and income, Egan said.

Club membership costs $1 for students, but the fee for non-students has been raised to $5. According to Egan, the fee increase was one way of letting non-students absorb part of the building costs.

The membership fees are used to pay for insurance and the club's photographic equipment. Membership cards are valid at all Campus Center "waterholes", including the Blue Wall bar. Last year, 4,000 students and 1,200 non-students were members of Top of the Campus, Inc.

Top of the Campus, the other entity, is a restaurant and cocktail lounge for club members. Egan considers it a place where students can enjoy real service and good atmosphere and break away from cafeteria lines.

Students receive a 20% discount on dinners for themselves and their guests.

According to Egan, the emphasis of Top of the Campus has changed within the last two years. At first, it aimed primarily at faculty and conferee business, but the current emphasis is on student business. Students account for 75% of the Top's night business, Egan said.

One of the Top's problems has been its public image. "A lot of students think it's a formal or semi-formal place," Egan said. "We have absolutely no dress requirement. Except that patrons wear shoes which is state law."

Egan personally welcomes lowering of the legal drinking age in Massachusetts to 18. "Institutionalism and loneliness at college are all more dangerous than encountering alcohol," he said.

Egan considers it one of his major objectives to get the message across to students that Top of the Campus is a hightly student-oriented place. He believes the Top is now frequented mostly by older students who have discovered "that Saturday night at the Hatch isn't a meaningful place for them any more."

Ladd Says Central Board Coming

By JAMES E. GOLD

Joseph Cronin, Massachusetts Secretary of Educational Affairs, is "leaning towards a centralized board system", according to Larry Ladd, a UMass student trustee and president of the Student Government Association.

Ladd stated during an interview Wednesday that Cronin had invited the six student trustees from the state's public colleges and universities to his Boston office that day to discuss the alternatives for reorganizing the structure of higher education.

Also attending, said Ladd, were Checker Finn and Al Cramer, both of the Governor's office.

The discussion was prompted by the release Saturday at a trustee conference of a position paper by Governor Francis Sargent, who called the current higher education administrative structure "something between a comedy and a tragedy". He had cited the need for a change in governance in higher education.

Cronin claimed a single board of regents would be "too much for people to swallow", said Ladd. Citing the work overload of the Board of Higher Education, Cronin said the regents "couldn't do everything".

If regents were instituted, Cronin explained at Saturday's trustee conference, they would be in charge of all Bay State public education from Kindergarten through graduate school.

Ladd said that Cronin was leaning towards a two-or three-board plan. This would include a higher education board, an elementary and secondary board, and a special education and the arts board. The functions of the third would be spread among the others if only two boards were used.

Cronin outlined the functions of such a centralized board system as follows:

—Drawing up the budget.

—Developing a master plan.

—Selecting the chief campus executives.

According to Ladd Cronin claimed as an example master planning could have avoided the problem of teachers in this state--the supply exceeding the demand.

Lloyd Cutler, student trustee from Lowell Tech, called for faculty representation on the new boards, Ladd said, and the other trustees agreed.

Ladd said he complained to Cronin of "excessive power of trustees". He said, "much power could be delegated by law or ourselves to campus governing units."

Ladd said that Cramer discussed student power in regard to the governor's aim in reforms, he would not go into detail.

Workshop Openings

A one-credit colloquia on Human Consciousness will start Wednesday in the Sylvan area, with room left for five interested participants.

The colloquia, called "Altered States of Human Consciousness: Cultural Perspective" will study transpersonal psychology, the mystical experience, extra-sensory phenomena, and other altered states of human consciousness.

The course will meet October 25, November 15, 22, and 29th, from 7 till 11 p.m. A doctoral student at the school of education, Don Mastriano, is teaching the course. Those interested should call Don at 50915.

Beginning October 25, Project Self will hold a workshop on "Women in Movements for Social Change" on Wednesday evenings, from 7:30 to 9:30.

The workshop series will study women's role in revolutions in China, Vietnam, Russia and Cuba, and use those as a base to examine and criticize the present women's liberation movement.

Women interested in the workshop should contact Everywoman's Center in Munson Hall today, or call 545-0683.

Spending Sparks Spat

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress claims that it cut President Nixon's appropriations requests $5.3 billion for the current year but the administeation answers that it actually increased spending at least $8.5 billion.

Both assertions appear to be roughly correct, although congressional analysts insist that the administration itself was responsible for a part of the spending increases.

The arguments are expected to come up in campaign discussions over government spending. President Nixon has said his plans to prevent a tax increase might be thwarted by congressional overspending.

A tabulation of congressional action on the 15 money bills for fiscal 1973 shows that 10 of these were reduced below Nixon's request and five were increased.

But the net effect was a $5.3 billion reduction, far more than the $1.2 billion cut achieved a year ago in the 1971 session.

However, analysts in the Senate-House Committee on Reduction of Federal Expenditures concede that the $5.3 billion cut actually will reduce spending only by about $1 billion in the current financial year which began July 1.

The reason is that much of the appropriations voted by a Congress are spent not in the fiscal year in which they are acted but in future years.

With a 25-billion ceiling, the budget deficit for the year probably would be about $25 billion. Without it, the red ink figure might go to $31 billion.

However, Nixon has powers claimed by most recent presidents to impound funds voted by Congress. Secretary of the Treasury George Shultz said Thursday Nixon may use these to try to keep to the $250 billion spending total.

The congressional analysts agree that the overall impact of actions taken during the 1972 session may boost the spending total about $9 billion above what the President originally forecast.

But they say the administration should take some of the blame for this.

For example, they say Nixon spent an extra $1.2 billion on the Vietnam war, asked and received $1.5 billion for victims of floods caused by Hurricane Agnes and other storms, and supported the move to make the revenue sharing grants retroactive.

Inflation

Going Up...

WASHINGTON (AP)— The nation's economy grew less vigorously, while still looking strong, but the rate of inflation began rising again, the government said Thursday in a report on U.S. economic output from July through September.

The Nixon administration hailed the report of third-quarter Gross National Product, market value of the output of the nation's goods and services, as evidence that the economy is still expanding and will meet its targets for 1972.

According to the Commerce Department, the economy grew at a 5.9-per cent rate in the third quarter, lower than the extremely rapid 9.4-per cent pace of the second quarter.

But, the rate of inflation, which had dropped to 1.8 per cent in the second quarter, started up again and averaged 2.2 per cent during the third quarter. The administration said that figure is still low.

In dollar terms, GNP advanced by $22.8 billion to reach a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $1.162 trillion. This compared with an increase of $30.3 billion in the second quarter.

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz told newsmen that the report was "good evidence of solid, strong expansion of the economy." He said the administration expects continued strong expansion in the next year.

Dr. Harold C. Passer, assistant Commerce secretary for economic affairs, said the figures make it almost certain that the administration will reach its economic goals for 1972-a growth rate of over 6 per cent and a rise in the rate of inflation in the range of 2 to 3 per cent.

The administration had said earlier that it had expected the economy to slow down in the third quarter.

The GNP figures are preliminary and will be revised about a month from now.

Broken down, they show that final sales provided most of the increase, advancing by $22.2 billion, investment in inventories added another $700 million. The other components of GNP pretty much offset each other.

Boggs Still Missing

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - A top-secret, 2,000 mile-per-hour reconnaisance plane was being pressed into the search yesterday for a plane missing with House Democratic Leader Hale Boggs and three others aboard.

The Air Force said in a terse statement that the classified aircraft, capable of electronically surveying more than 60,000 square miles in an hour, was being flown to Alaska from Beale Air Force Base in California.

The plane was called into the four-day-old search to take advantage of "magnificently beautiful" weather over the 56,000-square-mile search area, the Air Force said. The improved weather was expected to be replaced by poor weather again late Thursday.

Meanwhile, expert Army mountaineers tramped through wilderness atop 2,500-foot Portage Pass southeast of here after Air Force helicopters and search planes could not get above the timberline because of heavy fog that began to break up Thursday.

Air, land and sea searchers checked out various reports and still found no trace of the plane that vanished Monday on a 560-mile flight from Anchorage, to Juneau.

With Boggs on the twin-engine Cessna 310 were Rep. Nick Begich, Alaska's only U.S. House member; his aide, Russell Brown; and the pilot, Don E. Jonz of Fairbanks.

Ironically, it was a campaign trip Begich and Boggs probably did not have to make. Begich polled 37,900 votes to 16,500 for his two Republican opponents in the August Alaska primary election. Most political observers believe he would have no trouble in his re-election bid.

The clear weather gave search planes their first look at much of the desolate mountain areas northwest of Juneau.

An Air Force major was asked how long it would take to cover the entire route effectively by plane.

"Under perfect conditions, two days," he said. "But this is the first really good shot we've had at it."

The search centered around Portage Pass, 50 miles southeast of Anchorage. Although the pass is only 2,500 feet high, mountains tower to 7,000 feet on each side.

Jonz filed a flight plan 12 minutes out of Anchorage, just before he reached that area, for visual navigation. There was no further radio contact, and experienced Alaskan pilots, as well as military searchers, said it was improbable that Jonz would have continued the full flight without attempting to make further radio contact.

Military Checks Tightened, Laird

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced yesterday he is creating new military inspectors general to detect promptly and report to him any violations such as last winter's unauthorized bombings of North Vietnam.

However, Laird stopped short of ordering any fundamental changes in the system for exercising civilian control of the military, saying "there is no evidence of a breakdown in or a threat to civilian control."

At the same time, Laird rejected demands by some members of the Senate Armed Services Committee for a further Pentagon inquiry into the unauthorized bombings, which led the Nixon administration to relieve and retire Gen. John Lavelle, then commander of the U.S. 7th ir Force in Southeast Asia.

The defense chief disclosed his action, designed to strengthen civilian control, in a letter to Chairman John Stennis, D-Miss., of the Senate Armed Services Committee, which investigated the Lavelle affair. Laird made his letter public at an informal news conference.

Laird acknowledged that falsified reports on the unauthorized bombings had been filed within the military chain of command and said that "the principal deficiency revealed by the Pentagon's investigation and analysis involves the inspector general system."

He said he is ordering creation of inspector generals in the major unified commands with responsibility to look into subordinate Air Force, Army and Navy operations "particularly as they involve command control."

These inspectors general, Laird said, will report to him through the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Such major commands include the Pacific Command, headquartered in Hawaii, which has supervised much of the air war against North Vietnam.

In rejecting demands for a special court of inquiry into the Lavelle case, Laird said "the internal machinery now available to me...is completely adequate."

Boll Wins Nobel Honors

STOCKHOLM (AP) - German novelist Heinrich Boll won the 1972 Nobel Prize for Literature Thursday for spearheading the revival of German letters from the dark years of Nazi rule.

The 54-year-old World War II veteran was cited by the Royal Swedish Academy for playing a significant role in the renewal of German literature with his novels and short stories denouncing the futility of war and the shallowness of middle-class life in postwar Germany.

Boll was the first German to win the prestigious award since the late Thomas Mann in 1929, four years before Hitler came to power. German-born Heinrich Hesse won the prize in 1946, but he then lived in exile in Switzerland and was a Swiss citizen.

Kissinger, Thieu Press Peace Search

SAIGON–Bespectacled Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's adviser, shares a laugh with Tran Kim Phuong, South Vietnam's ambassador to Washington, after arriving in Saigon. Kissinger came for a series of meetings with allied officials. Phuong was recalled to Saigon last week for urgent consultations with Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu. (AP Wirephoto)

SAIGON (AP) — Henry A. Kissinger and President Nguyen Van Thieu apparently intensified a search for a settletment to the Indochina war yesterday, meeting twice for a total of five hours and leaving open the possibility of a third meeting today.

Thieu's information ministry issued an unusual communique quoting "political observers" as saying the South Vietnamese president has reasserted Saigon's opposition to a coalition government as proposed by the Viet Cong.

This caused some on the political scene to speculate that the focus of the secret talks may have shifted for the moment from Thieu's future to the possibility of an Indochina cease-fire.

There was no explanation why the government chose to quote political observers as expressing Thieu's viewpoint. It could only be speculation that this was one way of making a point without having to accept official responsibility. Thieu is pledged not to discuss the secret negotiations publicly.

The informants also quoted Thieu as saying that a government composed of several parts could be established only through elections.

The Presidential Palace made no comment except for a brief communique issued after the morning session saying that the conferees met for 3-1/2 hours and reviewed "the general situation in Vietnam and the peace conference in Paris."

Kissinger arrived in Saigon Wednesday night from Paris, where he held his 20th secret meeting with North Vietnamese representatives Tuesday.

There has been no report from the U.S. side on the progress of these talks. American officials have said only that they are in a sensitive stage.

The North Vietnamese claim that Nixon's backing of Thieu is the major roadblock. They back the proposal of their allies, the Viet Cong, for a three-segment government made up of the Viet Cong, the Saigon administration excluding Thieu, and political exiles.

The U.S. and South Vietnamese sides have proposed an Indochina-wide cease-fire, release of all American prisoners of war and a free election within six months of a cessation in hostilities. Thieu would resign a month before the election but could run to succeed himself.

Round Two Of SALT Set

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House yesterday announced that Round 2 of the U.S.—Soviet strategic weapons curb negotiations will start in Geneva Nov. 21 with the aim of "reaching a more comprehensive agreement on offensive arms."

Round 1 of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks SALT, which began in November 1969, climaxed at the Moscow summit last May with accord of an antiballistic missile ABM treaty and on a five-year ceiling on offensive missiles.

Round 2 in the historic negotiations to restrain the superpower nuclear race promises to be as long and difficult, administration officials said. But they voiced general optimism about prospects for a broader, permanent pact to limit offensive weapons.

Defense-missile limits are fixed under the permanent treaty at two ABM sights each for the Soviet Union and the United States. The next round will focus on potential new curbs on long-range nuclear strike weapons.

These include bombers, not covered by the current agreement, and land and submarine missiles.

Administration officials said U.S. goals include restraints both on improvements in weapons and on numbers.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler announced the date for starting SALT 2 in a brief statement simultaneously released in Moscow last May to continue active negotiations for limitations of strategic offensive arms, the governments of the United States and USSR will resume the talks on this subject on Nov. 21, 1972, in Geneva, Switzerland."

U.S. Disarmement Chief Gerard C. Smith, who led the U.S. negotiating team in the first round, is slated to head the American side again when the Geneva talks open.

Previously the talks were held alternatively at Helsinki and Vienna, but Ziegler said Geneva was picked for Round 2 because of the inconvenience and expense of continuously switching the sight.

The announcement is the third within less than a week involving important negotiations with the Soviet Union. Last Saturday a maritime pact was concluded. On Wednesday trade and lend-lease settlement agreements were signed.

Belly-Dancer Arrested

BRADFORD, Pa. (AP)— Belly-dancer Tullah Hanley, the millionaire widow, says a youth center she operates has worked miracles with young people-but the police apparently don't agree.

Tullah, 48, was arrested this week on charges of operating a disorderly house and corrupting the morals of a minor. She was freed on $1,000 bond to await a hearing.

Police refused to divulge details of the case, but Mrs. Hanley said it involves a 19-year-old girl who allegedly was entertaining visitors in the center's dressing room after hours.

Mrs. Hanley said that, when she heard about the incident, "I put a lock on the door and I called the police."

Vrrmm! They 'im

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) - President Nixon entertained about 150 race drivers and motorsports figures at the White House last year. The gesture apparently has paid off in votes.

Formation of a loosely-knit organization of drivers, car owners, promoters and officials of motor racing sanctioning bodies was announced Thursday by Bill France Sr., owner of speedways in Daytona Beach, Fla., and Talladega, Ala.

France, who managed George Wallace's successful presidential primary campaign in Florida, now is vice chairman of former Treasury Secretary John Connally's Democrats for Nixon organization in Washington.

The Motorsports Committee for the Re-election of President Nixon will be headed by 16 prominent members of the racing fraternity, including drivers A. J. Foyt, Richard Petty, Bobby Isaac and Ramo Stott together with drag racers Don Garlits and Ronnie Sox.

Also on the committee France said are Les Richter, president of the Riverside Calif. Raceway; Mickey Thompson, noted for his land speed records; J.C. Agaganian, owner of Indianapolis-type race cars; Tracy Bird, executive director of the Sports Car Club of America; Lin Kuchler, executive vice president of the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing; Carl Moore, president of the Bristol Tenn. Speedway; Larry Carrier, president of the International Hot Rod Association; John Marcum, president of the Auto Racing Club of America, and John Bishop, president of the International Motorsports Association.

Petitions supporting the President's re-election have been passed around at several recent auto racing events and France said more than 1,000 signatures have been collected.

They include top stock car winners David Pearson, Bobby Allison, James Hylton, Cale Yarbrough and most of NASCAR's tour regulars. Yarborough himself is running for county commissioner on the Republican ticket in his hometown of Timmonsville, S.C.

More than 125 endowments were collected at the recent "Camel 500" race at Watkins Glen, N.Y., most of them participants or officials of the race.

More than 250 drivers, car owners and crew members affixed their signatures to petitions at the Ontario Calif. 500 during the Labor Day Weekend, including ex-Indianapolis winner Rodger Ward and Ozzie L. Olson, owner of Bobby Unser's championship car.

Unser, Foyt, Petty and Isaac were among drivers who attended the White House reception last year. Unser displayed "Re-Elect Nixon" decals on his car and on his helmet during the Trenton Times 300 at Trenton, N.J., in September.

SENATOR MUSKIE, out of the national spotlight since dropping out of the Democratic campaigning this summer, believes in retirement at age 70. (AP)

Muskie Indicates Chase Too Old

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - Indicating that he plans to bow out of politics at age 70, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said Thursday that age is a legitimate issue in Sen. Margaret Chase Smith's bid for a fifth term.

"I hope I have the good sense not to seek to stay in the Senate beyond the age of 70," Muskie said in reply to a news conference query about whether Mrs. Smith's age should be a consideration in her race against Rep. William D. Hathaway.

Mrs. Smith, a Republican, is 74. Democrat Hathaway 48.

There was no immediate comment from Mrs. Smith. Her Washington office said she was leaving for Maine later in the day and would stay in her home state until after the election Nov. 7.

During her successful primary campaign, Mrs. Smith countered suggestions that she retire with the stock reply: "Age isn't a matter of years, it's a matter of mind."

At his news conference, Muskie spoke at length on the question of age and said he was weighing the merits and drawbacks of a compulsory retirement age for senators and congressmen.

Age is a legitimate consideration, said the 58-year-old Democrat, and "I expect it will be in my case."

Of Mrs. Smith's decision to run again, Muskie remarked: "That's a judgment for her to make and for the people of Maine to make."

"The Senate ought to have the advantage of relative youth," he said.

Seniority is important, but must be balanced against other qualities such as innovation, creativity, new approaches and new perspectives," he said.

Muskie arrived in Maine for a weekend of campaigning for Hathaway congressional candidates Peter N. Kyros and Elmer H. Violette and other Democrats.

Asked to assess the Senate race, Muskie said Hathaway faced an uphill battle but was closing the gap.

Discussing the record of the 92nd Congress, which adjourned Wednesday night, Muskie specifically praised revenue sharing and clean water bills.

"Those two pieces of legislation may have a longer term impact...than some of the other legislation," he said.

Muskie said Congress "contributed its share toward applying pressure to end the war, and I'm confident in my own judgment that were it not for the continuing pressure exerted by Congress, especially on the Senate side, that we would not be as hopefully as near to an end of the war as we are."

Reminding newsmen that Congress trimmed $21 billion from President Nixon's budget proposals, Muskie said:

"I think it's important to make that point since the President seems intent upon pinning the label of fiscal irresponsibility upon the Congress."

McG Says Nixon Anti-Freedoms

CHEYNEY, Pa. (AP) - Sen. George McGovern challenged Richard Nixon's commitment to the U.S. Constitution Thursday-the day before the President was to travel to Philadelphia, birthplace of the historic document, to sign a revenue-sharing bill into law.

Campaigning in the cold wet and vote-rich Philadelphia area, the Democratic presidential candidate used the Watergate bugging incident and continued American bombing of Vietnam as ammunition for his attacks on Nixon.

In Essington, Pa., McGovern told a lunchtime audience of workers from the nearby Westinghouse manufacturing plant that Nixon "has no respect for the Constitution and personal freedom." He said Nixon has "degraded the Supreme Court...and degraded the Congress." Then, appearing at Cheyney State College with black New York Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm, McGovern remarked on Nixon's plans to sign the revenue-sharing bill in Independence Hall.

"I wish while he was there he would stop to think that this nation began with a pledge to recognize the inalienable rights of a people of this land. The line 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' These are the goals that America is founded stand for," McGovern said.

Mrs. Chisholm, who was herself a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination earlier this year, said in her introduction that McGovern shows "compassion, concern and commitment to the little people." She then accompanied McGovern to New York City for a campaign appearance in her congressional district in Brooklyn.

Cheyney State is a predominantly black college, but the audience, augmented by students from other nearby schools, was predominantly white.

Following his Cheyney appearance, McGovern was to attend an Al Smith dinner later Thursday. Then he was to fly back to Washington to spend the night before returning to New York Friday morning.

Campaign '72

Vetoes May Help President

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon is considering a combination of vetoes and impounding of appropriated funds to hold fiscal 1973 spending to $250-billion in an effort to avoid a tax increase, a top White House aide said Thursday.

John D. Ehrlichman, the President's chief domestic adviser, told newsmen that it is a "reasonable tentative conclusion" to say that Nixon may be forced to impound some of the appropriated money in order to hold the line on spending.

In response to questions, Ehrlichman said he thinks a tax increase can still be avoided next year. But he said it will be difficult because Congress rejected the President's proposed $250 billion ceiling on spending.

Nixon is determined to hold the federal budget for the current fiscal year to $250 billion, he said. An impoundment, or withholding of funds is one of the two methods under consideration.

"I would think that it would not be possible to achieve the President's goal by veto alone," he said.

If you go to Kennedy Tower Lobby, to the Environmental Services Division Office, then to the Cashiers Office in Whitmore, then back to Kennedy, to the basement, you can purchase a sound-proofing kit for your door for $2.50.

The kit consists of 17 ft. of foam-filled, vinyl covered weather stripping, tacks, a rubber and metal door sweep and an instruction sheet. The instructions to setting up the kit look complicated to those of us who are not mechanically inclined, but even so, in about a half hour you can boast of a sound-proof door. (But who will hear you??)

This kit is the product of a year's research by David Blundell, an enginering major, who claims and has done experiments to prove that this kit cuts down corridor noise coming into a room-or noise from a room by approximately 50%.

John Warlick, who has worked in the Environmental Sercices Division Office (ESD) for three years, said the kit is the answer to complaints about noise from the students in Southwest. Using this invention will insure you a quiet room he says, and if you're worried about eavesdroppers—privacy.

The ESD Office has made corridor painting easier by supplying the paint and brushes, ($3.25-gal. and brushes-50¢ to $1.50) and tips on color coordination. The Office also offers dark brown cork for walls for about 75¢ for a 1' x 3' x 0/2" sheet (25¢ per sq. ft.) plus the cost of adhesive.

The paint is later and one major problem has been color selection and ability to cover oil base paints. The ESD Office is trying to get a wider selection of colors and discourages oil base paints because of the difficulty in covering these over. (Just think of how you hated that orangy-pink paint that was in your room when you first got there, if it had been oil base, you would have had to learn to love it by now.)

The cork, besides being decorative and useful as a billboard, cuts down noise traveling from neighboring rooms, too. The ESD Office was set up exclusively to handle living problems in Southwest. They have the facilities and people needed to help solve the problem, or at least start planning the improvement of your situation. The office is in Kennedy Tower Lobby, the man to contact is John Warlick, and the number to call is 5-1400.

Crime Study Consultants Often Paid $100 a Day

BOSTON (AP)-Nearly two dozen high priced consultants-most receiving around $100 per day-have been engaged during the past six months for one leg of a federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration study which is being administered by Massachusetts.

Involved is a Task Force on Community Crime Prevention, one of four similar task forces set up to participate in a study leading to the establishment of goals for the criminal justice system.

Massachusetts, since last March, has been administering a grant of some $250,000 for the Community Crime Prevention task force. California is administering a similar grant for a task force on police, while Virginia has one for courts and Texas one for corrections.

Arnold R. Rosenfeld, executive director of the Massachusetts committee on Law Enforcement and Administration of Criminal Justice, said the LEAA set up a National Commission on Standards and Goals "to establish standards and goals for the criminal justice system."

Each task force, Rosenfeld said, "is supposed to prepare a set of standards and goals and submit these to the national commission. The national commission will then put out a publication of standards and goals for the criminal justice administration...

The task force personnel were selected by LEAA, Rosenfeld said even though the four states were asked to administer the $1 million grant. Rosenfeld is administering the money being funneled through Massachusetts. He said the personnel are working in Washington.

The community crime prevention report was to have been completed Sept. 30,

Although the community crime prevention report was to have been completed Sept. 30, Rosenfeld said, the deadline has been extended to Oct. 30.

According to records at the Massachusetts State House, Louis Rome, executive director of the Michigan Commission on Crime, was selected as the task force's staff director at a salary of $596.15 pecweek, effective April 3.

Other full-time task force employees include Donald Brezine of Reston, Va., research writer, at $428.86 per week effective March 6, and Ruth Ann Rudnik of Louisville, Ky., systems analyst, at $230.76 per week, effective Feb. 16.

The records revealed about 20 consultants who were authorized payment for periods ranging from one day to one month, most at around $100 per day plus expenses.

They include the following:

Robert G. Walter, deputy division administrator for Wisconsin's Department of Local Affairs and Development, was authorized $100 per day for five days effective April 12 to "analyze the content of the consultants' papers and...provide expert judgment on planning problems."

Stephen H. Sachs of Baltimore was authorized $100 per day for 11 days effective April 14 to, along with Nicholas Scopetta of New York City $125 for one day, "assist in the preparation of the introductory section to the chapter entitled, 'Maintaining Integrity in Government' for includsion in the task force report."

CIA Accused of Sputnik Theft

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Central Intelligence Agency stole the Soviet Sputnik to examine it minutely while it was on world tour in 1958, says a new book by a former intelligence agent.

Patrick J. McGarvey, in "CIA-The Myth & The Madness," a book critical of the agency, relates:

"The Sputnik display was stollen for three hours by a CIA team which completely dismantled it, took samples of its structure, photographed it, reassembled it and returned it to its original place undetected."

The country where this occurred, McGarvey told a reporter, was among things in about 100 lines the CIA cut out when he submitted his manuscript to the CIA. Review by the CIA was required under his secrecy agreement signed when he joined the agency, he said.

Other things McGarvey says he is revealing for the first time include:

—Intelligence bickering nearly provoked Chinese Communist entry into the Vietnam War in 1966.

—Richard Helms, CIA director, taps the phones of his subordinates.

—The FBI tried to enlist the CIA in an attempt to "scandalize" Stokley Carmichael, the black civil rights activist, in Hong Kong during his travels abroad in 1967.

—The ill-fated Pueblo mission and capture by North Korea was unnecessary since all the targets it was working against were already adequately covered by other intelligence sources.

The CIA had no comment on McGarvey's book. And in giving him the go-ahead, the agency wrote McGarvey if any claim is made that the CIA "in any way approves your book or confirms the accuracy of any information contained therein, it will be officially denied and we will consider what other action may be appropriate under the circumstances."

McGarvey is a 14-year veteran in intelligence, three years with the CIA, the rest with the Army's National Security Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency between 1955 and 1969.

He served in intelligence assignments in Korea, Japan, Taiwan and Vietnam.

It is not his purpose, McGarvey writes, "to foster or promote the naive notion that we do not need a CIA."

"It is merely a human institution badly in need of change," he wrote.

McGarvey's book is one of three new books on the CIA but the agency is battling with authors of the other two who did not present theirs for clearance

Local T.V. Policy Called a Failure

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The policy of reducing network programming time to allow greater local television programming has been "just one of those noble experiments" that hasn't worked, a member of President Nixon's White House staff said today.

"We've asked the FCC to review that," said Clay T. Whitehead, director of the Office of Telecommunications Policy at the White House.

"I think the preliminary signs are that it has not worked," said Whitehead. "It had a good objective, however."

Whitehead also said he felt the proposal to limit reruns by the networks would be good for the industry, despite network-voiced fears of high costs for replacement programming.

"The problem with reruns is that those involved in production - the producers and actors - are out of work during the reruns," Whitehead said.

Whitehead also said the Nixon administration favors less control over the broadcast industry.

"I think we're moving in that direction," said Whitehead.

Whitehead further said the administration has asked the Federal Communications Commission "to look at radio as different from television."

"They have been treating them as the same," Whitehead said. "I think you'll see some very interesting things on deregulation of radio in the very near future."

Whitehead was in Nashville in conjunction with annual country music festivities.

Rt. 93 Delay

SOMERVILLE, Mass. (AP) The opening of a section of Interstate 93 will be delayed several months because of cracks in supporting concrete piers, the Public Works Department said Thursday.

A spokesman for the department said "remedial action" to strengthen the shoulders of the piers will be taken.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

They're A Bit Flakey

They're a bit flakey, those Alaskans.

They all hate going to Juneau.

Juneau, in the deep south of Alaska, became the capital during the trapper days, before gold was discovered in Fairbanks and along the northeastern Yukon border in the Nineties.

Juneau is wonderfully accessible to Seattle and the California coast by steamer. You won't find the stormy waters of Valdez in the fiords and bays near Juneau and Sitka. But that's why everyone hates going to Juneau.

Folk don't steam to Juneau anymore. They fly.

One of them told me she still remembers when that jet came flying into Juneau. It's just a little bit of a place, Juneau, surrounded by sheer cliffs, ocean, and fog. The pilot of the plane somehow got his bearings screwed up. Thinking that he was 10 miles out, instead of what was really 5, he flew that plane right into a mountain at 600 miles an hour. Not a survivor.

They're always talking about the bush pilots. They're a crazy bunch.

My friend, she was flying from Nome up to an Eskimo village near Point Barrow, above the Arctic Circle, to deliver some supplies. Well, those Alaskans have some nerves. She took off in a blizzard, assured by her pilot that it would be alright, that he had flown through worse weather than that.

It's still a little hazy to her. My friend doesn't remember whether that bush pilot decided to fly through the storm, around it, or above it. But that plane started shaking, not at all like when you're in a DC-9 fanjet and the pilot comes on and says, "We're flying through a little turbulence", and you know that everything will be alright because the stewardesses are still standing. That bush pilot's plane started shaking like the Alaska earthquake was in the air.

Then tne gas gauge flipped to zero.

The bush pilot wasn't saying anything. He was just being grim and determined and moving his hands all over these dials.

Alaskans aren't particularly religious, but they can be grateful. My friend was when the crate landed.

"By the way," the bush pilot told her. "This is the first time I've flown alone."

Still, those Alaskans have a lot of faith in their pilots. The bad ones don't last very long.

I never met Nick Begich, but while I was in Washington this summer, I met some people from his staff. It's strange working in Congress. You always feel a kinship for the people who thought young-people like Bella and Herman Badillo and Don Riegle and Abner Mikva and Michael Harrington.

And Nick Begich.

The joke was that Nick, being Alaska's sole Representative, had a larger constituency than Mike Gravel and Ted Stevens, the Senators.

It was difficult being a Congressman from Alaska. You had the largest state to cover. Unlike the east coast Congressmen, you couldn't fly home every weekend to mend the fences. Your constituency was small, and being a freshman Representative didn't make life any easier in the senile halls of the Capitol. You couldn't even have an unlimited telephone service-a WATS line-like your colleagues, because your state wasn't within the continental borders of the Country.

As I write this, Nick Begich is probably dead. He was campaigning for re-election in that big, flakey state of his, and most likely, flew into a mountain or flew into the chilled waters of the Alaskan Gulf, on his way to Juneau. Certainly, Hale Boggs, who flew with him, will be missed by the Democrats. But the Nation will miss what Nick might have become.

Getting To The Core

University core requirements have for many years been subjected to a considerable amount of criticism from the UMass student body. The most recent attacks have been directed at the Rhetoric and foreign language requirements by the Student Senate and Reid Fishman (MDC 10/13/72) respectively. It is the intent of this column to attempt to counter these attacks.

There are, in my opinion, at least two valid assumptions underlying the notion that a college student should be required to take a certain number of courses spread throughout the liberal arts disciplines prior to his concentrating in one particular field of study.

The first is that there are very few freshmen who enter college with a very good idea of what they want to major in let alone what they want to do with their life once they graduate. By forcing students to dabble in a variety of fields the University is enabling the student to make more reasoned and mature decisions in regard to these questions. How, for instance, can student who thinks that he may be interested in english not be sure that science is not his forte unless he takes a science course. The chances are that the courses he had in high school were poor enough so that they either gave him a bad impression of science or alienated him altogether. By requiring him to take certain courses the University does not enslave the student but frees him in the sense that it makes him aware of the multifarious number of paths open to him. The popular contention that students know what is right for themselves is a facile one. Too many students lack the wisdom and self-discipline which they would need in order to lend credulity to such a statement.

The second assumption is that in order for a person to be a relatively civilized human being one should have a general knowledge of the important ideas and methodologies of thought which have shaped the world of which one is a part. If the general trend of thought exemplified by the recent Student Senate vote on the Rhetoric requirement and Reid Fishman's article on the language requirement were followed it would not be difficult to conceive of a world inhabited by ignoramuses, highly specialized in one narrow field but lacking the sensitivity, vision, and creativity which a good liberal arts education fosters.

Within this general framework a plausible case can be made for retaining both the rhetoric and language requirements, the former in particular.

Being able to communicate effectively is a vital part of being human. It is through the various modes of communication that people relate to one another, that one person conveys to another his sense of reality. When the strands of communication in a society grow thin so do those strands which bind them together in a common culture and humanity.

In conclusion, required courses are an intregal part of a good education. It would be a healthy sign for students to display more humility regarding their own ability to know what is best for themselves and accept, to at least some degree, the accumulated wisdom of the generations which have gone before them.

Strange Bedfellows

Politics really make strange bedfellows here in the good old state of Massachusetts. (Remember four years ago, when Governor Francis Sargent was devotedly supporting Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York for the 1968 Presidential nomination of the Republican Party, and two years ago when Francis Sargent was running for his first four-year term as Governor.) Mr. Sargent explicitly stated that he did not want Vice-President Spiro Agnew tovisit his state during the campaign in 1970, possibly fearing that he might receive the same treatment as Charles Goodell, the incumbent Republican New York Senator, who was battling for re-election to that seat after being labeled the "Christine Jorgenson" of the Republican Party by Mr. Agnew. Sargent received his reward in 1970 from Rocky for supporting him. Rocky sent some of his Madison Avenue political advisors to make Sarge more charismatic in the eyes of the Massachusetts electorate. The only recommendations, they had for Sarge was that he grow his hair longer and wear longer ties.

This year Governor Sargent has made a complete about face in the political spectrum by supporting President Nixon for re-election. Sarge even went as far as to purchase 10 tickets at the last Nixon fund raiser at the Chateu de Ville in Framingham. The tickets were a mere $1,000 per head. Sarge did not suffer financially because the $10,000 came out of the huge Sargent campaign war chest. But here's the strangest bedfellow of them all. On Halloween night, Governor Sargent will introduce none other than Spiro Agnew to a Republican crowd at the Commonwealth Armory in Boston, sponsored by Thomas Pappas, the rich Bostonian who owns the other half of Greece that Aristotle Onassis does not own.

Sargent is even wooing the Democrats this year, by attending the $100 per ticket campaign cocktail party for Executive Councillor Sonny McDonough board a boat docked at Anthony's Pier 4 in Boston. Everyone is wondering what the councillor will do with the profits, since he does not have any opposition this year. The Governor must be very confident that the Massachusetts electorate will pass the November 7 referendum question forcing judges to retire at 70 years. If it does, Sargent will be able to stack the courts with his own appointees, but only with the Democratic controlled Executive Council's approval, and Sonny's vote could be very crucial for Sargent to obtain his choices.

It's Not A Place To Crash

By Ed Bryant

Social institutions frequently encounter future shock in their dealings with the problems they are established to solve. By the time the proverbial stitch is made, it is already necessary to make nine stitches to solve the burgeoning problem. It is rare to see an institution change quickly enough to keep on top of the problem which is its raison d'etre. Room To Move tries to do just that.

Three years ago, when Room To Move began, they mostly dealt with people who were having problems with psychedelic drugs. At that time psychedelic drugs were very fashionable on this campus; it was not at all uncommon for entire corridors to trip together. This situation led both to large usage of psychedelic drugs, and extreme peer group pressure to trip, a very bad reason to get involved with psychedelics. During the academic year, of 1969-1970, Room To Move was primarily a psychedelic center.

Room To Move has evolved since then, in its effort to deal with drug problems on this campus. Since the height of UMass participation in the psychedelic movement, numerous other drugs have established a foothold on campus. Drug use all too frequently leads to drug abuse, and Room To Move has had to change with the prevailing drug winds. Fortunately for the student with a drug problem, it has done so. Without the benefit of physical expansion (it is still located in the old barbershop of the Student Union), Room To Move has expanded its services. Theirs is a constant vigil against what has become an increasingly complex by-product of contemporary malaise. As soon as a drug becomes a problem at the University, Room To Move is ready to deal with it.

Room To Move is run by a small paid staff with the aid of volunteers. Someone is on duty or on call at all times.

Ron LaFrance, who has been with Room To Move for three years, is the head man in the operation. The full-time staff is divided into teams, each of which has an area of specialization. The psychedelic team consists of Al Corneau, Ron Harvey, Sharon Rand, and Rich Cohen, who is a student at Amherst College. The Hard Drug Team is made up of Ricky Townes, Ronnie Wilson, Jamie Williams, Ken Whitsett, and Adi Erdynast. Tom Bentley and Rick Cohen deal with Barbituate problems, while Linda Rosen and John Barbaro deal with the problem of alcoholism. In addition, there are three people, Rose Davis, E.T. Mellor, and Linda MacIntyre who deal with Education, and two people involved with General Counselling, Patty Mellor and Nancy Spittle. All of these people are assisted by a number of volunteers from other colleges as well as the University.

How widespread is the drug problem? According to E.T. Mellor, who has been involved in Room To Move for three years, Room To Move handles as many bad trips as it used to handle, as well as a myriad of newer drug problems which have arisen over the last two years. The two major new drug problems involve the use of downs, principally methaqualone, and hard drugs, principally heroin. Both of these drugs provide substantially different experiences from the psychedelic experience. It should be noted that Room To Move is trying to deal with them; past critics of the project complained that Room To Move, by being primarily a psychedelic center, was both encouraging the use of drugs and unresponsive to the needs of the University Community. The first charge can only be answered by the obvious, which is that providing help was not intended as an open invitation to drug experimentation. The second charge, that Room To Move was unresponsive to the community, stems fr-

Virgin's Handbook

By Lamar Pawteck

The time is now, brothers and sister in virginity, to demand the rights denied us by a decadent society. Virgins comprise a substantial minority on this campus, a fact which has long been overlooked. But no more; the winds of change are aloft, and our movement continues to gain momentum. We will not be denied the expression for which we have fought so many for so long with so few for so little and so what. We are tired, brothers and sisters, righteously tired of being ignored and ridiculed by a determined, aggressive coalition of Free Lovers. Virgins are sick of getting fucked over! Day-Care Centers--who needs them? Only a lot of Fertile Fannies with no more will power than cats in heat. Let them take care of their own! It's time the infirmary stopped catering to their kind. As long as they continue to hand out condoms at the door, put estrogen in the orange juice, and sterilize sleeping in-patients, the ranks of sinners on this campus will continue to overflow the bounds of moral propriety, of all toleration! Maybe if they unplugged the Quick-n-Ezee 30-second abortion machine in the first floor women's toilet, a few Lolitas would think twice. Maybe if they stopped treating VD offenders and started dying their organs blue instead, maybe then a few little Sallies and Sues would avoid a lifetime of contamination.

"I tried! . . . Heaven knows I tried!"

Virgins, come forth. Our demands will not be met unless we organize now. Check the calendar of events below, and lend your support. Otherwise, sometime soon you may awake from a drugged sleep to find your entire corridor prancing naked around your defiled, prostrate form in fiendish glee! Nor is this the worst! We have no choice but to unite. No other group on campus is so vulnerable and so threatened, so consistently pursued. Ave Maria! All Power to the Intact!

VIRGIN'S CALENDAR

FRIDAY: Virginity Workshop: Tools and Techniques. Lecture and discussion on the meaning of chastity in the world today. Guest Speaker Malcolm Tight; topic: "Does Self-Abuse Constitute a Technical Violation of Virginity?" How to preserve purity in the face of unfortunate urges. Suggested pretexts for putting off the Loved One (the 365-day period, the Recent Injury, the headache, many more). Demonstration of solo techniques; use of swizzle sticks, soda straws, alum. Pros and Cons of Vaseline. Coffee Hour afterwards. Bring your own alum.

SATURDAY: Demonstration in front of Infirmary: "We demand corrective cosmetic surgery for all non-virgin females." Two wrongs don't make a right. Help our sisters let bygones be bygones. Bring your own placards, alum.

MONDAY: Policy meeting with the Homophile League to arrange mutual cooperation on joint projects. Come one, come all.

TUESDAY: Gathering to pull down statue of Metawampe behind Student Union. Demand space in Campus Center for representatives of reputable manufacturer of Chastity Belts; urge grant to student groups for research into possible design improvements.

WEDNESDAY: Replace Metawampe with bronze of Virgin Mary. Petition Governor to declare Feast of Immaculate Conception a State-sanctioned holiday. Proposal put before Student Senate to change name of athletic teams to "Virgins"; institute special male and female "all virgin" dorms, pass virginity entrance requirement, to be fulfilled by professional examination; create Virginity Self-Help Centers in dorms; allocate funds for the education of the non-virgin community in Virgin Culture and Ideals; guarantee of reasonable number of Virgin Seats in the Senate (unless acceptable percentage already filled by declared virgins, mandatory examination of all senators); Approved Virginity Resumes to be submitted by all non-tenured faculty, administration, staff.

THURSDAY: Virgin Dance. Spanking Party. Lecture. "Selective Amputation as an Aid to Virginity". Speaker, Mrs. Malcolm Tight. Short discussion on Virgins in History. Petition Federal Government to release data from secret Parthenogenesis Project. Lecture: "Test Tubes: Freedom for Virgins in Sight at Last, Hooray". Non-virgins welcome; apply for identification tattoo at the door.

FRIDAY: Begin all over again.

The Peace Movement - 1972

Last Saturday a group of Quakers, VVAW and people from the Amherst Peace Action Committee drove up to the Vermont-Canadian border to commit an act of civil disobedience-trading with the enemy, or so says the Federal Government. It waa a strange conglomerate of people. Viet vets, peace folk and Quakers. In a sense it was a throw back to another era, that of free speech and civil rights of the early sixties, and a depressing look at the who knows what number of ineffective war protest.

But lying somewhere buried beneath it all was the affirmation of the dignity of man. It's a heavy phrase, loaded with every humanistic cliche of the past 10 years, but it's good to know that some one still believes that all men are brothers, no matter what their political ideology or geographical location. It's a thought missing from today's political scene, be it right.

It Has Happened There

The fabled Golden Triangle, where Laos, Thailand, and Burma meet, long a traditional opium-growing area, now provides 70 percent of the world's illicit supply of heroin. And many elements in the governments of these countries, and in the government of South Vietnam— most of which are supported by U.S. military and financial aid—are deeply (and lucratively) involved in the growing, processing, transport, and distribution of narcotics. How has this situation come about. Alfred W. McCoy explores this question in the book THE POLITICS OF HEROIN IN SOUTHEAST ASIA which is reviewed on page fourteen.

The Lighter Side of Politics

November 8, 1972-The Day After

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

ELECTORAL COLLEGES, U.S.A. — Nov. 8th (AP) The Admissions Office at Electoral College announced early this morning that they had accepted the application of Richard M. Nixon for the second time in four years.

Nixon, who re-applied to the Electoral College on November 10, 1968, was said to be unique in that his application was accepted so readily the second time around. "We've accepted 36 before him," said an Admissions Office official, "but never has any student made it in so easily."

Although the college declared that all students must graduate in eight years (a recent change in policy) or flunk out after four years, (some are even said to have dropped out) their latest student looked beyond the eight year limit saying, "maybe they'll let me graduate in 1980. I'm really beginning to like it here."

Nationwide there was much confusion over the seeming early announcement of acceptance. But a college spokesman was nearby for the clarification. "Many people forget that our term starts January, not September, therefore we have to accept students early in the regular academic year."

When Richard Nixon was asked about his first four year at Electoral College he commented, "College life is hectic. My course load is really much too heavy. Hell, it's like I've been fighting a war."

When asked what college had in store for him on his way towards graduation he explained, "I hope to keep taking plenty of field trips, I really enjoy them."

When queried about his future place of abode he told us, "I'll be at my house again. Dorm life isn't for me. Anyway, I like walking through my big white house."

Mr. Nixon recently applied for financial aid and the Board of Trustee's was more than willing. They granted him a $10 million scholarship but as of yet the names of donators have not been disclosed. Further inquiry has disclosed that this grant had nothing what-so-ever to do with the Alumni organization.

????????, WORLD — Nov. 8th (AP) Rumors that Henry A. Kissinger is no longer a bachelor were running rampant through this town today. A wedding party spokesman who wished to remain anonymous said that the Kissingers had tied the knot sometime last week, although the actual day could not be divulged. In formation about the secret wedding was scanty.

The unnamed bride looked lovely, a usually reliable source indicated, in her white satin gown with crepe sleeves as she walked down the aisle accompanied by a state department spokesman acting as best man.

The couple left immediately after the wedding for an undisclosed destination and four days of private talks.

It was rumored that Kissinger had been overheard saying as he left for his honeymoon, "If the decision had been up to me, I probably would have refused. I was only following orders."

The Kissingers should have finished their fourth honeymoon session today. But the White House again refused to say whether they were making any progress.

Pictures of the bride were not available, but Mr. Kissinger's press secretary released a photo (see above) of the groom taken after the last round or private talks.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Nov. 8th (UPI) Commissioner of football Pete Rozelle today called up President Nixon to congratulate him on his recent Presidential victory. Rozelle, the self-declared number one political fan in the country, proposed that Mr. Nixon's acceptance speech be blacked out coast to coast in favor of a re-run of Heidi.

No official comment from the White House has been made on Rozelle's recent proposal.

BELFAST, IRELAND — Nov. 8th (UFO) On the morning after the United States Presidential Election, 450,000 U.S. troops descended upon the small town of Belfast, Ireland. President Nixon's decision was made minutes after a CBS projection showed Nixon with more than enough electoral votes to win the election.

A Washington spokesman explained the troop build-up in Ireland as a significant step in President Nixon's economic policy, recently termed Phase III.

Melvin Laird, when questioned over the time of the announcement stated flatly, "Any relation with election results this may have had are purely coincidental."

But while millions rejoice under Phase III, the supposed cure-all to unemployment, thousands elsewhere were saddened. The reason: 200,000 posters reading, "He kept our boys out of Northern Ireland" were rendered obsolete.

One woman in Dallas, Texas, who recently bought this colorful poster, which includes a picture of President Nixon with arms extended and a flag in the background, sadly reported, "I was sure here was one poster I could keep for awhile. I bought the one on Vietnam but Nixon never gave me a chance to put it up. Then I bought the one with the adage 'He kept our country scandal-free.' Then this one Just yesterday I saw one saying, 'He kept our boys out of Red China,' but I didn't dare buy it. I've jinxed the man enough."

KEY BISCAYNE, FLORIDA — Nov. 8th (WP) Richard M. Nixon today declined a second term as President of the United States, a day after he was re-elected.

In a move which took the entire nation by surprise, Nixon rejected the second term on the grounds that he had already accomplished all he had wanted to accomplish in electoral politics.

"I always wanted to prove to people that I could be elected President. And I was. Now I have more important things on my mind." When pressed to clarify this statement, Nixon revealed his future plans.

"I answered the question of whether I could be elected to the country's highest office. Now there's only one thing left in life for me to accomplish. I must answer the question which so many people across the nation have beenasking for the last four years: "Would you buy a used car from this man?" It's been gnawing at Pat and me and we mean to find out the answer!"

...and the Darker Side

Do Polls Create Apathy?

As the fist of apathy clutches at the throat of the American electorate this election year one cannot help but wonder why? Why this year? In 1968, the voter turnout was one of the highest in our nation's history. In 1972, for the first time in 24 years, predicts Newsweek magazine, less than 60% of the electorate will cast ballots for President in November. We believe the cause of the nation's blase attitude this election year are the political polls.

Imagine yourself living in a nation which is in the midst of an election campaign. Polls have been outlawed, so you have no way of knowing which candidate is ahead. Your man still has as good a chance of winning as his opponent does, you reason, so you rush out to campaign for him. Voting has to mean more to you because you realize that maybe, just maybe, your vote will be a deciding one. You feel that you are an important part of the electoral system.

Alas, though, it's 1972, and there's a political poll released every week—in fact, not just one, but dozens. It's gotten to the point where unless the polls show a deadlocked race, you

"Which candidate have we made you most apathetic about?"

figure your man won't need your vote to win, so why bother? As a supporter of the underdog you feel the futility of it all and you just can't get up the energy to drag yourself to the polls. The ensuing overwhelming defeat of your candidate creates and it's-no-use attitude. So why bother?

Simply, there are no good reasons NOT to be apathetic. Thus the apathy currently plaguing the American public is artificially-induced apathy - induced by the polls.

Some will say that in 1972 people are disgusted with politicians, that they believe it doesn't matter who wins. They'll say that distrust of politics in general has caused the apathy. Why then, was there such a tremendous turnout in 1968? Have the country's attitudes about politicians changed that much in four years?

Answer: Polls work two ways. Just as a predicted landslide will create apathy, so a predicted deadlock will create enthusiasm as evidenced in 1968 when Humphrey and Nixon were neck and neck in October.

Polls were created in the best interest of the American people, but they have not served that purpose-they are having a deleterious effect.

Thus polls keep the apathetic apathetic.

It's Not A Place To Crash (Cont'd)

the ineffectiveness of the various solutions to the heroin problem. What is involved here is worth considering carefully.

The heron problem on campus has mainly been centered around black male students. There have been heroin users in all permutations of black, white, male, and female, but it has generally been true that black men have been most efected by the problem. According to Ken Whitsett, approximately 30 to 40% of the first two entering classes of CCEBS students had a heroin problem. The importance of this must be understood in light of the policies and experiences which effect CCEBS students.

One immediate problem is that students entering the University through CCEBS are forced to lie in order to get into the program. CCEBS is still a developing program; it does not enjoy long-term security, and thus is always under scrutiny and observation. The people in charge of CCEBS do not expect each CCEBS student to make both Who's Who and Phi Beta Kappa. They do, however, ask students whether or not they use heroin. To answer yes would mean exclusion from the problem. This serves to drive the heroin problem underground. Students who need help with heroin problems are forced to conceal their usage of the drug, thus making it difficult if not impossible to obtain help.

Another part of the heroin problem in the black community is the alienation felt by many black students. "There's no support for black people in this school," says Ken Whitsett. "There's nowhere for blacks with problems to go." One place where blacks can go on campus is New Africa House, where according to Whitsett, heroin dealers are most unwelcome.

Whitsett, as both a drug counsellor and a black man, is trying to establish counselling groups among black students with heroin problems, in which people could help each other out. In addition to discussing drug problems, which are to a large extent only symptoms of a larger difficulty, these groups would help black students to understand their role vis-a-vis the University, and the University's role in their lives.

Karsh

Whitsett would like to establish a branch of Room To Move in New Africa House, in order to have drug counselling for black students closer to the Black Cultural Center, which for many black students is the central gathering place.

The other side of the drug problem on campus is methaqualone, better known as "Quaaludes" or "Sopors", after the drug manufacturers who make them. Described in the Physician's Desk Reference as the equivalent of a sleeping pill, Quaaludes induce sleepiness in fifteen to twenty minutes. Their use is supposed to occur by prescription only, for a period of three months at a maximum. Four Quaaludes is overdose level for anyone who has not developed a tolerance to them. Room To Move has seen people who have taken as many as twenty-one Quaaludes, an indication of a well-developed tolerance. The effect of Quaalude is drowsiness; they relax one's body to an extreme point.

People coming to Room To Move with Quaalude problems generally either have questions about the use of the drug, or are looking for support in their effort to get off of it. (Offering support is a common Room To Move practice. John Barbaro is currently helping a student stay off speed after using methedrine for five years.) When students come into Room To Move with an overdose of Quaaludes, they are sent to the infirmary. Sometimes non-students arrive, some of whom refuse to go to the Infirmary. If they refuse, people at Room To Move can only persuade, they cannot force.

Quaaludes are very popular among high school students, who use them as an aid to get through the day. They are available by prescription, but their widespread use indicates that they are being stolen in large quantities.

Room To Move has also changed its treatment of psychedelic problems, as knowledge of LSD therapy has increased. Their methods now include yoga therapy, gestalt therapy, and guided imagery.

Drug problems are more than just a question of drug abuse. Too much of any drug is harmful, but without coming near overdose level, one sometimes finds personal problems, which he has frquently ignored, too much for him to handle. This is the main prupose of Room To Move, to help people deal with their problems. They do their best to stay knowledgeable.

Contrary to widespread belief, Room To Move is not a place to crash. It is, however, a place you can go to get help with your problems.

Homo; A New Translation By Fred Beaver

PERSONS OF THE DIALOGUE
Homo the dog of Homo
Socrates Richard Nixon

HOMO: I was hoping, Socrates, that you could tell me what it is that distinguishes the real (ennuios) from the imaginary or unreal (yo-yos), since this is a question which is debated quite a lot among the philosophers of my city.

SOCRATES: You surprise me, Homo. I was unaware that the people of Formica had any interest whatsoever in such matters, or indeed that their imaginations extended to anything beyond the genitalia of their immediate neighbors. Yet it seems that some of them are bent on earnest enquiry into truth, even as we are. Is this the case?

HO: I assure you, Socrates, that many of us think truth is tuff.

SOCR: Very well then, my friend, shall we begin our quest into the nature of the real as opposed to the unreal?

HO: By all means, but I would rather shoot the breeze for awhile first.

SOCR: This seems good to me also. How's your dog?

HO: He's good.

SOCR: Then let us begin by asking questions of ourselves in order that we may discover what it is that we are talking about and thus save column inches, because as I freely confess, I know nothing worth knowing on this or any other topic and neither will you when I have finished; but I may yet learn something tomorrow, whereas you, Homo, will remain stupid for the rest of your life and will make anyone who enters into discussion with you likewise stupid for a period not exceeding nine months or 36,000 words, whichever comes first. Do you agree to the terms of our discussion?

HO: Doubtless, to be sure, of course, why not?

SOCR: Shall we then proceed by questions?

HO: Inescapably.

SOCR: Will you be so good as to rehearse your own view in such a way that it is open to immediate demolition?

HO: Ineffably. As you know, Socrates...

SOCR: Is it your belief that I know something?

HO: I perceive that I am in error. As you do not know...

SOCR: You hold then that we know I do not know?

HO: I begin to feel stupid.

SOCR: This is natural. Proceed.

HO: As you may or may not know, there are certain hotheads and cretins (weirdos) who think reality and unreality are one. Yet that is an absurdity, for if the unreal were real then everything would be real, and as a result of reality's being identical with unreality, everything would be unreal at the same time as it is real.

SOCR: Really?

HO: Sure. Furthermore, if unreality is a reality, then nothingness, which we agree is an unreality, is also a reality, and consequently nothing is real and God didn't make the little green apples. This is the nature of our problem.

SOCR: No shit, hey. What would be your response, my dear Homo, if it were the case that reality is in fact one with unreality?

HO: I'd wet my pants, Socrates.

SOCR: And you, Richard, is it as I suppose, that you and Homo are substantially in accord?

RICHARD NIXON: I'm glad you asked that question, Socrates, and I'll tell you why. Though I am not one to favor reality over unreality, or vice-versa, let me say this: in the final analysis, when the chips are down, reality will assert itself in spite of those who would destroy the work of years by thoughtlessly recommending me for frontal lobotomy.

SOCR: Richard, will you now tell us whether or not you are going out for a ham sandwich on rye, no mayo?

RI: I am, Socrates.

SOCR: Then Homo, shall we not examine our subject more closely?

HO: Yes.

SOCR: Is it true that you conceive some link between the two worls, that of the real and that of the unreal?

HO: Mmmph.

SOCR: Then we may make some guess as to what it might be?

HO: Zzt.

SOCR: Guess what.

HO: What?

SOCR: That's what.

HO: I'm afraid my understanding of your point is less than I could wish.

SOCR: Let me put it to you in this way, then. That attractive maiden (vageina) over there, is she real or unreal?

HO: Real as dog doughnuts, Socrates.

SOCR: What is she doing?

HO: She's washing her lower leg, Socrates.

SOCR: Now what is she doing?

HO: She's washing her thigh, Socrates. Jesus.

SOCR: Would you agree that all her clothing has now been discarded?

HO: Yes, Socrates, she is entirely nude.

SOCR: Some piece, huh?

HO: Yes, Socrates.

SOCR: Would you say that she is too much?

HO: Yes, Socrates, she's too much!

SOCR: Would you then say that she is unreal?

HO: There can be no doubt, Socrates, that she is un-real!

SOCR: Then she is both real and unreal?

HO: That seems to follow, and yet...

SOCR: Then reality is one with unreality?

HO: Your conclusion seems unavoidable.

SOCR: Do you now then feel stupid?

HO: Yes, Socrates, I feel very stupid.

SOCR: See you around, Sport.

The Spectre Of '64 Looms Over Democrats

By Frank Baglione

The McGovern campaign seems to be on the threshold of achieving a distinction as one of the most futile ever conducted. Its sterility is remarkable both for its completeness and the fact that it was so unexpected. This crusade, begun in the trappings of high idealism, compassion and righteousness, now stands before the gates of the Holy City with its armies of truth in disarray, their armor tarnished, their machines of war in disrepair and their camps decaying with the syphilis of inanity.

With an amazing predilection for stupidity, the McGovern forces have littered the campaign trail with mistakes. The Democratic Convention, obsessed as it was with lettuce and North Vietnamese dikes, was as farcial and idiotic as any before. The sensibilities of intelligent citizens suffered far more extensive damage at the hands of the Democrats than did the North Vietnamese dikes under the supposedly deliberate bombings of our pilots. Rival democrats cynically appealed to "justice" in pleading for favorable delegate rulings; blacks, women and other special interest groups embarrassed their swaggering leaders by refusing to vote in a bloc; individuals with personal problems took them to the platform committee as if it were a psychiatric clinic; and George McGovern exerted just enough leadership to give credence to the charge he was "controlling" the convention, but not enough for him to direct the convention in an efficient expenditure of energies. Eric Severeid was nearly in tears.

After scuttling all minority platforms which might have damaged the party's image, the convention then allowed McGovern to dictate the choice of the vice-presidential candidate rather than embarrass him with a Sissy what's-her-name. McGovern proved he could make his own mistakes, thank you, and chose Thomas Eagleton. The stench of that corpse still follows the campaign around. After it was revealed that the Senator from Missouri had once had a difficult time collecting all his marbles, McGovern quickly sold his stock in Eagleton, and nervous Tom was sacrificed at the temple of the "issues." Women's rights, Civil Rights, union lettuce and Vietnam sit on the right of this issue-oriented God. Abortion, homosexuality and mental health sit on the left, and three seats behind.

After this the Democrats became more modest and only slightly less masochistic. Different parts of the McGovern campaign allowed themselves free expression until everyone got confused and McGovern's leadership was called into question. Then an anxious McGovern crashed the Paris Peace talks through a surogate who just happened to be over there. Another embarrassment appeared in the irritating and sanctimonious person of Ramsey Clark, democratic supporter of McGovern who did a radio special in Hanoi. The people around McGovern appeared disorganized, undisciplined and disloyal.

On the bright side there was Watergate, the Republican's questionable intelligence gathering operation, and the Wheat scandal. But the Democrats do not seem to be getting all the mileage they could out of these, and in the end they may only serve to lessen the magnitude of the Democratic defeat. In the meantime McGovern was petting with Mayor Daley in Chicago and rubbing up against Ed Kennedy everywhere and anywhere he found him.

As the campaign becomes more and more insipid, a McGovern Million-Member Club promotion urges our participation in "this great undertaking." "I want to be one of the million Americans who are being asked to contribute an average of $25 to the McGovern campaign," the literature reads. "Please enroll me as a member of the McGovern Million-Member Club and send me a club membership card and button." The status of contributions are carefully noted parenthetically. Giving $25 establishes you as a patron; at $10 you are just a friend; patrons come at $50; and the rank of "angel" is bestowed on $100 contributors. Both membership card and button carry three large M's linked together on a red-white-and-blue background. On the membership card, below where you will proudly inscribe your name, is the following description of the contributor. "————Has made a contribution to McGovern for President and is hereby recognized as 'One in a Million.'" Can you feel your heart beating faster? That, with all the dignity, maturity and wit of an Ovaltine commercial for the Captain Midnight Club, is the result of an issue-oriented campaign.

In all fairness it is true that McGovern tries to speak about the issues more than most politicians. Fan club gimmickry is clearly secondary. And since he has little to lose he does well to spend his TV time talking about such things as the Vietnam War and the economy. The results of such attempts, however, still produce the same misunderstandment of what his policy will be. The aftermath of his first TV speech on Vietnam was a clarification of his stated intent to remove all U.S. materials from South Vietnam. The ARVN troops will not, it seems, be forced to surrender their rifles and ammunition. Had he been slightly more conscious during the taping he might have made this clear, but as it was he appeared stiff, ill-at-ease and very solemn. He looked like a rerun of Ed Muskie.

George McGovern...the conclusion one reaches may well be that the McGovern campaign failed even if he were to win the election. It failed to be the refreshing, honest, articulate and optimistically refreshing campaign that was promised.

Taking all these incidents together, the conclusion one reaches may well be that the McGovern campaign failed even if he were to win the election. It failed to be the refreshing, honest, articulate and optimistically refreshing campaign that was promised. There was no grace, no dignity, no actions that inspire confidence, no gestures that soothe anxieties. Only wild promises, improble solutions, blanket condemnations and flacid professions of belief. Only Richard Nixon seems to be in this race, running against himself--the fate of George McGovern will merely be a corolary to that contest.

At the present time polls show McGovern running well in only four states--Washington, Minnesota, West Virginia and our own Massachusetts where diletante intellectuals and their declasse offspring close the generation gap at McGovern. Include the candidate's native South Dakota and the electoral votes of the District of Columbia and the Democrats can claim a total of 46 electoral votes, just 224 short of the millenium.

McGovern, of course, knows how bleak things are, and he also knows that his only hope of doing any better lies in capturing some of the larger states where Nixon's lead is an approachable 10 or 12 per cent. Let us therefore make a second prediction based on the Democrat's best possible showing. Start the candidate off with all three of the larger states in southern New England. Add New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania in the East, Minnesota and Wisconsin in the Midwest, and West Va. and D.C. in the Border Region. Pick up South Dakota on the trek to the coast, and from the Pacific include Washington and California. We can also throw in Hawaii. George McGovern would still fall short with 204 electoral votes to Richard Nixon's 334. Four more years, as the short hairs say.

In this second prediction George McGovern has been given every state that Hubert Humphrey carried in 1968, except for Michigan, Maryland and Texas which together have 57 electoral votes. In exchange, McGovern has been given four states that went to Nixon in 1968--New Jersey, Wisconsin, South Dakota and California which carry a total of 77 electoral votes. All of Wallaces 46 electoral votes gathered in the South have been given to the President, it being extremely unlikely that the South would go to McGovern. Southerners, slanders by Neil Young and other has-been minstrels aside, are far too dedicated to the traditional values to tolerate the likes of George McGovern who does nothing but poor mouth this country. If McGovern wants to pull an upset he will have to do it in the Midwest where his carrying of Michigan, Illinois and Ohio along with the other states already given him would squeeze him into the White House with 276 electoral votes, six more than needed. At present, however, this seems little more than a delirious sophomore's wet dream.

The total effect of the McGovern campaign has been to give the candidate a negativeness that is somewhat perplexing. Nixon being the one usually cast in the negative role. But more and more as McGovern focused his campaign on the mistakes and weaknesses of the American government and American society, he did seem to be poor mouthing the country. Ultimately his message became so pessimistic and degrading, that should it be accepted as truth, the only honorable course would be mass executions for the masters of present society and mass suicide for those whose unconscious imperialism, racism, sexism and other naughty behavior was a result of "conditioning."

Most Americans are simply too proud and guittless to engage in McGovern's campaign of self-flagellation. They feel no need to take part in experiments to test the latest sociological theories which threaten traditional values with a grotesque moral anarchism posing as freedom, and which allow frighteningly fecund welfare mothers to suck the blood from industrious workers. Finally, Americans do not want a president whose abhorrence of war is greater than his loyalty to the nation, right or wrong.

The President can not help but compare favorably with the McGovern image. Nixon's very rigidity and lack of complexity are positive attributes in a time when our society is becoming more complex and fluid. Moving steadily, confidently and resolutely he manages to give an appearance of continuity with the past by appealing to such virtues as order, discipline and authority. Most important, he speaks well of America, and the grateful Americans are leaning hard on the Republican oars.

University Theater Plans Fall Season

Unique adaptations of fiction and films for the stage, a timeless American classic, Shakespeare's comedy and tragedy, an innovative "Ensemble" concept and the exploration of theatre spaces are some of the highlights of the 1972-73 UMass Theatre season.

Ronald Ribman's The Journey of the Fifth Horse will open the Bartlett Auditorium season on November 9, 10, 11 and 16, 17, 18 under the direction of Harry Mahnken. The Journey of the Fifth House, adapted from Turgenev's "Diary of a Superfluous Man", was first produced in 1966 at the American Place Theatre and featured Dustin Hoffman, who won an Obie award as best actor for his portrayal of Zoditch, the central character. The play revolves around Zoditch's real world, his dream world, and the world opened up to him by another man's diary. These three world's interlock and interact.

Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer prize-winning Long Day's Journey Into Night will be presented on November 10, 11, 12, 15, 17, 18, 19 in the Memorial Room of Alumni Hall (opposite Bartlett) at 7:00 P.M. each night. O'Neill's intense, autobiographical study of his own family, "written in blood and tears", is directed by Marya Bednerik and features Bonnie Bishoff, who is completing her M.F.A. thesis in acting with her portrayal of Mary Tyrone.

Long Day's Journey Into Night will be presented in an actual living room rather than a traditional theatre. Because of this limited seating, the public is urged to purchase tickets in advance at the Bartlett box office. All seats for this play are $2.50.

The December production, Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew under the direction of Gary Stewart, will inaugurate a continuing series of "Ensemble Productions" by the University Theatre. The "ensemble" concept focuses attention chiefly on the actor and his art; thus, stage space, costume, properties and set pieces are neutral in character and essentially generalized extensions of the actor rather than particularizations of time and space. The "ensemble" form offers a stimulating and challenging experience for both the audience's imagination and the actor's artistry.

The Taming of the Shrew, Shakespeare's comment on the complexity and ambiguity of male/female relationships and roles, will be a free-form exploration of the text, using unusual visual, musical, and physical techniques. The play will be presented in Bartlett Auditorium on Dec. 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 at 8:30 P.M. Tickets for this and future "Ensemble" productions are $1.00 for UMass students with I.D. and $1.50 for the general public.

The first production of the second semester will be Frankenstein, adapted from novel and film versions and directed by Dallas Murphy (M.F.A. Directing Thesis production). Frankenstein will be presented at Bartlett Aud. on Feb. 15, 16, 17 and 22, 23, 24 at 8:30 P.M.

The second "Ensemble" production of the season (as yet untitled) will be directed by Paul Harrison .

The final production of the 1972-73 season will be Shakespeare's Macbeth, directed by M. James Young.

A Pilgrimage For Vietnam

By Nathan Gorenstein

It could have been 1962, an early northern civil rights rally, the people, all white, were the type that would have started and participated in one back then. It could have been an anti-war protest, of mid-Johnsonian vintage; the protestors on the town green, a few signs, the local people apathetic, but with a hostile look in their eyes.

But it wasn't. It was 1972, civil rights had changed to power and pride, and the war, despite changes in complexions and tactics, was still with us.

And the people were on the town green, in Derby Line, Vermont, for the seventh time in five years, 43 strong. Quakers, American Friends, from Amherst, Burlington and a kid from Indiana. It could have been years ago, it seems like decades ago, but eight men in pieces of combat fatigues were an unforgettable reminder that it was 1972, and that yes, the war had been going on for, well, whichever date strikes your fancy. 1954, when the French were taken at Dien Bien Phu, '58 when the Americans sent their first advisors in, or 1965, when the front pages of the newspapers were covered with blurry photos of "Communist!" torpedo boats, troops charging off landing craft onto sandy beaches and into jungles, memories of the last real war, when the country was always right and enemy wrong and we all know it. No one questioned and few cared to. How things have changed.

The leaflet was entitled a Pilgrimage for Vietnam. Eric of the VVAW brought it up to me and asked if the Collegian could cover it. I said yes and found myself the next Saturday morning parked in front of Whitmore waiting to go to Canada to cover a war protest.

There have been a lot of war protests, but this was perhaps one of the last by the people, or type of people who started them.

It was a crossing of the border by the Committee, the vets and American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker group. They were going to Derby Line, Vermont to give the Canadian Friends Service Committee $1000 to buy medical supplies with to send to South Vietnam, North Vietnam and the NLF. There was a dual purpose for going to Canada with the money. The American drug companies wouldn't sell drugs at cost, and giving the money to the Canadians for medical supplies for the "enemy" is illegal under the Trading with the Enemy Act.

Civil disobedience.

In the car I was riding in to Vermont that Saturday, there were three vets, all combat veterans, all there during the height of American involvement, 67 - 69. Each different, each united by an experience none but those who were there can understand, no matter how well the account is written or the imagination or empathy of the reader.

For six hours they talked about the war, where each had been, what they had done, did he know this bar, that cat house, what weapons they fought against and how they had their fun. There were not tales of atrocities or massacres, just daily occurences in a year of war.

Bringing a buddy and your M-6 to go into Da Nang to get laid, for there were VC in the jungle you had to cut through to get off the base unseen.

Of sitting out in a jungle at night, pinned down by the Viet Cong, calling in an air strike and remembering how nice the napalm looked at night, exploding and tumbling through the air. Remembering officers who told you to scout that valley or charge that position, and then sitting down and waiting for the survivors to return.

Of the ways you could wound yourself so you get out of combat but still live a normal life: A 45 between your toes, the medic who charged $50 for a bullet in the stomach that was guaranteed to get you back home, but with organs intact. Of the soldier who called in a medevac chopper, waited until he saw it then shot himself just as it was about to land.

A comment one made about TV violence. He said there should be more, but real violence, with guts hanging out and heads blown off, with blood and terror to show people what war is like. They scorned John Wayne and cosmetic wounds.

Perhaps they were telling themselves why they had come, on this Pilgrimage for Vietnam.

We reached Derby Line a few minutes after 2 p.m. Already there were 10 or 15 people gathered next to the town common waiting for five more carloads of Amherst people to arrive. Most of the vets walked into town to get something to eat, while the photographer and I tried to gather some information.

They were early Joan Baez people. Old time liberals, early supporters of civil rights, free speech, up here for one last shot. The people were friendly, but wouldn't talk, preferring to wait until Milton Mayer, the Amherst committee's spokesman came. One man, in his late fifties was putting the handles on two signs identifying the group. He was Marshall Smith, a carpenter from Whately. He said as he kneeled, pounding nails through the cardboard, the most people ever to attend a border crossing was 100 in 1967 or 68.

It was a cold, dark day. The leaves had turned and the few people waiting had their backs against the wind. It was almost a religious silence. They were here not for politics, but to see old friends and affirm the faith that was being torn by the multitudes. Most were Quakers, into peace not revolution, still believing in peaceful change and the power of goodwill. Their leaflet said, "We are proceeding in the faith that the spirit of giving to all victims of the war may directly help to relieve suffering and ultimately help to dissolve hostitilities. Our commitment transcends the barriers between men that have been raised by this war. Our action is based upon the conviction that no man is an enemy." It was a godly statement, and their spokesman looked like a prophet.

Milton Mayer, tall and rugged, balding grey hair with a short cropped beard, had the intensity of a man who believes fiercely in a cause, or injustice, only to see his actions in response ignored and inconsequential. He had to come and march across that border with that small sum of money. Yet he knew he would not even be allowed the dignity of an arrest. (Asked if thought there would be any trouble from the American customs officials, Mayer replied, "There won't be any objections, no one objects anymore.")

At 2:30 the group lined up next to the park and stood silent for 15 minutes. Then with nairy a word they turned and marched in a line towards the U.S. border station, 150 yeards to the north. As they left three children from behind a tree yelled, "There they go! Hooray!" To them it was just a parade.

At the U.S. border station Mayer walked in, handed the officials on duty a leaflet, told what the group was doing and asked if they objected. One man said no, but asked them all to stop in on the way back. Mayer nodded and stepped out. 10 feet out of the door one of the guards walked out and told him he had forgotten his leaflet. A vet said keep it, but Mayer turned and took it.

They kept walking, over a double yellow line in the road that marked the border, over a bridge spanning a creek between the U.S. and Canadian border stations, and into Canadian border station, to have their ID's checked.

A smiling French Canadian was there, glancing at licenses, asking what was going on, how long we would be in Canada, where were we from. Then three people came up who had no identification. That bothered him. He became an official and called down the immigration officer. An old man in a black overcoat, who had no time for humor, scowling when Mayer with grim humor said the three could be snuck back over the border under their overcoats. The immigration officer could not understand why the three had no identification. But they all got in, walked a half mile to a house behind an auto-body shop, set on a hill that overlooked a farming valley. Near the side door, a Canadian held a blue money bag. The Americans gathered around, dropping in fist fulls of bills. Pictures were taken, hands shaken, and we were all invited in for hot cider and cake.

It was very strange inside that house, but very warm and enjoyable. Everyone ate and was friendly, asked what each other did, where we came from, were we going back to Amherst today. Some politics was talked, but in a quiet, reserved way. Only once was Vietnam brought up, when a Canadian reporter asked the vets if any of them had been wounded. The vets paused for a moment, glanced at each other, and quietly answered yes.

The Policy of Whitewash In Southeast Asia

BY ED SMITH

The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia
Alfred W. McCoy with
Cathleen B. Read and Leonard P. Adams 111
Harper and Row

Political journalism is not an extremely difficult form to use in writing a book. However, to construct such a book in a manner that is presentable to the general public is a herculean task indeed. We are extremely fortunate at this time when there is so much speculation and doubt about the government of South Vietnam to be presented with a work such as The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia. Mr. McCoy handles the journalistic technique well in this scathing treatisie on corruption in government from Washington to Saigon. He attempts, in the space of some four hundred pages, to present the reader with the history of the international heroin trade in the post-World War II period. Considering the magnitude of the task, both in terms of readibility and meticulous documentation he has accomplished his goal; the goal being to pull together and substantiate all the lurking suspicions and fragmented reports which exist concerning where the flood of heroin which has entered the world market is coming from. He dispels many of the myths which the government and law-enforcement agencies of this country have so tenaciously and comfortably clung to and brings into the open how the present narcotics crisis has developed.

While I would urge everyone to read this book in order to get the complete picture of the situation, there are inevitably those who will not avail themselves of this opportunity. For that reason I would like to elaborate on three controversial issues which Mr. McCoy brings up in his book. The first is the misconception and continually perpetuated falsehood that Red China is the major exporter of illicit opium in the world. This is one of those myths which people find so comforting; along the lines of the communists are attempting to turn all those All-American kids into junkies in order for them to take over the country. Most of the accusations which have been levelled at the Chinese have come from Taiwan and until not too long ago, from Harry Anslinger, former head of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics. The Taiwanese have made some really fanatical accusations, an obvious attempt to make a case for not letting the Red Chinese into the U.S. Most of their accusations, as well as the ones from our own FBN, have named Hong Kong and Burma as the clearing houses for smuggling out these huge quantities of opium. If this is true, why does British customs report that not a single seizure of opium from China has been made since 1949? No matter how sly those Red Chinese may be, twenty-two years of supplying the majority of the world's opium without a single seizure is a bit too much to expect, even from those crafty communists. In Burma, where rebels in the Shan States are employed by the CIA to guard the border it would be impossible for any type of regular smuggling to take place. Although I don't claim to have a great deal of trust in the integrity of the CIA agents who serve as advisors there, it certainly would be a bit out of character for them to be covering up for the Red Chinese. The Federal Bureau of Narcotics now admits that Anslinger's accusations were completely without basis. They regret ever having allowed him to go on as he did, for now their credibility gap is so wide nobody believes a word they say.

The G.I. heroin epidemic is another issue which the U.S. government has been frantically attempting to whitewash. No. 4 heroin, the powdery white type preferred by addicts in the U.S. and the form most suitable for injecting had, before 1970, not been readily available to persons in South Vietnam. In 1969 and 1970 reports indicate that several heroin refinery laboratories capable of producing this high grade product were set up in the Golden Triangle (the area where Burma, Laos and Thailand converge) to cater to a huge consumer demand in South Vietnam. Needless to say, that demand was from American G.I.s who for a variety of equally obvious reasons, were desirous of large quantities of this brand of heroin. It would be impossible to explain in this short space exactly how the higher echelons of the South Vietnamese government are involved in this trafficking. Rather, I would like to explain how the people of this country have been misinformed as to the extent of the heroin problem among returning G.I.s. We all remember the assurances that were given the American public after the G.I. heroin story exploded in the press; that tests of G.I.s leaving Vietnam showed an extremely low proportion of them showing traces of heroin in urinalysis tests. Unfortunately, what they failed to tell us was that if an addict has not used heroin in the four to five days preceding the test it will not show up in analysis. There have been reports of addicts in the middle of withdrawal taking the test and being allowed to return to the U.S. without detoxification. Another weak excuse which was thrown out by the army, was that since most G.I.s smoke heroin they are "less addicted" than those who mainline. However, since Vietnamese heroin is 90-98% pure, smoking one vial of heroin there is equivalent to shooting up six hits of the stuff available in the U.S. The inevitable and tragic result of this type of incompetence has been to return thousands of men to their homes with a serious addiction who are left to fend for themselves. The army wants to get rid of them so that the name of the Armed Services is not dragged through the mud anymore than it already has been. Unfortunately, that leaves the U.S. with a constantly increasing flow of addicts who have been given no recourse but to steal to support an extremely expensive habit. So while our government pursues an honorable peace in Vietnam, they are overlooking a problem which threatens to destroy the fabric of American society. This may possibly be one of the things which people are referring to when they say the present administration has been a bit lax in matters of domestic policy.

Meo farmers and villagers of Long Pot village preparing the fields for poppy planting in fall 1971.

The role which the CIA has played in the international heroin situation is not easy to define. They have not actively encouraged the traffic, though at times out of political expediency they have assisted in certain legs of its transportation, rather it has been a sort of hands-off policy. The situation is really much too complex to give even a brief resume of, suffice it to say that it would be damaging to their interests in counter-insurgency operations to obstruct the traffic. A specific example of this is their relation to the Nationalist Chinese forces presently operating on the China-Burma border who have organized a virtual monopoly of the opium traffic in that area. The CIA, which supports and funds their military operations, has failed to obstruct the trafficking which they are involved in for fear of destroying the rapport which they have established with them. It is, in essence, the decision between supporting the domino theory or keeping heroin out of the hands of twelve year old children in New York City. It is reassuring to know that the government takes such good care of us.

The overall thrust of the book points to an increasing complicity by the U.S. government by its laissez-faire attitude towards corruption in the Thieu-Ky regime. While our government has repeatedly warned the South Vietnamese government that they better crack down or else, it is powerless when no action is forthcoming. McCoy offers some rather drastic, but necessary measures for stemming the flow of opium from Southeast Asia. He proposes that since 70% of the world's opium supply comes from Southeast Asia, the U.S. government should subsidize, at $50 a kilogram of opium, poppy farmers not to grow poppies. The program would cost approximately $50 million a year and since addicts in New York City presently steal $880 million this would be quite a bargain. He also proposes that the U.S. cut off all aid to those countries, other than this subsidy paid to the farmers, until there is a substantial reduction in the heroin traffic. Unfortunately, the author does not elaborate on the international repercussions of such an action, which would certainly be great. It would take a strong leader in the U.S. to take such an action and at the present there does not seem as though there is anyone on the horizon who would initiate such drastic steps.

After reading The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia one is left in a rather uncomfortable state of depression. The truth, in this case, is more gruesome than some of the wildest accusations which have been made. McCoy unfolds for you a nightmarish tale and keeps from making any substantial editorial comment until the very last chapter. It would be ideal if everyone could read this book before the coming election. It cuts through the propaganda and slanted views and presents very plainly what the situation is on this crucial issue. Like so many books of this kind though, it will be disregarded by those who so desperately need this type of jolt of reality. Those who persist in adhering to policies which have been proven time and time again to be ineffectual and inadequate in dealing with this problem. Heroin will not fade away like some type of bothersome fad. As long as we pretend that it does not exist or that it is not a truly serious problem, it will intensify. As Mr. McCoy points out, only when we accept the magnitude and the reality of the problem can we work towards solving it.

Dim Idea Makes For Dim-Witted Novel

By Carl Greenberg

The Stepford Wives by Ira Levin
Random House
145 pages $4.95

Everybody seems to be cashing in on the craze for the supernatural that Ira Levin helped create with Rosemary's Baby. We've had The Exorcist and The Other and now we have The Stepford Wives by Levin himself.

To be accurate, Wives is not actually concerned with the supernatural, but the same psychology is there: as much mystery, evil and scariness as possible. Also, in the modern scheme of things, it has to closely resemble a screenplay. ((The modern author lives off his movie rights, not his book's royalties. How many people would ever have heard of Clockwork Orange and Anthony Burgess had it not been for Stanley Kubrick?)

Anyway, it appears that Wives was written for the screen and with plenty of leeway for the director's interpretations, for there is virtually no depth to the characters. The book is plot only and such a thin plot that it is hardly more than an idea for a plot.

The idea is this: new couples move into the suburb of Stepford; the wives notice that the women of Stepford not only have no interests other than housework, but do the housework impeccably and with the professed aim of keeping the home for their husbands the best way they can; the new husbands join the only real social organization, the Men's Association, which, ominously, no woman has even seen the insides of.

The stereotypes of this book are ludicrous. The two women heroines who team up to try to discover the reasons for the Stepford strangeness both belong to NOW (National Organization Women?) which somehow is not a coincidence but part of the natural order of things. Both have the same "right" ideas concerning women's liberation, and have healthy, outside interests like tennis and one is a semi-professional photographer.

Of course, they exhibit the naivete of those in dangerous situations and we are obliged (or will be when it comes to the screen) to shout warnings to them. One by one the few sane women become like "them" and we soon begin to wonder who will come up with the answer and save them all.

One of the problems with the book as a mystery, is that it's not certain that Levin gives the right clues to the reader, or even if he knows what clues he has given. We know right from the start that it's within the Men's Association that the answers lie and that it's all a plot by the men. But, somehow, we don't know a hell of a lot more than that at the end of the book. All we are given are the cute gimmicks being used and the method in the madness. And even that is not made clear.

The book is short enough so that the reader can keep almost every clue in mind as he reads and even some clues which turn out not to be clues. And after we discover all the intricacies of the plot and have all the clues in their places, we find that we've got a lot less than we expected. The answer just does not come across as credible and the horror we were expecting doesn't quite make it. The women are killed, not tampered with. And it is certainly more horrible to be tampered with than to be killed.

As a mystery, the book is written backwards; we know too much to begin with. As a science fiction story, it is simply silly.

Finally, it is not even a good story. It could have been if Levin had stuck to a theme of psychological manipulation. Instead, the women are simply victims of technology and there is no hope at the end of the book for their eventual salvation. There can be nothing constructive to come out of it all because the only solution is the destruction of the technology and the men using it for evil purposes.

It is recognized that there is evil in the world. It is time to stop acting as though the only remedy is search and destroy. Let's go about it with intelligence for a change. The world is probably not so populated with idiots as Levin's Wives is.

Flo And Karen And Ed And The Blue Wall

By Don Glickenstein

"I'm doing nothing," growled Ed. "I thought my band would be more lucrative, so I quit the coffeehouse to devote more time to it."

Yes, the dulcifluous tones of Ed Vadnas and his Wednesday night coffeehouse -- those gentle harmonies that shook the Bluewall Cafeteria last year and started a folk music and bluegrass revival on campus -- are gone.

Now, it's the FLO AND KAREN SHOW, a fortnightly coffeehouse on Thursdays.

Flo Polansky and Karen Walsh, those "virgin whores of Melville" as an irreverant friend once called them, are Ed's hand-picked successors.

"We run things together," Flo explained, "But we never play together."

If opposites attract, then Flo and Karen are the rule, not the exception. Karen is the empirical one, quiet spoken and never ruffled. In contrast, Flo is always ebullient and emotional, bubbling over with enthusiasm; she is also a bit near-sighted. There is little mistake as to who the psych major is and who the aesthetics major is.

The girls met each other in a typically UMass fashion -- stumbling around during the first few weeks of their freshman year. Flo was walking by an open door in Melville House and heard a record playing. Striding in, she asked,

"What record is that?"

To which she was told,

"That's no record. That's my roommate. She's my built-in record."

Thus, Karen and Flo.

For the record (the archival record, that is), the first song Flo learned on the guitar was "Twist and Shove". That was in the eighth grade in Salem, Massachusetts. One thing led to another, and during high school, Salem was blessed with Flo's own Dial-a-Folk song, a fund-raiser for charity. Today, her interests have expanded to the banjo, violin, piano, and washtub bass, as well as her perennial guitar.

Karen's first song played on UMass soil was "In the Early Morning Rain". Indeed, she sang it in the early morning of a June night during her freshman orientation before an audience of six. From what historians can reconstruct, she was the only freshman who brought a guitar with her for the three-day session.

Steve Schmidt

The girls began their association with folk music at UMass by attending the now-defunct Hello Friend Folk Society. Founded when folk music seemed to be dying in the late 60s, Hello Friend was, for a couple of years, the only place in the Connecticut Valley where guitarists, song-writers, singers, and poets had an opportunity to perform before live audiences, and the only place where audiences could listen to un-bandish music over cider or coffee.

The performers at Hello Friend were artisans; they had practiced their art long before it became popular for every other high school kid to learn the difference between a riff and an arpeggio and join a group. They were the balladeers of the political 60s, the humorists, the observors of the human experience, rather than the articulators of a personal one.

When Hello Friend disbanded in 1970, several smaller, less exquisite coffeehouses were formed, among them, the Melville Coffeehouse. Run by Karen and Flo, it featured less polished players in a more informal atmosphere, although some of the masters from the old Hello Friend often contributed their performances.

The next two years saw a proliferation of these localized cabarets -- Mirkwood on the Hill, Country Comfort in the Quad, Patterson in Southwest, the Newman Center. The establishment of the Amherst Folklore Center in May, 1971, and Ed Vadas' Wednesday Night Coffeehouse in the Campus Center that fall, gave a boost to the diluted folk scene in the area.

And in the midst of the new generation of musicians were Flo and Karen, meeting new performers, keeping in contact with old ones, and occasionally, playing on their own. They taught a colloquium on beginning guitar in Southwest, kept up the Melville Coffeehouse, and even taught guitar in the Hampshire County Jail.

In contrast to Ed Vadas' free wheeling, often bawdy stage, Flo and Karen are trying to make their Thursday Night Coffeehouse a little quieter, a littler closer.

"The audience is usually pretty rude", Flo explains. "We like it to quiet down and thus provide a better atmosphere for the musicians."

Vadas himself seems to agree with the girls' new directions. During opening night, he was seen giving them some helpful hints for successful house management.

"Move the tables so the assholes can stay in back. The interested people will gravitate toward the front. Don't bend down to the speaker; bring the speaker up to you."

"Eddie," charms Karen, "You look so different without a beard."

The performers, most of them relative unknowns, are not deficient in talent. Frank Clark is the whiskey-toting country blues guitarist extrodinaire. Chuck Ortolani and Rich Perkins are the Chad Mitchell trio reincarnated, singing original songs, and never failing to get an audience moving with "Charlie on the MTA". The people cry, "Sing Mr. Bojangles", whenever Chuck Hallberg comes forward with his 12-string guitar. There is bluegrass and blues, Dylan songs and Joni Mitchell.

The Bluewall Coffeehouse is different this year. Unlike past crowds which used to come to drink and laugh with Ed, this year's audience will come to listen to music and talk quietly over a beer or coffee.

The Vadas era popularized acoustic music; the era of Flo and Karen will preserve its quality.

Two Artists At Optic

Two artists with similar backgrounds but radically different approaches to their art will have a show of their works opening at the Optik Gallery, 49 South Pleasant Street, Amherst, Massachusetts, on Wednesday, November 1. The public is invited to attend the reception for the artists which will be Wednesday evening, 7-9.

Thomas Cornell, currently of the art faculty of Bowdoin College, will show his drawings, etchings, and engravings. With these classical media Cornell creates predominantly figurative images. Acclaimed "astonishingly brilliant" by the director of the National Portrait Gallery of the Smithsonian in Washington, D.C., and "remarkable" by John Canaday of the New York Times, Cornell achieved national prominence in 1960 when he won the New England Drawing Competition First Prize.

Edward Hill, Smith College Associate Professor of Art, will present for the first public viewing "In Times of Peril," a portfolio of 14 poems and images created and published by the artist. In addition he will show photographs and assemblages. Over the past five years Hill's work has evolved from figurative images in traditional media to more abstract images in new and inventive media.

Born in Springfield, Hill studied at the Rhode Island School of Design and Yale Graduate School of Art and Architecture. In 1969 he was a visiting professor at Dartmouth College. He has participated in many group shows here and abroad. He has had numerous one man shows, of which one of the most significant was at the Walter Vincent Smith Museum in Springfield in 1971. The show was not only the museum's most controversial event of the year, but also its greatest critical success. Hill has won a number of important awards including a MacDowell Colony Fellowship, Louis Comfort Tiffany Grant, and a National Institute of Arts and Letters Award (another winner that year was Thomas Cornell). Hill's The Language of Drawing was published in 1967.

The show will run until November 28 when Optik's Christmas Show will open. Optik is open Tuesday until Saturday, 10-5.

The World Series: A Dying Drama

By Mark Vogler

The "Grand American Game" is now the "Bland American Game." Baseball, the No. 1 American past time in former years is but a dying memory to most--except for its avid enthusiasts and sports writers.

True, to those Americans who are totally engrossed with baseball lore and the many thrills and chills it brings in the course of a 162-game season, the game is still the same. Every new season is another chapter to add in the great story book which is forever enshrined in the halls of Cooperstown.

Babe Ruth

Every Major Leaguer who dons a cap and goes out on that field to play is one of a cast of thousands who have brought 20th century theatrical entertainment to new heights--on the sport scene instead of the stage.

When baseball is at its best, fans will troop out to the ball parks to root their favorites on. In the old days those who were not fortunate to get inside the cramped ball parks, managed to follow their team one way or another.

Before TV and radio came on the scene, it was not an uncommon sight to see hundreds of people herd around huge score boards located outside of news buildings.

A telegraph operator inside would report each play coming over the wire. The crowd would wait attentively for the messenger boy to dash up to the score keeper with the latest word on the game.

Times Square was just a spectacle in the midst of a baseball season. Up until the early 40's, thousands of spectators would congregate outside the old Times building, keeping a watchful eye on the scoreboard.

Yes, pennant fever in the good old days would make or break a big league city. You didn't have to be a fan to be caught up in the craze that the "Grand Old Game" created. Even grandma's ears opened up to the mention of the Babe, Gehrig, Walt Johnson and other diamond greats.

It wouldn't take much to trigger a bar room brawl when the stakes were high. Oh, was it bedlam when a major league championship laid on the line between rival cities--or better yet, A CITY!

Yes, indeed. The oddity of a World Series being decided in the confines of one city has occurred eight times in modern baseball history. Chicago was torn apart in the first intra-city war in 1906. St. Louis staged a championship duel in 1944. And New York played host to the series several times: '21-'23, '36-'37, and '51.

To people in baseball land, pennant races are just warm-ups. The teams have always played a long and laborious schedule in order to work toward the pinnacle of success--that ultra climax--the World Series. That's the way it has always been. Or has it?

World Series time is here again and October madness is no longer manifested the way it used to be. While the Oakland Athletics and Cincinnati Reds went at it for the World Championship this week, many folks viewed it as a common bore.

"Who do you pick to win the series?" was the common question asked many times over last week. "Who's playing?" was not an uncommon response.

Wait a minute! How can anybody whoever has come in contact with the game of baseball ask who is competing in America's famed sports spectacle? Is not baseball our national past time?

You'd think that when the age of mass media came into being, people who were not yet hypnotized by the power of the great game, would be somewhat better informed.

Nowadays, baseball seasons are broadcasted in their entirety over radio stations in the respective big league locals. TV coverage increases in both quality and volume yearly. National telecasting has brought not only the World Series into the living rooms of millions of Americans, but it has also brought them such bargains as NBC's Game of the Week, plus complete coverage of the Playoffs and the All-Star game.

Jackie Robinson

You would think that such oversaturation would have a positive effect on baseball. Yea, it has a positive effect on baseball allright--baseball's economy.

The media serves as baseball's big source of revenue. The networks pay huge sums for telecasting rights, not to mention the big league stars who profit from countless commercials.

So what does the fan get from all of this? Supposedly the game is better analyzed for him. All he has to do is sit back in an arm chair and relax. TV will do the rest.

By turning his television set on this week, the sports fan (Who else) will be able to view elaborate pre-game shows, a most accurate play-by-play description and account of each game right down to the most minute detail, and last but not least, a concise, but critical rehashing of the game.

The sports fan, in affect, is actually narcotized by this over selling of the sport through the media. It may be the case that he's better informed. But it's a more accurate assessment to say that he is programmed.

Today's baseball fan is indeed a passive one. There are still the old vintage of fan around who try to attend most of the games. But it's more convenient and less expensive to turn down the season ticket pass in favor of a nice, cozy chair, a bottle of brew, and a bag of pretzels.

In the meantime, a part time sports fan may get bored to death of all this definition and repetition. He soon cops out, and declines to witness even the big daddy of all sporting events. This is why quite a few average Americans don't even know who's playing this week. They've decided to turn off because they've had a little too much. Baseball to them has become a four-letter word: a BORE. Obviously the Grand Old Game just ain't what it used to be.

Lou Gehrig

But for those who continue to glue their eyes and ears to the TV set, all is well. Perhaps football, a game better tailored for the screen, can say the same and more. For football now ranks higher in fan popularity than baseball. Shouldn't football then earn the title of "national past time"?

Fortunately for the media's sake, there are other underlying causes for the dying drama. For one thing is the change in attitude of the player. Sure, they play to win. They play because they love the game. They play for personal satisfaction. But money enters in more strongly as a playing motive than in times past.

Don't kid yourself, baby. Oakland and Cincinnati aren't just playing for the love of the game and prestige this week. As TV sports commentator Curt Gowdy would say "They're playing for thousands of dollars. There's a lot of money on the line this week."

But was it always this way? It's without question that baseball players have always received a good wage for their lively hood. Generally speaking, baseball was always considered a fairly decent standard of living. But never before have they been overpaid as today.

Take the case of the 1919 Chicago White Sox. During that time and even now, the White Sox of then were considered among the top teams that ever took the field.

Eight standout players were offered a grand sum of $100,000 to blow the World Series to the Cincinnati Reds--which they did. The following year, news finally broke of the great "Black Sox" Scandal, and the eight players were suspended and barred from baseball for life. This had a grave impact on the game and nearly cost it the faith of the fans.

The strong emphasis on monetary gains today is indeed threatening to baseball. Players can name their price, and if not satisfied, can go home to mama. Controversial trades upset the team structure and may often cause a big stink amongst the fanfare.

Then you can take Curt Flood's point of view. Should a player be handled like a piece of real estate? Absolutely not. He's as human as anybody else.

The playoffs seems to have done something to baseball, making the World Series into an anti climax. The season is all ready much too long--stretching over a span of six months.

In the series, one hopes to see the best of the National and American Leagues collide. But this possibility is uncertain as proven this year. Anything can happen in that short series. The Pittsburgh Pirates are the best of the N.L. But look who's playing against Oakland.

There are other minor causes of the decline of baseball. And it's rather unfortunate that baseball must take the rap. The World Series is not really as dull as it seems. The drama, the suspense, the excitement, and the frustration are still there to be found.

Since 1952, 12 World Series have gone the full seven games. What could be less dull?

The series during the modern media era have been far from dull. The unpredictable has happened many times. Take the case of the 1960 Yankees. They established World Series records for most runs and team batting average (.338). And although they outscored the Pirates 55 to 27, they lost the series in the ninth inning of the seventh game on a homer by Bill Mazeroski. That's unimaginable.

Whitey Ford

Way back in 1914, it was unimaginable that the old Boston Braves, who were mired in last place in the N.L. by 15 games on the 4th of July, would magnanomously rebound to capture the flag by 10-1/2 games. They then went to shellack Connie Mack's powerful Philadelphia Athletics in a four-game sweep of the Series. It wasn't dull then.

1969 wasn't dull either when the New York Mets turned a comparable feat of the supernatural. Gil Hodge's clowns went from the depths of the rugged National League in one season to a 4-1 series victory over a powerful Baltimore team.

You can't say that it wasn't exciting to see the Pirates come from a two game deficit last year to surprise Baltimore. And while we're one track-minded on Baltimore, who would ever think that the Orioles would have beaten Koufax, Frysdale & C. four straight in '64. Does this oore you?

Sandy Koufax

They say that the individual feats of series stars aren't as great today as in decades past. What about the great World Series pitching performances turned in by Whitey Ford, Bob Gibson, and Koufax? What about the nifty glove of the human vacuum cleaner--Brooks Robinson. Maris and Mantle always put on a good show in the fall classic.

Earlier, it was said that the World Series is a dying drama. The drama will always be wrapped up in that fall classic showdown. But the wide audience appeal is diminishing. It will never be the same unless media straightens itself out (which is doubtful).

Baseball, taken in its natural context and in proper moderation is not dull. It is rather the substructure which makes it appear to be dull. The work of the media is to be greatly commended for the damage that has been inflicted.

So, just as you are enjoying the World Series on color TV with super analysis, you may not even tune in next year. Overindulging is bad even when it comes to dramas. Media men, back off a little and give the actors some breathing room. It won't be such a dull show.

By Kenneth Sulin
(Discover America; Van Dyke Parks, Reprise Records)

Maybe you've never heard of Van Dyke Parks, maybe you have, in any case his name has consistently plagued the minds of Warner Brothers' employees and for good reason. Parks, in 1968, released his first solo album entitled Song Cycle which, from a monetarial point of view, was a bomb. Cycle sold probably 15 copies across the nation but ironically became the recipient of such great appraisal that one couldn't understand its reaons for poor sales production. In fact, Song Cycle was voted the album of the year by many respectable publications yet what does someone like Parks do in such a situation?

During the interim Van Dyke has produced and co-produced albums of similar stature, he's composed songs and played as a backup musician; now finally we've been given Parks' second album entitled Discover America which is a magnificent sequel to the short-lived Song Cycle.

Cycle was an album entirely of synthesisor recordings, earnestly composed and tremendously relevant to the music of the '60's. At long last comes a second contribution, an opposite ray concerning Parks' new role of musician, not songwriter, not producer but solely musician. There are sixteen selections contained on the album none mind you, of Parks' hand rather all tunes have been written by relatively obscure people whom Van Dyke has decided "may finally get what they've deserved for a long while."

Van Dyke Parks has stated that his main concern is with the termination of species, synthetic species of sort such as Greyhound buses, tuba players and steel bands. In fact, the brilliance of this album is brought out with the Esso Trinidad Steel Band which performs the backing context of the record.

Steel Bands are of a curious nature in that they originated, yes, on the small island of Trinidad in a most unfashionable manner. It seems the tiny isle had succombed to a ravenous withdrawal of oil during the war years and consequently were left only with oil drums. The various musicians of the island converted these pans into tympani thus leading to the birth of steel bands.

What Parks has done is collaborate the efforts of the steel band with those of the slightly overlooked compositions, tritely, "killing two birds with one stone."

The music is probably like none you've every heard before. Contemporary songs done in a rythmic Calypso involvement characterize the supervision of the album's sides. The songs are interwoven with sweet airy female voices, Latin tonal structures and of course the vocal leads of Mr. Parks.

You may be alarmed at the dips and troughs of content which range from "The Stars And Stripes Forever" to "Franklin Roosevelt In Trinidad"; composers stretch from Lowell George to John Phillip Sousa. Nevertheless each song aptly compliments any astounding features another may emit, further displaying the complexity and creativeness of one Van Dyke Parks.

Can you honestly listen to Discover America and appreciate its intricacies? Yes, but don't expect to do so the first or second time around. The divisions of Parks himself reflect an immaculate incorporation ironies, symbolisms and paradoxes and what's more, he's produced this in musical form.

From Song Cycle to Datsun commercials to Discover America, Parks has as the saying goes, "lived and learned." He's fancied this and been honored at the but will always be motivated by his perpetual concern for the ingredients of mankind. To understand Van Dyke Parks' music is to understand the person himself and vice versa. In any respect he has incorporated his beliefs and emotions in musical sophistication comparing themes of past and present history with classical assemblage. Discover America is appropriately titled, that is, possibly one can discover what America may really be about with the help of Van Dyke Parks.

Mark Almond – Crazy Horse

By Mike Kostek

RISING/ Mark-Almond, Columbia KC 31917 time 40:20
AT CROOKED LAKE/Crazy Horse, Epic KE 31710 time 34:58

Here are two bands that share very similar backgrounds, but make very different music. Both bands got their start backing up a famous solo performer (John Mayall, Neil Young resp.); both have just released their third albums; both have received little attention; both have just switched labels; both are less than dynamic on stage; both have a future that is, at best, doubtful, for neither band has, after three albums, justified its existance.

Third albums are critical in proving a group's worth. By the time a group gets around to recording a third album, especially with a national label, they've got enough experience and awareness to put together a good album if they've any talent at all. Certainly a group that has shown little or nothing after three albums is very unlikely to blossom on later recordings.

Crazy Horse and Mark-Almond are marginally successful bands that are on the brink of oblivion. Crazy Horse, who used to be on Reprise, was actually cut from the squad and signed as free agents by powerful rival Columbia for less than the waver price. Although it is not known for certain what lies behind Reprise's dissatisfaction with one of its former budding stars, it's believed that the Horse's last effort, Loose, was such an all-out disaster that Reprise unloaded the boys despite their fine first effort, Crazy Horse. After all, if they were no so hot, why did All-Pro Neil Young leave them? Mark-Almond, on the other, is believed to have made their own deal in jumping from, second division Blue Thumb to Epic, a strong farm team of Columbia's. This band has had about a .500 record so far with two so-so efforts, Mark-Almond and Mark-Almond II. Seasonal outlook and forecast: Crazy Horse down and out rather quickly, while I look for Mark-Almond to slip below .500, losing points for unoriginality and lack of strength in vocals and writing departments.

If you were a Mark-Almond fan before, you'll like Rising for it's the same old gameplan: quiet mood music that often lapses into silence; overblown lyrics sung off-key by a whispering Jon Mark; Much flute and accoustic guitar played most sweetly; Very nice background music. And of course, one of two up-tempo numbers that are usually much better than the others.

If you like Cat Stevens, but think he sings and plays much too rawnchily, or think that he deals with too many subjects improper for a person of your high tastes, Rising is for you too.

Not that it's all bad; "What Am I Living For" is a fairly nice, quiet blues dilemma, and "Riding Free" is a nice Osibisa-style rocker. For those keeping score: Kenny Craddock has replaced Tommy Eyre on keyboards and Colin Gibson, bass guitarist, replaces Roger Sutton.

At Crooked Lake is an impossibly flawed and empty album with almost nothing of note on it.

The trouble is the material: it's rotten. It is now apparent that the brillance of their first album was supplied by Danny Whitten, Jack Nitzsche and the star side men (Ry Cooder, Nils Lofgren) who sat in. Whitten, Neil Young & Nitzsche wrote almost all of the material, while Ralph Molina and Billy Talbot had but to play their drums and bass. Time's gone by, and so have everyone but Molina and Talbot. Imported into the group since then is Greg LeRoy, guitar, and Mike & Rick Curtis, rhythm guitar and keyboards. And so, exactly like the mess that now passes for the group called Spirit, Crazy Horse is totally changed. Nine of the ten songs were written by the new crew, and all ten are sung by them. Possibly the fact that none of these three newcomers has any talent in singing or writing has something to do with the poorness of At Crooked Lake.

If you like bland country-rock songs filled with steals from other songs such as "Teen Angel", or you like country soul sung by warbling city boys, this is for you.

There is too much other fine stuff on the market for us to be wasting our time with these two losers. These are two rank albums from artists who appear to be in artistic holding patterns, but, like Spirit and the Moody Blues, holding patterns loaded with bad music.

John Coltrane

By Frank Johnson

John Coltrane:
INFINITY
Impulse/ABC records AS-9225

No discussion of modern jazz, perhaps even modern music, would be complete without John Coltrane. Responsible for much of what is today taken for granted, Coltrane brought innovation to progressive jazz at a time when many considered it moribund. He has been venerated by almost every major jazz musician who realizes the heritage left by Coltrane's atonal experiments with the saxophone, and recently Coltrane has been eulogized for his contributions to the black community's self-awareness.

Born in 1926, Coltrane devoted much of his life to music, although his impact was not felt until the late 1950's. It was at that time that his talent was noticed by jazz producer Bob Thiele. Thiele encouraged Coltrane to make many recording sessions (with McCoy Tyner on piano, Jimmy Garrison on bass, and Roy Haynes on drums) for Atlantic and Impulse records, and the John Coltrane quartet played to an appreciative audience at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1960. It was at the Festival that Coltrane did a memorable interpretation of Rogers and Hammerstein's "My Favorite Things", which has been featured on several Coltrane records under a number of different labels.

Coltrane's original style resembled many other groups such as David Brubeck and Bill Evans, except that even in his earliest recordings there lies a certain restlessness in his dominant saxophone, an impatience that suggests condescension towards his audience. John Coltrane was too much of an innovator to give the crowds what they wanted; he thought that much in the way of modern music was archaic and that there were new possibilities to explored. In 1963 he released an album, "Impressions", that acknowledged his impatience. It was a transition between two different types of music. Heretofore Coltrane sounded like many others; with the advent of this album, he started to sound like himself.

But in 1963 he had only four more years to live. Like many jazz musicians, John Coltrane got into drugs as a means of augmenting his musical experience, and it began to show up in his work and life styles. A year later he acknowledged a profound religious experience in "A Love Supreme", which is considered by many to be his richest and finest album, but only in the sense that it contains much of the mastery in his earlier works. After "A Love Supreme", Coltrane's style broke up and became more diffuse. His later albums, "Expression" and "Ascension", are a descent into atonal mediocrity. Members of his original group moved on to form different groups of their own. Finally, in 1967 John Coltrane died; like W.A. Mozart and Franz Schubert, much of his work lay unfinished.

Recently, however, many record companies made releases of earlier Coltrane recordings, ABC taking the lead in this respect. With the aid of Alice Coltrane, John's widow, new arrangements have been made to highlight Coltrane's genius. It seems as though Coltrane lives on, for about every six months some new anthology of his music appears on dealers' shelves. Like that of the late Jimi Hendrix, some of this proves disappointing. "Sun Ship" was such a release. Others, like "Infinity" (his latest), are merely uneven.

Alice Coltrane has proved to be every bit as competent a musician as her deceased husband. Not only is she an accomplished pianist, but she plays a virtuoso harp, and on this album she tries her hand at string arrangements. Her influence to her husband's harsh, impatient style is gentle and unifying. Without Alice Coltrane, "Infinity" would be a disaster. The theme of John Coltrane's saxophone was mixed with his wife's string arrangements last April, and the new album features moments of subjectively fine music.

There are only four songs on "Infinity"; in order of their appearance, they are: "Peace On Earth", "Living Space", "Joy", and "Leo". Of these, the finest and most innovative is "Living Space", which gives McCoy Tyner the attention of a pianist deserves. Tyner's efforts, plus the homogeneous strings, come off very well. "Peace On Earth" functions as an introductory piece, and while Alice Coltrane's harp is plucked beautifully, it gets a bit repetitive. "Leo" lacks Coltrane's cohesiveness, but features some interesting arrangements with the aid of Pharoah Sanders, playing both his usual saxophone and flute. It suffers a careless and disjointed start, however, and like "Joy", it never fully recovers. "Joy" is the least interesting of these four pieces because its long bass solo sounds identical to the one in "A Love Supreme", and Coltrane's saxophone sounds tired.

Thus, this new release has glimmers of Coltrane at his earlier peak, but much of its music lies in the shadows of his later years. Listening to it, one gets the impression that the essential John Coltrane disappeared a long time ago. An analogy with Tim Hardin may be offered, in the sense that his best music was performed before his involvement with drugs. Qualitatively speaking, although Tim Hardin can hardly be compared to John Coltrane, there is no denying that his drug experiences interfered with both his personal life (his wife divorced him) and his music. While Alice Coltrane in her own right is a competent musician, one feels she should play her own style and not try to revive the questionable music performed in her late husband's last, torturous years.

The Kinks

"You sing 'em the blues
And then they ask for a happy tune
And when you smile they'll say
Gimme dat rhythm and blues,
So when you give em dat rythm and blues
they'll simply smile and say
We didn't like you anyway.
It's very hard to please the people
every single time
So look a little on the sunny side.
—R.D. Davies

There is a school of critical thought that views an artist's most recent work in the context of how it relates or more to the point, how it compares with their previous material. This sort of tactic certainly has a valid role, but those who would use it as a base of criticism do the artist an injustice, especially in modern music. The record album is an artificial medium which constricts the natural creative flow. The musician's development is constant and linear, where albums are purely commercial groupings of material, (with some noteworthy exceptions). For example, Abbey Road preceeds Let it Be in album chronology but it's material was much newer than the latter's. Albums should finally be judged on their own merits.

Everybody's in Show-Biz is the latest from the Kinks and you're going to be hearing a lot about how it's a comeback from the mediocre Muswell Hillbillies set or it doesn't have the power of Arthur or Lola but take it all with a grain of salt, folks. What it is is another chapter in the ongoing saga of Raymond Douglas Davies, continental bon vivant and head honcho of this band of sodden Londoners. For it is strictly Ray's show; we put the weight on him and he carries it effortlessly, if offhandedly.

This is a two record set, one studio material and the other recorded live. The live Kinks are not everyone's cup of tea, for sure, and neither will this record be. I saw them in Boston a few days after this was recorded and the audience was at a loss for reactions. There is Davies omnipresent and self-confessed fondness for the brew that made Milwaukee famous, but it is a truly loveable vice in this case, not the malevolent boozing that characterized Jim Morrison's on-stage attitude. More discomforting for some is Ray's vaudevillian personna and his fondness for caberet - style performances. The Kink's have a lot of fun when they perform, and for them that includes the likes of "Baby Face", "Banana Boat Song", and "Mr. Wonderful", all vampish, all dripping with sentiment, all on this album, and all a gas, gas, gas! But only if you can dig it. Also cut from the same cloth are "Holiday", the aptly titled "Acute Schizophrenia, Paranoia Blues" and the classic "Alcohol", all from Muswell Hillbillies and all benefitting from livelier readings than they received on that album. Especially "Alcohol", where Ray brings the crowd to crocodile tears with the universal tale of the poor bloke who is led down that well known path of degradation by the old demon and a heartless floozy. Tragic.

The rockers are here too, "Top of the Pops" and "Brainwashed" but they run against the tone of the set. If the bill of fare sounds a bit light for your taste, pick up "The Live Kinks", which is not only a superb period piece but mainline rock and roll, now only $1.99 at your local cut out bin.

The studio album opens with "Motorway" a delightful stroll down America's byways and a tune that endears itself to all of us poor souls who have ever gazed sadly upon a $1.79 serving of limp hamburgers and watery colas at a Ho-Jo's or other such establishment. Musically, this is country-rock as few American bands can seem to master it, smooth and loose, with just enough punch to keep it moving.

In "Supersonic Rocket Ship", Ray utilizes a bouncy Carribean rhythm to enhance a neat little appeal to our space fantasy that leaves Kantner's pseudo-serious banter way behind:

"On my supersonic rocket ship
Nobody has to be hip
Nobody has to be out of sight...
It ain't no magic, ain't no lie
You'll laugh so hard you'll cry."

"Celluloid Heroes" closes the side and sums up the theme of the album:

"Everybody's a dreamer and everybodys a star
And everybodys in movies, it doesn't matter who you are."

And as the ad says, dearies "This is not just the old 'We will all be famous for 15 minutes' fandango either." This is the real thing. Try it for yourself. There won't be a dry eye in the house, I'll betcha.

I could go on and on but there's no point. The music is strong enough to stand on its own feet. Of all the accepted super-stars of songwriting, Ray Davies has the least turkeys to his credit of any I know. Prolific and consistent, with a variety of style and concept that is really amazing.

Anyway you choose, you gotta lei .his skinny boy into your life.

At The Folklore Centre

"John Herald's musicianship and constantly exciting performance was refreshing to see. He made a solid name for himself with the Greenbrier Boys, now with his own group he will be hard to beat. . ."
—John O'Connor

John Herald is a careful man. He takes his time getting things right. Whether it's writing a new song, working up a new guitar lick or choosing musicians to back him up, John won't show it to you until he's sure it's right. So when he's ready to go on the road-on his own this time-backed by a hand-picked group, you know something's going on.

While John was with the Greenbrier Boys he played every major festival, club and road house that would have them. They recorded a set of albums for Vanguard which helped get the word out. Along the way he gained a reputation as an outstanding musician, performer, and songwriter. He wrote a few songs such as "Stewball" and "High Muddy Waters" and got them recorded by folks like Joan Baez, Peter, Paul and Mary, and Linda Ronstadt. As word of his guitar playing spread he was asked to record with artists such as Ian and Sylvia, Tom Rush, Baez, and Buffie St. Marie.

John could feel something happening so he decided to lay low for a while. He settled into his ole house in Woodstock and began to work on new material and a fresh approach to the country style of music that he loved. He jammed a lot with friends around Bearsville and Woodstock, performed a bit with Happy and Artie Traum and wrote them a few songs to record. Aside from harvesting wild mushrooms, there was nothing to do but make music. Life was not treating him badly.

It was during a break between mushrooms and music that John happened to read a bit in Rolling Stone which referred to him as a "Contemporary legend." That was it-time to move out of the woods-can't have people calling you a legend at 28?

So here comes Johnny Herald, teamed up with some crazies at No SOAP Music, careful but sure, about to record his first solo album and out there with a fine back-up band. It's about time!

Riff Riff, Whiff Whiff

By Mike Kostek

In Concert: Jethro Tull/Gentle Giant, Oct. 16, 1972, Springfield Civic Center.

"Which one's Tull?" asked my friend Dave, who knows better. We were watching five figures scurrying about the stage, dressed in overcoats, setting up the equipment. The question is an apt one, for the Jethro Tull that played the Civic Center last Monday was a very different band from what they were two years ago. In 1970 I saw them twice and could hardly believe how good they were. They were innovative, daring, exciting and thoroughly enjoyable. Ian Anderson leapt about like a demon while the band threw out great, great music, with subtle, cutting multi-rhythms that always came out fresh. It was beautiful, with Anderson doing incredible things on stage, and the band behind him playing incredibly well. All too much. It was a perfect blend of power rock and beautiful melodies as they rolled through tunes from This Was and Stand Up. And here is the difference. Beginning on Benefit and keeping on through Aqualung and Thick As A Brick, Anderson has stopped writing songs with distinct melodies and he's written almost every song since around a riff, one per song. Making all this worse, the types of riffs are much the same, all dense, hard, tight, crowding out everything else. These monoliths have become the dominant force in every song. Now Pete Townshend and Ray Davies, two of the best riff writers, know you just can't do that. Mark Farner and Jimmy Page don't know that.

So what's been done since Benefit is Martin Barre playing loud loud rhythm guitar throughout every song, while the only counterpoint or wisp of melody is made by Anderson's singing which comes out rather weak. Whereas Clive Bunker was always all over the drums during each song, driving away, adding more rhythms to the song, Barrimore Barlow, the new drummer, does little but bash along with Barre's heavy guitar rhythms. To be sure, John Evan is a fine keyboard player who does get some good licks in, and Barre can indeed, when unleashed, play some interesting guitar. But it's the music as a whole that suffers. It just isn't as complete or as satisfying as before. Almost all of the tunes on Stand Up (can't really really call anything on Benefit, Aqualung, or Thick As A Brick a tune) are perfectly put together. Melody, lyrics, musical direction, instrumental breaks all fit together perfectly as a complete piece. On the later works, Anderson has used riffs for the power of riffs, whether they fit or not. They are certainly there but they serve no purpose in the intent of the song. Now a riff can be excellent when used correctly, provided it fits. "Locomotive Breath" is a terrific (ter-RIFF-ic) song because all the parts fit. You know, locomotive really goes with a repeated power riff that grabs the listener and traps him on board. The riff expresses Anderson's intent perfectly. But what does the riff used in "Aqualung" have to do with that seedy old bum? Why is "My God" set against that hard riff? No, riff cannot solve every song's problems. And of course, "Thick As A Brick" suffers mightily from this same stultification. It's like novacain after awhile. It's a lot easier to write a riff than a good melody, and I can't help noticing that Ian has many more fans that ever before, all lusting for those good, easy to groove to riffs. Unfortunately, none of them are that good. I'm sure people will be playing Stand Up long after Aqualung is forgotten.

So it was on Monday night a battle of the band vs. its own material.

A few words about the Civic Center: why only six turnstyles for 7500 people? And ticket distribution is poor. My cousin had to stand in line for hours for our ducats.

A six-piece English band, Gentle Giant, started off with some loose King Crimson-Yes-Tull stylings, and showed little of interest.

Jethro started off with the popping-out-of-trenchcoats trick, after masquerading as plebian stage hands, and started playing under cover of heavy smoke, which was a pretty good trick. As the band started "Thick As A Brick" it quickly became apparent that Ian was, shall we say, uninspired. I'm sure he's been playing enough concerts to make anyone sick of the Brick, but he dragged tail all night. The bored performer of Monday was far, far removed from the engaging showman of 1970 who looked like he couldn't wait to show us what he could play. In 1969, a reporter at the Newport Jazz Festival asked Ian what all the leaping about was for. "Money" said Ian. Now that he's got lots of it, maybe he doesn't have to work so hard for it. Or perhaps an off-night.

In any case, it seems that the band had planned for a less than incredible Ian Anderson, for there were many tricks and gags included in the performance. Phone calls for Lloyd Bridges, a non-rabbit interview, the six o'clock news and many more. There was never a need for them before, but they needed them Monday.

There was generous and well-done use of a synthesizer and a fantastic twenty second use of a strobe light. Also impressive was the musical transition from side one to side two of "Thick" during which the band left the stage but that loud NERT NERT NERG kept eerily playing on.

The band labored mightily, but they failed to bring life to the stiff piece. Not quite a perfunctory performance, but not too far from it.

"And now for our second number", said Ian after an hour and a half of the Thick Brick, "Another overproduced debacle". They lit into "Cross-Eyed Mary" and did the usual Aqualung medley. Only once, during "Locomotive Breath", did the band breathe the fire of old. Ian actually looked like he was coming out of his evening-long nod. He leapt about. He ran here, he ran there. The crowd started really going nuts. But it was a brief flurry, as the band retreated again to the stiff, cardboard slogging with "Aqualung". With each familiar song the sell-out crowd cheered, but during the evening Ian and the guys trotted out four distinct new numbers that got absolutely no response, but was little change from their other material. Sad to say, they were more of the same, ground out from the riffactory. The first was really awful, two were fair instrumentals, while the fourth was stolen from "I Will Follow Him" ("He will always be my true love, my true love, my true love. . .").

The medley ended and the crowd wanted more. After a five minute stomp and an amazing spontaneous match-lighting fad that nearly lit the dark hall, the band came back and did a long, extended "Wind-Up"

So after two and a half hours we let them go.

I used to really love Jethro Tull. I still love This Was and Stand Up. When I criticize them, it's from the tip-top of artistic expectations. They spoiled me. I expect absolute greatness from them every time, all the time. Monday's Jethro Tull was not absolutely great. Song after song I heard stiff cardboard riffs. Lots of people I know are passing them by, calling them stale. I reluctantly agree. Jethro Tull are still one of the best in the world, and are better than 90% of the rock bands around. Only thing was, it used to be 98%.

David Bromberg In Concert

David Bromberg
In Concert at the Amherst Folklore Center, Oct. 17, 1972.
David Bromberg-guitar and mandolin, Ken Kosek-fiddle.
Andy Statman-sax and mandolin, Roger Mason-bass.

Something about Dave Bromberg made me notice him the first time I saw him.

It was cold and chilly, and the rain soaked through the layers of sweater and windbreaker.

The last day of the last Newport Folk Festival and the men were landing on the moon. July 24, 1969.

George Wein introduced his next act–Jerry Jeff Walker, the man who wrote "Mr. Bojangles".

And there's his back-up man———Dave Bromberg———grinning, slightly spastic, and definitely brilliant.

Bromberg used to play for others: Chubby Checker, Tom Paxton, Jay and the Americans, Pat Sky, Doug Kershaw, Paul Siebel, and Dylan (on "New Morning" and "Self-Portrait").

Now, he plays for himself.

In a sense, it's foolish to read reviews about Bromberg, because you know what they are going to say. Bromberg is one of those artists who is consistently good, and more importantly, professional. A local band or semi-erratic, arrogant talent will more than occasionally blow a set; a Las Vegas star or a person who respects the music he or she plays, like a Dave Bromberg, will always give the she said But she said it in a audience their money's worth.

What shocks you about Dave Bromberg is his scope

At the Folklore Center Tuesday night, Bromberg proceeded to play the following: different way, and although far from flashy, said it with com-

-bluegrass
-talking blues
-country blues
-Benny Goodman-type swing
-'50s rock 'n roll
-bossa nova
-belly dance music
-a waltz
-a parody on the blues
-love ballads
-Old World ballads
-Country and western
-'60s folk music

He did no polkas.

Bromberg controlled the standing room only audience. He kidded them, chided himself, and interspliced his multifarious repetoire (the song list guitarists often tape to their instrument as reminders was wrapped around an entire side, 8 columns of 15 songs apiece) with conversations with, rather than to, the audience. Movement from foot-stompers to tear-jerkers was smoothly managed.

Most importantly, Bromberg and his accompanists knew when not to play. In bush bands--amateur and professional alike–singers sing every song with the same intonation and volume. The bassist feels obligated to play bass throughout, the fiddler feels that he is the star, the sax player tries to one-up them all. Even the solos are dull and expected, as if there were a written law requiring the highlighting of each member, each song.

Not so with Bromberg and friends. Bromberg had to be in control of his environment. If unamplified acoustic guitar suited his purpose, he stepped forward, knowing he did not need the mics. If a particular piece was less suited to his talents, he let someone else take over, as the sax man did during "Catch a Falling Star" (the one Perry Como did, yes). For once, the bassist remained subdued, frequently stopping to let the audience appreciate the more delicate mandolin. The bass did solo for about 10 seconds long, unspectacular, but congruous and unoffensive.

Then there's that "finger pickin' shit" that Bromberg is famous for. He did some, and I suggest that the interested listen to one of his albums.

Bromberg's songs are less esotervic than contemporaries of his like James Taylor and Joni Mitchell. They are influenced less by introspective and meditation, than by observation and narrative:

"Where is that woman?
Now, she's gone
I don't worry
I'm sitting on top of the world"

"A man should never gamble
More than he can stand to lose"

If the Sixties was a period of musical innovation, surely the Seventies is going to be one of synthesis, mastery, and dilution.

David Bromberg is not one of the diluters. He has become a synthesizer of various forms, and what he has brought together, he has mastered.

Karen Beth, a resident of Stow, Mass. via Woodstock, New York, did the warmup for Bromberg. It is the sign of a good performer and warmup musician to make an audience forget who they wanted to hear in the first place. Ms. Beth is such a musician.

Certainly, there's nothing new about her music or what petence.

Many people claim
There are better places to be
But the Berkshire Mountains
Are good enough for me

A word about the Folklore Center. If you like music before you like to get drunk, come to the Center. The food is good and priced reasonably–hot spiced cider, cold cider, pumpkin pie, crackers and cheese. The people who run the place are relaxed and hassle-free. The sound system is good, and there are only 2 places in the hall (by the side of a couple of speakers) where there is no visibility. Sometimes their performers burn out the audience, but on the whole, the Center has excellent taste in its choice of talent.

The people there (a guy named Buzzy, anyway) told me that John Herald, who is coming on Oct. 20-21 is excellent. I've never heard him, but I concur about his good reputation.

Tentatively scheduled for Nov. 11 are two guys who I intensely recommend–Happy and Artie Traum. If their arrangements get finalized, they should be welcomed to Amherst with thick crowds. If they come, demand that they play "Uncle Jed."

Finally, as this is a good way of communicating as any, I would urge the Folklore Center to bring Karen Dalton, a discovery of Fred "Everybody's Talking" Neil, to town. I also would note the fortnightly Thursday Bluewall Coffeehouse in the Campus Center, featuring, as always, fine local talent.

The Film Column: The New York Film Festival

By BrianDailey

Last week at the Alice Tully Hall in Lincoln Center the tenth annual New York Film Festival came to an end after two weeks of continuous screenings of some twenty four major new films. Unlike those of Venice and Cannes, the New York Film Festival has no competition for awards and as such usually has few world premieres. By the time these films are unreeled at the festival almost all have been already shown and received good reviews from other countries so that they all have previously scheduled opening dates in New York. Nevertheless the festival was a complete sellout weeks before it's opening. Even though the festival seems like no more than an extended "sneak preview" for the very rich of New York it does provide us with an unfathomable amount of criticism from all sections on the merits of the new fall films giving us something to look forward to if not just something to read. In this column I've tried to wade through the ocean of verbose wordage on the festival and give you a compact concensus of the merits of the biggest films in this years festival.

New York Film Festival Faces: (clockwise starting at upper left) Kika Markham and Stacey Tendeter in Two English Girls, Zouzou and Bernard Verley in Chloe in the Afternoon, Susannah York in Images and Barry Brown in Bad Company.

Richard Roud and the selection committee designated Chloe in the Afternoon (L'Amour, l'Apres-Midi), the long awaited new film by Eric Rohmer ending his six moral tales, as the opening film of the festival. Like Claire's Knee and My Night at Maud's Chloe continues the theme of Rohmers moral tales: A man in love with one woman is drawn to another, whom he finally rejects.

Bernard Verley plays Frederic, a young Parisian businessman living a quiet married life with his pregnant wife (Francoise Verley). Frederic becomes involved with Chloe (Zouzou) an unconventional girl from his past with whom he continually flirts. The flirtation begins innocently but becomes more threatening and intense until Frederic is forced to make a decision. The film centers on Frederics reasons for not going to bed with Chloe yet Rohmer never tells us how or why he makes his decision to remain faithful. Rohmer himself has said, "In my moral tales there is no moral message, these people determine their own way. The film simply lets them find it."

One critic recently said, "Rohmer is concerned with building the monotony of the heroes stringent life, but the film itself suffers from repetition and a sense of claustrophobia as if we were beginning to suffocate along with Frederic." Newsweek said "Rohmer is perhaps supreme among today's filmmakers at illuminating character by focusing on the most mundane moments–morning good-bys, chance encounters in cafes, chats over a drink. . .Rohmer is warmer, more expansive with his characters, who are less intellectually intimidating, less smugly self-analytical than their counterparts were in Claire's Knee and My Night at Maud's.

As always in Rohmer films Chloe in the Afternoon is a film with very little action and quite a lot of dialogue thus making the film appear cramped and static because of the use of the camera less as a tool than as an instrument of record. But for anyone who enjoyed any of the preceeding five tales then this is surely a must.

Images the Robert Altman film (*M*A*S*H, Brewster McCloud,* and McCabe and Mrs. Miller) received very good reviews from it's previous showings in Europe. Susannah York playing Cathryn, a woman ridden by guilts of love affairs and a childless marriage, was awarded the Best Actress award at Cannes for her performance. Rene Auberjonois, an Altman veteran, plays Hugh Cathryn's boring upper-class unreachable husband who retreats from his wife's fantasies to his guns, cameras, and bad jokes is also superb.

After receiving malicious phone calls in her city apartment and imagining intruders, Hugh gives in to Cathryn's plea to go to live in her old home town. When they get there Cathryn gets worse, not only does she still imagine intruders but she begins seeing her own double who continually watches her every move and is visited by an old lover, Marcel (Hugh Millais) who makes demands on her while his wise child Susannah (Cathryn Harrison) adds to the horror.

Judith Crist has said that "Altman probed and laid bare the psyche of a fascinating woman and in the course of that exposure, created a breath-bating suspense story of lust and blood. It is through her eyes (Ms.York) that we see her passion and through it purge our own; this is the interior view of Eve's three faces, but Altman's insight and remarkably sensitive direction never allow us to settle for the easy answer, the surface solution of schizophrenia, the dazzling questions of where the true image and the reality lie." Because of Altman's presentation of the story we are never sure of the actions of Cathryn and at the end of the film we find ourselves asking did Ms. York really kill her former lovers? did she actually run over her husband with her car? We never really know!

Although the film leaves as many questions unanswered as it seems to provide answers for, you'll probably find the film utterly absorbing, if only because it takes advantage of the camera's potential to remain noncommital. It will undoubtedly turn out to be the best psychological thriller this year if not the finest ever made.

Bad Company, an American entry, drew mixed reviews from many critics. The period western was written by Robert Benton and David Newman, the script writers of Bonnie and Clyde, and also directed by Benton. The film deals with present day themes in a Civil War setting. The film's hero Drew (Barry Brown) being unwilling to fight for the Union cause, sets out for Virginia City to prospect for silver. On the way he meets up with Jake (Jeff Bridges) and his gang of juvenile delinquents. Realizing that they both need each others help to survive on the lawless frontier, the two stay together and the climax of the film finds them both drawing their guns on the "wrong-side of the law."

As in Bonnie and Clyde, Benton and Newman don't mean to favor the gun as a way of life, its apparent in both that the outlaws way of life is no bed of roses. In Bad Company they try to show us that the heroes lives and ours are shaped by external forces of society.

The Benton-Newman team are quite adept at writing and prove it by giving us a film with an epic quality containing warmth and humor while forcing us to reevaluate the legendary West in contemporary terms. The film suffers at time from pretentiousness but Benton makes us forget all it's faults with his great skill at obtaining magnificent performances from his young actors and with his interesting direction.

Two English Girls (Les Deux Anglaises et le Continent) the French entry of Francois Truffaut suffers greatly from unfortunate yet inevitable comparison to his earlier masterpiece Jules and Jim (1961). Both films were based on novels by Henri-Pierre Roche and as in the former, the central relationship is triangular, but this time the situation involves two sisters captivated with the same man. However the exciting youthful spirit of Jules and Jim has been replaced by an aging depression yet it still shares the same exhilarating romanticism of Truffaut's previous film.

Set in the first three decades of the current century this wonderfully photographed episodic tale is acted by Jean-Pierre Leaud (Claude), Kika Markham (Anne) and Stacey Tendeter (Muriel).

When Claude, the son of the girls mother's close friend, comes from Paris to convalesce at their cliffside cottage an intense passionate triangle is formed which never subsides throughout the remaining years of their lives as in Jules and Jim.

The two girls are fine in their roles but Leaud displays none of his charm of spontaneous feeling he possessed in The 400 Blows.

Summer Soldiers the new film by the Japanese director Hiroshi Teshigahara is a big disappointment to anyone who has seen his lyrical yet overburdened surreal film Woman of the Dunes, the 1964 Jury Prize winner at Cannes. Teshigahara's latest effort is sloppily directed in a pseudo-documentary form.

The screenplay by John Nathan concerns an American deserter from Viet Nam, Jim (Keith Sykes), who goes to Japan and is helped to hide by a bar girl, a truck driver, and ultimately persuade to return to his base. Jim is a country boy very much attached to his guitar, his reasons for desertion are left as vague as they are in his own mind: a generalized rejection of violence.

Teshigahara himself said of the film "in my preceding films I often expressed myself abstractly. In this one I wanted to anchor the idea (the difficulties of communication between men of different cultures) in everyday reality." In that sense his film succeeds because you'll be strongly impressed to find that "everyday reality" has a lot to be said for itself. Another surprise is that the film is often very funny, the culture clash is expressed also on the comic level.

Another documentary of much interest is A Sense of Loss directed by Marcel Ophuls. The man whose recent documentary The Sorrow and the Pity (nominated for an Academy Award) is just now being released to the general public, has come out this year with straightforward appraisal of the situation in Northern Ireland. Ophuls may not have employed the definite quality of The Sorrow and the Pity in his new film but A Sense Loss does possess a desperate urgency all its own along with the same extraordinary compassion for people which Opluls always shows in his films. Ophuls filmed many interviews with such personalities as Bernadette Devlin, Prime Minister Lynch and Reverend Ian Paisley yet as Time magazine points out "Ophuls has structured the film not on these interviews, however, but around the impact of meaningless deaths." Jay Cocks says of A Sense of Loss that it is "the cinematic essay at its very finest. Scrupulously fair, profoundly humanistic, undeflected by rhetoric and propaganda, Ophuls is the Orwell of the cinema."

The last film in the festival and probably the most awaited is the brilliant Bernardo Bertolucci's Last Tango in Paris starring Marlon Brando. Because of problems with the Italian government of certain scenes in the film, its showing to the critics was cancelled and as yet no reviews of it have appeared but everyone is anxious to see if Bertolucci can produce a film as superb as The Conformist and whether Brando can give as fantastic a performance as he did in The Godfather.

11:30

Pro Hockey. The Bruins vs. the Penguins. Channel 22.

12:30

Thriller. The great early Sixties horror series; this week a gangster attempts to leave the underworld to lead a respectable life.

SATURDAY'S FILMS

3:30

The Ox-Bow Incident. (1943) Considered by many a classic, it is, upon reviewing a particularly loaded story of injustice filmed in an obvious studio style. The story's of the hysteria which leads a mob to lynch three innocent men. With Henry Fonda, Dana Andrews, and Anthony Quinn. Channel 3.

Fools' Parade. (1971); An old-fashioned comedy-drama which relies too much on its script and performances and not enough upon its dramatic action. The story's of three ex-cons who attempt to go straight on one's savings during the mid-Thirties. James Stewart gives his best in recent years. Channels 22 and 30.

11:30

The Yellow Rolls Royce (1964); Three stories, all centered about the same Rols-Royce in this flawed attempt at reviving the sophisticated, Thirties style romantic drama. It starts out well enough, but quickly falters. Large cast with Rex Harrison, Ingrid Bergman, Shirley MacLaine, and Omar Sharif. Channel 3.

42nd Street (1933); Busby Berkeley first Warner Brothers musical, he's only its choreographer, was a remake of the studio's 1929 hit On With the Show and one of the most important musicals of that decade. It concerns the plights and prattalls of getting a show through its pre-New York engagement. The film is delightfully ribald, made prior to the strict enforcements the Hays Office insisted upon in later Berkeley musicals and may have been touched off by this one's raciness. It has been the touchstone for a healthy number of its predecessors. Ruby Keeler plays the chorus girl who becomes a star when the show's star (Bebe Daniels) breaks her leg. Dick Powell plays her leading man and leads a chorus of Berkeley chorines in the "I'm Young And Healthy" number on a revolving stage that suggests a carousel. With Ginger Rogers as Anytime Annie, and catch ec her slip in the "Shuffle Off To Buffalo" number--it's a classic-of-its-sort. A number of the songs have become classics, such as the title tune and "You're Getting To Be A Habit With Me." Channel 30.

Sunday

1 p.m.

World Series; if necessary. Channels 22 and 30.

SUNDAY FILMS

2:30

Mister Roberts (1955); The film-version of the Broadway success about a mild-mannered navy officer who wants desperately to see war action but remains stuck onboard a cargo carrier. Many funny sequences and solid performances; Jack Lemmon won an Oscar. With Henry Fonda in the title role, James Cagney as the ship's captain, and William Powell as the ship's doc. Channel 40.

The Adventurers (1970); Harold Robbins novel about a swashbuckling South American revolutionary hasn't much of a mind even to sustain its three hour and fifteen minute mindiessness. It was hoped to make a star out of Bekim Fehmiu, but instead was an embarrassment to those names you may recall: Candice Bergen, a nadir in her less than distinguished career; Ernest Borgnine, Leigh Taylor-Young, and Olivia de Havilland. Channel 40.

Monday

Laugh-In. This week's guest is Jean Stapleton. Channels 22 and 30.

Profiles In Music. Shirley Verrett. Mezzosoprano Shirley Verrett recalls her rise to fame . . . her roots in gospel music, discovery by Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts and a 14-year career spanning appearances at the Met, La Scala and the Bolshoi Channel 57.

Pro Football. The Vikings vs. the Bears. Channel 40.

MONDAY'S FILMS

They Might Be Giants (1971). George C. Scott plays a man who thinks he's Sherlock Holmes and is under analysis by a female psychiatrist named Watson. He falls in love with her in this part fantasy, part socialcommentary, part romance, and not altogether satisfying comedy-drama. Channels 22 and 30.

11:30

Ride The High Country (1962); Sam Peckinpah's first film is an elegical tale of two aging gunfighters who try to transport gold from a mining camp to a bank. Many think that Peckinpah has never equalled this film for warmth, beauty, and action; two near-perfect performances from Randolph Scott and Joel McRea. Channel 3.

Tuesday

Of Thee I Sing. The first musical to win the Pulitzer Prize is the satiric story of a Presidential candidate no one can resist and a platform based on silver linings and love. The show was one of the Thirties biggest hits; the New York Times said it was "funnier than the government." and it has been compared to Gilbert and Sullivan for its verbal finesse. The music and lyrics by George and Ira Gershwin, is so well integrated into the whole that the late Oscar Levant once observed it has "an actual feel for social comment." This television revival features Carol O'Connor as candidate John P. Wintergreen, Cloris Leachman, Hack Gilford, Michele Lee, Jesse White, Jim Backus, and Paul Hartman. Channel 3.

TUESDAY'S FILMS:

War Italian Style (1965); mild spoof of the Second World War, with Buster Keaton. Channel 3.

Wednesday

Carol Burnett. A tribute to the Hollywood studios; with Carol doing a Carmen Miranda bit and guest Pearl Bailey doing Ingrid Bergman, and a sequel to last year's "Sunset Boulevard" sketch. Channel 3.

WEDNESDAY'S FILMS

11:30

The Pad (and how to use it) (1966). Peter Shaeffer's comedy about a shy young man who asks his suave friend to show him how to land a girlfriend; with James Farentino, and Julie Sommers. Channel 3.

1:10

Torch Song. (1953); A must for Joan Crawford fans and our pick of the week is this musical drama about a musical-comedy star (Joan) who falls in love with a blind composer. Joan unveals her legs; the musical numbers include "Tenderly" and "Two Faced Woman." Channel 3.

Thursday

Flip Wilson. David Steinberg, the Jackson Five, and Diana Sands. Channels 22 and 30.

9

International Performance. "Phedre," a tragic ballet adapted from the Greek legend. Slow-motion photography accents the stylized, mimelike quality of the work. Georges Auric composed the music; Jean Cocteau's libretto includes passages from Euripides, Seneca and Racine, read by offstage actors Channel 57.

Guess Who's Coming To Dinner?: The last film which teamed Katherine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy (he died days after its completion) and its a pity that it is such a lame, obvious, and facile social comedy. Tracy plays the liberal editor of a San Francisco newspaper, Hepburn his wife and their lives are thrown into turmoil when their daughter brings home a Nobel-Prize winning black doctor (Sidney Poitier). It's a shame that Tracy looks so obviously sick throughout; Hepburn won an Oscar but it seemed more in gratitude of her past glorious performances than this mediocre and cloying one. Channel 3.

THE JOURNEY OF THE FIFTH HORSE

Ronald Ribman's play opens the Bartlett Auditorium season on November 9, 10, 11 and 16, 17, 18 under the direction of Harry Mahnken. THE JOURNEY OF THE FIFTH HORSE, adapted from Turgenev's "Diary of a Superfluous Man", was first produced in 1966 at the American Place Theatre and featured Dustin Hoffman, who won an Obie award as best actor for his portrayal of Zoditch, the central character. The play revolves around Zoditch's real world, his dream world, and the world opened up to him by another man's diary. These three worlds interlock and interact.

MEDEA

This Euripides tragedy, written 2400 years ago based on Greek legend, is the opening production of the Mount Holyoke College Laboratory Theatre's 1972-73 season.

When Medea, who has sacrificed all for the love of her husband, Jason, is faced with his unfaithfulness, her love becomes hatred, and she commits gruesome crimes in order to punish his infidelity. The Greek chorus, the women of Corinth, sympathize with Medea, and in their poetry and dance they suffer with her and look forward to the day when women will be the strong ones, deserving power and respect. Through Medea's complex character Euripides examines the position of womankind, and the characters Euripides created to speak to his contemporaries still move us today. MEDEA will be performed Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 20 through 22, and Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, October 26 through 29. Tickets at $2.00 and $1.00 for students may be reserved in the Laboratory Theatre box office by telephoning 538-2406 beginning Monday, October 16, from 10:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. daily and 1:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. on Sunday.

Films

BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT (1956)

Fritz Lang's last American film. In order to prove the inadequacy of laws and police, a writer plans false evidence against himself in a murder case, is convicted, and sent to death row. Of course, the fraud was supposed to be revealed...The film is a complex mystery about death, hate, corruption, and people who are inevitably doomed. With Dana Andrews and Joan Fontaine, Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 10/22, 7:15.

BONNIE AND CLYDE (1967)

The two of the most notorious and legendary criminals of the Thirties were transformed into two of the Sixties most popular folk heroes through the popularity of this fine film. Director Arthur Penn has made nearly mythic these two scoundrels through his excellent use of decor and color of the period. Faye Dunaway and Warren Beatty are fine in the leads, but the film's most interesting caricatures belong to Estelle Parsons and Gene Hackman as title duo's cronies. Simply one of the more memorable film's of the late Sixties. Calvin Theater, Northampton.

BULLITT (1968)

A cops--and--robbers thriller with a contemporary twist in which Steve McQueen plays a super-cool police detective with scruples about his occupation. He goes along with it all when he's assigned to guard a chief crime witness. Robert Vaughn plays the corrupted U.S. Senator who breathes a little too heavily down Bullitt's neck, andh(aiqueline Bissett plays his girl. Long on both action and character with a superbly crafted chase sequence and some effective photography of San Francisco. Calvin Theater, Northampton.

CABARET

One of the most acclaimed films of the year is this film version of the 1967 Broadway musical which mixes spectacular cabaret entertainment with the rise of Nazism. The musical was hailed on the stage as one of the more innovative and exciting of the past decade and has been transformed, through the skillful hands of Bob Fosse, into a truly unique and stunning film. The story concerns the romantic encounters of a young British writer in the Berlin of the early Thirties, immediately prior to Hitler's takeover. The songs here are dispersed through the action, not the plot, and comment rather than further the story. The effect is the first truly unique film musical in quite some time. The score, by John Kander and Fred Ebb, beautifully echoes the era as does the performances, chiefly those of Liza Minneli as Sally Bowles and Joel Grey the Cabaret's Master of Ceremonies. Academy of Music, Northampton.

CAT BALLOU (1965)

Jane Fonda as the renegade daughter avenging her father's death in this clever western-satire. The film parodies Western prototypes with its tongue firmly in cheek; energetically performed, flashes of bright humor, and genially paced. The story is told in the form of a flashback-ballad sung by Stubby Kaye and Nat King Cole (his final film). One gem of a scene: the square dance where the characters pair off the the plot takes off. A beguiling dual performance by Lee Marvin as a drunken ex-gunfighter and his twin brother, a sadistic desperado. Fonda's performance had enough energy and bite to lift her out of the Hollywood ingenue category. Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Friday, 10/20, 7 and 9:30.

CITIZEN KANE (1941)

Orson Welles first film is the most prestigious and controversial debut in film history. The subject matter, an unauthorized biography of a man partly patterned after newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst, kept the film in the headlines and out of general release, thus aborting Welles' film career from its onset. Of all American sound films, one which becomes fresher with each viewing. The startling visual and curd techniques, although often obvious and theatrical, has led most leading film critics to cite KANE as the greatest sound film ever made. It is the finest first work of a director in film history, a film of such control of the medium and understanding of its capabilities that it stands as a casebook to anyone wishing to learn of film. The story is told from six different perspectives. A reporter is told to investigate the life of a recently deceased great American, Charles Folster Kane, and he visits a number of people influential to his life. Kane's career, from boyish newspaper editor-to-arrogant aspiring politician-to-an aging eccentric unfolds in a series of flashbacks. The film has been criticized for being facile with its themes of American values and the red-herring device of "Rosebud" to give the film a detective story cohesion; but, as Pauline Kael has said, few great films are as fun as this. Welles plays Kane and gives one of the few memorable examples of character aging in film; his supporting cast came from his Mercury Theater Company, all are superb and include Dorothy Comingore, Joseph Cotton, Agnes Moorehead, George Coulouris, Ruth Warrick, and Everett Sloane. Photographed with the virtually unused deep focus technique, which emphasized every detail and bizarre lighting arrangements. A film which has finally come-of-age. In 1941 it won but two major awards: Best Picture by the New York Film Critics, and Best Original Screenplay by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Last Spring the British film magazine "Sight and Sound" cited KANE in its international poll of film critics as the greatest film ever made for the second straight decade. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 10/24, 7 and 9:30.

CLAIRE'S KNEE (1971)

Although a bit too precocious for its own good, Eric Rohmer's fifth moral tale is a charming blend of witty conceits, good performances, and beautiful settings. The story concerns a Parisean diplomat who meets an old friend, a woman novelist, while vacationing in an Alp resort. He tells her that he has mended his philandeering ways, is to marry a mutual friend, and is interested only in a woman's mind. She decides to test this and involves him with two teenage girls she is caring for. One is a gawky duckling, the other a beautiful snob named Claire. Neither interest him, until he realizes a fetish for Claire's knee. The diplomat's dilema is presented in a humorous, understated way and the film's final irony never slips into sounding bitter. Rohmer has the ability to talk a great deal in his films and makes all sorts of witty generalizations about the human condition. Many have found him facile. The film is engagingly acted and a joy to watch. With Jean-Claude Brally. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 10/21, 7:30 and 9:30.

COMING APART (1969)

There are so many fine films dealing with the theme of an individual's bout with mental illness (A FINE MADNESS, DAVID AND LISA, MARNIE, ROSEMARY'S BABY, MIDNIGHT COWBOY, and THE HOSPITAL--to mention a few) that the Program Council needed to have booked this piece of pornography which masks itself in pretense to art. It purports to be a "cinema verite" analysis of a hip psychologist who goes mad. The film takes place in his office where various female patients come for therapy, but in actuality to play with their doctor. Despite all its talk, an overlong stag film. Masochism, exhibitionism, and voyeurism abound; unfortunately none of it is very interesting. Rip Torn as the psychiatrist, with Viveca Lindfor and Sally Kirkland. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 10/26, 7 and 9:30.

THE CONCERT FOR BANGLA—DESH (1971)

The filmed concert of the August 1971 music event; with George Harrison, Leon Russell, Bob Dylan, Ringo Starr, and Ravi Shankar, amongst other "superstars." Although the idea of recording the concert has become dearth for many filmgoers, from all reports, the film is faithful, sometimes exciting, nearly always first-rate rendering of this popular event. Playing with GIMMIE SHELTER and FILLMORE. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

COOL HAND LUKE (1967)

An entertaining, if a bit overly symbolic drama about a misfit in a Southern penal colony during the Thirties and his struggle with his sadistic authorities. The humor is deftly underplayed, and the leisurely style blends well with the whole. The only dissonance is the heavy-handed Christian symbolism towards the end, which attempts to turn his affalable victim of self-neglect into an existential martyr. Fortunately the philosophical thickness only slightly mars this otherwise enjoyable and disturbing story of prison life. Paul Newman's Luke is one of his most lideable performances and he is finely supported from Arthur Kennedy, who won an Oscar, and Jo Van Fleet. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 10/20, 7 and 11.

A DAY AT THE RACES (1937)

Groucho Marx as a horse doctor posing as a neurologist utters the priceless line "Either the man is dead or my watch is broken." and steals this second Sam Wood-Marx Brother outing. This and A NIGHT AT THE OPERA (1935, the other Wood film) remain the team's most consistantly inspired comedies. The Brothers don't seem to have to fight mediocre material, as before and after, and blend remarkably well with the romance and musical numbers the studio demanded. What plot there is concerns a group of bankers, a blond siren, a sanatorium, and a steeplechase. The cast includes Margaret Dumont, Maureen O'Sullivan, and Allan Jones. The "All God's Chillun Got Rhythm" number features in the chorus, if your eye is fast enough, a teenage Dorothy Dandridge. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, 10/25, 7 and 11:30.

EVERYTHING YOU EVER WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX...BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK

Six questions from David Reuben's maddening best seller are given an intensive comic treatment by Woody Allen. Each of the skits opens with a title card ("What Happens During Ejaculation?") and Allen proceeds with a sharpness that many have felt tasteless. He probably would have been an errand boy during the Inquisition. Each skit seems a satire on a particular film genre: the futuristic fantasy the Fifties, sci-fi film, the Antonioni films, etc. Allen is a maddening funny man and his film is best when he is disarmingly cool about incredibly ridiculous situations. Gene Wilder, amoured by a sheep, lovingly carrying her through a hotel lobby; Lou Jacobi in drag conquettishly dancing in front of a mirror or Allen himself as one tiny sperm having an identity crisis during the final moments of ejaculation. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

FILLMORE

A rock documentary of the history and closing of the legendary rock and roll hall managed by Bill Graham. Featured in performance are the Grateful Dead, Santana, It's A Beautiful Day, Boz Scaggs, and Hot Tuna amongst others. Much documentary footage of Graham at work and play, some have pointed to the film as being little more than a promo film of his rock life. With GIMMIE SHELTER and CONCERT FOR BANGLA—DESH. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

FRENCH CAN—CAN

Directed by Jean Renoir. Stars Jean Gabin, Francois Arnoul. This film is lately being placed among Renoir's recognized masterpieces, Grand Illusion and Rules of the Game. On the simple narrative level, the film tells the story of a showman who envisions his own theatre, gets it, loses it, gets it again and finally stages a grand show with great success. The theatre is the Moulin Rouge. The film operates on many other levels: life, dance, making love, theatre. The final, show sums up a personal statement on art and artists. Amherst Folklore Center, Tuesday, 10/24, 7:30.

FUNNY GIRL (1968)

Again all those who missed it or those of us who keep returning to it have the chance to see the magnificent portrayal of Fanny Brice by Barbra Streisand for which she deservedly won the Best Actress Oscar in her first film role recreating her Tony winning Broadway-stage performance in the musical biography FUNNY GIRL. A fine performance as Fanny's mother is also given by Kay Medford for which she received a Supporting Actress nomination. Streisand possesses that mystical "star" quality which so few actresses have these days but which is definitely necessary if an actress is called on to carry a whole movie as Streisand is and so aptly does. Pauline Kael says "Streisand has the gift of making old written dialogue sound like inspired improvisation; almost every line she says seems to have just sprung to mind and out." Her comic rapport is reminiscent of the great screen comediennes of the thirties; Carole Lombard, Myrna Loy and Rosalind Russell, yet she also has the ability for suffering which most of these actresses didn't and as a result she is clearly capable of carrying off the second half of the film when Fanny's life gets more serious. At the end of the film after her husband Nicky Arnstein, played stiffly by Omar Sharif, decides they should get a divorce Streisand goes on stage to sing Fanny's famous torch song, MY MAN (which incidently was filmed live in only one take). Of this scene Kael says "the end of the movie, in a long single take, is a bravura stroke, a gorgeous piece of showing off, that makes one intensely, brilliantly aware of the star as a performer and of the star's pride in herself as performer. The pride is justified...the message of Barbra Streisand in FUNNY GIRL is that talent is beauty!" Eastfield Cinema, Eastfield Mall, Springfield Palace Theater, West Springfield.

Movies in the area. Clockwise from the left; Barbra Striesand in Funny Girl which starts today in Springfield; Joseph Cotton in Orson Welles' The Magnificent Ambersons, next Monday on campus; and Joe Dallesandro and Sylvia Miles the stars of Heat now in Springfield.

GIMMIE SHELTER (1970)

The Rolling Stones 1969 American tour is incisively dissected in this powerful, often brilliant documentary by the Maisles Brothers. The two used a piecemeal style which fuses the Stones in concert with the planning behind Altamont concert in attempting to comment upon the larger themes the violence of the Altamont concert raised. The concert portions show Jagger as the master showman he is often called and proves the group to be the rock and roll band of the Sixties. The film has the final effect of a nightmare, filled with chaotic incidents and ambiguous meanings. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE GODFATHER

A straight-forward melodrama about the rise of a Mafia dynasty. Reverent and sympathetic to the exploits of the blood-letting Corleone family, the violence is seen as a means to incorporate identity. In all its use of old techniques, the film suggests a new realism and understanding of the ruthlessness and scope of the crime empire today. Marlon Brando as the family partriach takes a relatively small part and makes it memorably moving. His supporting cast, Al Pacino, James Cann, Sterling Hayden, are all competent. Directed by Francis Ford Coppolla, from the novel by Mario Puzo; an altogether extraordinary experience. Campus Cinema, Hadley; Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

HEAT

The latest release from the Andy Warhol factory is written, directed, and photographed by Paul Morrisey (FLESH and TRASH). The film starring Joe Dallesandro (LONESOME COWBOYS and TRASH) and Sylvia Miles (nominated for a Best Supporting Actress in MIDNIGHT COWBOY) is being likened to a 21-years-later view of SUNSET BOULEVARD only set in New York this time. Ms. Miles plays a much-married, middle-aged, B-movie actress with little talent but lots of body. Dallesandro plays his usual stud role with the little snitch being that in this film he was once a child star who finally made it big on a tv series called "The Big Ranch." The film also contains a fantastic performance by the late Andrea Feldman as a freaked out lesbian with an illegitimate child living with her lover. Was everybody's darling when premiered at the New York Film Festival recently. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE LAST PICTURE SHOW (1971)

The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bagdanovich the film is a straightforward well crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in Hollywood directors. Despite some melodramatic plotting is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges, Eileen Brennan, and Ben Johnson. Cinema X, W. Springfield.

THE MAGNIFICENT AMBERSONS (1942)

Orson Welles lost control of his second film in the last days of production and the studio, RKO, still shaking from the CITIZEN KANE debacle, tacked on a typically Hollywood happy ending to this biting examination of American family life during the early days of the Twentieth century. It could have been Welles' finest film; must subtler and piercing in its questioning of American values than KANE and certainly less flamboyant. Welles adapted the novel by Booth Tarkingston about the decline of a mid-Western family at the turn of-the-century. The early sections are amongst the finest Welles has achieved in film and the scenes of family squabbling are without equal for their intensity. It was a resounding failure when first released; the American public were hardly interested in Welles's harsh examination of their psyches, no matter how valid. Tim Holt plays the ego-centered, mother obsessed son; Dolores Costello, as his mother; and Agnes Moorehead as the spinster aunt in a performance of hysterical intensity that stands alone. She won a New York Film Critics Award for this performance, but Hollywood gave their best honors to Greer Garson and Teresa Wright for the abominable MRS. MINIVER. With Joseph Cotton, Anne Baxter, and Ray Collins. Welles's end-credits are highly entertaining. Campus Center Auditorium, Monday, 10/25, 7 and 9.

MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON (1939)

Frank Capra's 1939 political comedy is a reworking of his previously successful MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN. It is the story of an idealistic young senator from Wisconsin, played by James Stewart, who uproots the evil political machine of Claude Rains. One of the last of its kind and probably considered corny and populistic today, yet because of a strong script, impeccable blending of comic and dramatic elements, and superb casting and performances it holds up as a memorable achievement. It is doubtful James Stewart was in a better movie, even his Oscar-winning Philadelphia Story and Rear Window. He won the New York Film Critics Award as Best Actor for this film. The large supporting cast features Jean Arthur, one of the periods most talented comediannes and a joy to watch, Guy Kibbee, Thomas Mitchell, H.B. Warner, Edward Arnold, and William Demarest, probably the Forties best comedy character actor in the Preston Sturges films. The Second World War made Capra's homespun attitudes of American idealism unsophisticated, although he did successfully revive them in this post war comedy It's A Wonderful Life, again with Stewart. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, 10/25, 9:20.

1984 (1956)

A somewhat confusing and toned down version of George Orwell's prophetic novel about a future totalitarian culture. Some of the effects are fascinating, and the film is consistantly interesting, but the effect is less than it could have been. With Edmund O'Brian and Jan Sterling. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke

NOTHING BUT A MAN (1964)

Screenplay by Michael Roemer and Robert Young is "a lean, unpretnetious little picture about a young black laborer in Alabama who marries a preacher's daughter and settles down". Released in 1964, the film has been praised for its simplicity and honesty in avoiding sentimental characterizations and relationships. S.W. Student Center, Monday, 7:30.

REEFER MADNESS (1936)

A 1938 film about the horrors of marijuana. Uses expressions like "deadly scourge" and "marijuana addict." Stock shocker situations abound, and the finale contains two killings and a suicide. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE SALZBURG CONNECTION

A spy adventure based on Helen MacInnes' best selling novel; which provides plenty of mystery and action for those lovers of cloak and dagger. Barry Newman stars as a vacationing American lawyer who reluctantly becomes involved with both beautiful girls and a chest full of Nazi secrets which everybody is trying to kill each other for. It's a film which is basically exciting and entertaining. Amherst Cinema, Amherst

SLAUGHTERHOUSE—FIVE

Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s college classis was obediently transformed by George Roy Hill into a sleek, lifeless, and shallow film which time trips decades with ease, but never approaches the interesting implications about time and space. The story concerns an Army medic who jumps from the bombing of Dresden to Babbitt-like life in a Midwestern city to congugal speldor in a interstellar penthouse. Vonnegut's point, it seems, is life but a random sampling of events and one should emphasize the good and ignore the bad. The film emphasizes the silly sort of satire about Middle America that young people would feel manic toward if it were aimed at them. Here they laugh. Worse is the power-of-positive-believing which is at the center of Vonnegut's argument. The film is admirably edited yet cold in its machine-like precision. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW (1966)

With this film director Franco Zefferelli first showed that Shakespeare can work well on the screen as he again proved with his masterpiece ROMEO AND JULIET. Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton give spirited, highly enjoyable, and thoughtfull performances being aptly supported by Cryil Cusack and Victor Spinetti. The film contains exquisite color photography by Oswald Morris and Luciano Trasatti. Besides being a good film, it's always great to see Burton and Taylor go at each other and ths is probably their best effort since WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF?.

2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY (1968)

Unquestionably one of the finest films of recent years and the best space epic ever. Stanley Kubrick's twelve million dollar Modern Odyssey is the surrealistic journey of Man's evolution, from Monkey to Man to Superman. The film is visually the most complex in recent years, a cosmic Marlenbad, and the special effects are stunning beyond belief. It is loosely structured in three parts with more along thematic lines than a linear plot, yet is never boring, containing perhaps the most interesting pop philosophy ever filmed. The music score, ranging from Richard Strauss to Ligeti to Johann Strauss, is one of positive brilliance; the script is downbeat black humor, and the direction is impeccable Kubrick, visually complete and beautifully done by America's finest director. In four-track stereo and ultrapanavision. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Letters To The Editor

Grateful For Loyalty Oath

To The Editor:

As many of your readers undoubtedly know, a statute has recently been re-enacted which requires that Commonwealth employees sign a loyalty oath as a condition of employment. This statute has become a center of controversy on this campus, particularly among members of the faculty (it is with shame that I speak thus of my colleagues) who have gone so far as to grumble of coercion, creeping fascism, bureaucratic blackmail, or even to argue that declaring one's undefined loyalty to an unidentified commonwealth is not rational behavior.

Clearly we have heard only from the nay-sayers and nit-pickers, the malcontents and maligners, the trashers and Trotskites, and I say it is high time someone spoke up for what is right with the Commonwealth. I, for one, am grateful for the opportunity to sign a loyalty oath and only regret that I have but one oath to give for my Commonwealth. Which, incidentally, brings me to my next point.

I do have a criticism of the loyalty oath statute, but it is a constructive rather than destructive argument, an argument not for abolition or passive resistance but for extension and increased participation. If we expect a half-time instructor to sign one loyalty oath, it is only fair that a full-time instructor should sign two, an assistant professor four, an associate professor eight, a full professor sixteen, and department heads thirty-two. Not only would this plan put things in perspective, but it might also serve as a quantititative basis for decisions of promotion and tenure, which, as everyone agrees, are too often subjective and imprecise.

Now there are those who would argue against this proposal on the grounds that before long every eligible faculty member would rush to sign at least sixteen loyalty oaths and then promptly demand his full professorship. The objection is certainly plausible, but I see two possible solutions. One would be to allow faculty members to sign only a specified number of oaths annually, quadrennially, and so on. But this solution, while orderly, smacks of restraint, the kind of restraint that has no place in a free society. I would rather encourage American enterprise and competition. If part-time instructors wish, for example, to sign an average of 100 loyalty oaths, I say, let their dream come true. We can use ratios instead of absolute figures, and all be the richer for it. In this free-market model, then, an associate professor would be someone who had signed at least 800 loyalty oaths, and that standard might go up even higher as we get more and more grass-roots participation.

These are only the practical advantages. Of course we would gain spiritually as well. All of us could know that all of us were loyal and be reassured that the Commonwealth, could she be reached for comment, would approve our efforts.

Loyally,
John E. Sitter
Assistant Professor
English Department

Estelle On Tackeff

To The Editor:

I want to congratulate Matt Tackeff for his brilliant editorial in the Oct. 19 edition of the Collegian. It proves that the evaluation of a candidate for public office should not only cover what he says in his campaign but also on his past record.

Matt shows how sketchy McGovern wants his past kept as well as probable reasons why. One other thing I can add is that one should very carefully evaluate the candidate he is voting for before he votes for him.

I have one other point to make and that is that, as Mr. Tackeff has pointed out before, we will be probably stuck with "four more years". The reason is simple: Nixon's opposition is too spread apart. Well, all we have to lose is our freedom.

'Fine' Infirmary

To The Editor:

Dorothy Morgan is unjust in her letter concerning the Infirmary. A simple answer to your question is that the Infirmary is trying to keep over 20,000 people healthy. A sizeable task.

In all probability, your "downed out" friend never told the doctor who treated him that he was on downs. He was given the Darvons to relieve pain, not to further his drug habit. The Infirmary attempts to deal with mature people who know that medication should not be taken unless necessary. If you or your friends do not qualify I suggest you take advantage of the University Counseling Services

I have been to the Infirmary for numerous ailments. Judging from my personal experiences at the Infirmary, it is obvious that those wonderful doctors and nurses who work there are doing it for our benefit. They are seldom given a word of praise. Rather, they are subjected to the irrational abuse of those too immature to handle aspirin.

My suggestion is that the next time you have a need to go to the Infirmary, do so with an open mind, ignore the wait, and try to realize how fortunate we are to have such fine medical facilities on campus.

Nixons 'Protected'

To The Editor:

I came across the following quote in a book entitled AFTER THE PLANNERS by Robert Goodman (published by Simon and Schuster, 1971). It appears on page 59.

"While running for the Vice-Presidency in 1952, Richard M. Nixon was living in a house that he and his wife 'protected' by co-executing an agreement to keep the house from ever being rented or sold to 'any person or persons of Negro blood or extraction or to any person of Semitic Race, blood or origin, which racial description shall be deemed to include Armenians, Jews, Hebrews, Persians and Syrians...'

I am not personally among the excluded, but there are those who are my friends and relatives who would be excluded. For this and for other reasons, I will cast my vote on November 7th for George McGovern.

Douglas G. Woodward

Editorial Points

At an informal gathering Wednesday night, Vice Chancellor Robert Gage said the University will claim ownership of the Campus Center although student money will have paid for it. His reason: "Students can't own a building" (since they aren't a corporation and the University is). Hasn't the Vice-Chancellor heard of the Harvard Co-op?

At the same discussion Gage termed several campus situations "bookkeeping problems". (Small matters like: why aren't there alternative grading systems in use? why must a student petition to receive a double major?) Maybe if we clear out half of Whitmore and re-staff it with bookkeepers we can solve our "bookkeeping problems".

Rumor has it that the lights in mid campus are a Communist plot to undermine the sanity of students. With the way they've been operating lately, we tend to believe it.

Speaking of Communist plots, the average National League baseball fan would have us believe that the World Series is a plot the way it's been going. Maybe the A's are just a good team.

What's A GMV?

To The Editor:

The members of Grassroots McGovern Volunteers (GMV) were first attracted to Sen. McGovern becaue of his strong stands on the issues. When it became apparent that certain political compromises were being made, groups of these volunteers began circulating letters and petitions urging McGovern not to backtrack.

During the convention in Miami Beach, a mass meeting was held which resulted in the formation of a national organization of volunteers from 42 states of the Union. These local groups are on the move because we want real change in the U.S.

We are not part of the Democratic Party, and our function is not limited merely to the campaign for McGovern. GMV is backing McGovern because we feel that, as president, he would be much more receptive to the demands of the people than Nixon would be. However, the main emphasis of our group is working on local issues, such as welfare rights, unemployment, rent control, and the cost of living. We hold rallies, publish leaflets, do research and whatever else we can to inform people of what is going on in their own communities.

Here in Massachusetts, our present focus is on unemployment For example, we are taking a stand against the Talmadge Amendment. This is a federal bill which forces welfare recipients to register for work and accept jobs at $1.20 an hour. These people have been guaranteeed jobs at below the minimum wage! And how will government get them these jobs, considering that 8.3% of the work force in our state is already unemployed? BY LAYING OFF WORKERS WHO ARE NOW EMPLOYED AT DECENT WAGES, THUS SAVING INDUSTRY MILLIONS AND INSTITUTIONALIZING SCAB LABOR!

Our activities will not end with the November elections, no matter who wins. We will continue to operate as a pressure group, focusing on issues of local and national importance.

We need your help. If you have anything to contribute--your spare time, money, or information, call Brian at 546-7008, or Bill at 546-8917.

Also, we would like to express our gratitude to John Holt, author of How Children Learn and How Children Fail, for his contribution of $50. to our cause.

Brian Grant

Pierpont Gallery

To The Editor:

There is a new art gallery opening on the UMass campus. The place, Pierpont House. The subject: Photography, paintings, sculpture...multi media happenings.

THIS IS AN OPEN INVITATION TO ALL INTERESTED people (students and faculty) to help form, work in, decide policies of and in general, grow with.

UMass Notices

Lesbianism Workshop

Is Lesbianism relevant to a "confirmed heterosexual" woman? Two area feminists feel it is, and are offering a workshop for all women to explore the facts and myths of Lesbianism, and its relevance in every woman's life.

The workshop will meet once a week, starting next Monday evening, October 23, 7:30-9:30 p.m., for eight weeks. Women - no matter what their sexual preference or experience - are encouraged to register for this workshop.

Registration ends today. Contact Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall, or call 545-0883.

Fly A Kite

In an effort to raise money and add a little fun to the UMass McGovern campaign, there will be a kite flying festival on October 23 at 2 P.M. along the campus pond. The festival is open to the Five-Colleges and the public. Those people that don't have kites of their own, may buy a kite and ball of string at the festival.

Anyone interested in helping out at the festival or wants more information, can contact Bill Sage at 546-8917.

Belchertown Volunteers

The Belchertown Volunteers will hold a meeting on Tuesday night, October 24 at 7, in the campus center, Room 904. The purpose of the meeting will be to discuss plans for a Halloween party for Belchertown State School residents.

The party will be held on Saturday October 28, from 1:30 to 3:30 P.M. in the Campus Center. All members of the volunteers are urged to attend the meeting.

If unable to attend please call Jay at 69801 or Audrey at 61475.

The Belchertown Volunteers are a group of UMass students who spend three hours of their Saturday afternoons trying to brighten the lives of the Belchertown residents. A bus goes to Belchertown every Saturday at 12:45 and returns to UMass by 4:00. Volunteers are needed.

Anyone interested in becoming a volunteer or just interested in helping to plan a Halloween party is welcome to attend Tuesday evening's meeting.

MIDDLE SCHOOL CHILD; THE FORGOTTEN YEARS

The 11 plus Project of the School of Education Teacher Preparation Program is addressed to the problem of curriculum, attitudes, and style most appropriate for grades 6-8. It is an experimental effort and has room for students particularly interested in working with this age child. Call 5-2848 if interested in spring or fall semester student teaching with the 11 plus Program. Note: Mostly off-campus positions remaining for spring semester.

Crime Study Expensive

Maurice D. Geiger of Alexandria, Va., was authorized $125 per day for 15 days effective March 8 to "do an analysis of goals, statements and program standards in the field of integrity of government and commerce; and social and rehabilitative services to ensure the logic of written presentations. In addition, he will assist in the development of program chapter outlines."

Russell W. Leedy of Greenbelt, Md., was authorized $100 per day for 30 days effective April 10 to "assist in the preparation of the chapter on social and rehabilitative services for inclusion within the task force report."

Harold R. Johnson of Ann Arbor, Mich., was authorized $100 per day for five days effective April 13, to "assist in the presentation of the chapters on planning and evaluation and implementation strategies."

Robert S. Atkins of Evanston, Ill., was authorized $100 for one day, April 14, to assist "in the preparation of the chapter on social and rehabilitative services."

According to the payment authorization letters, which also included the statements of purpose, Johnson is a professor of social work at the University of Michigan; Atkins is project director of the Special Prosecution Unit in the Illinois attorney general's office; Leedy is a social service professor at Catholic University of America and Prigmore is a sociology professor at the University of Alabama.

Sachs, according to the letters, is a lawyer; Scopetta is a "special prosecutor for investigations and prosecutions involving official corruption," and Geiger is president of Judicial Management Associates, a private court management consulting firm.

Drug Education

Others listed include Michael Silva, associate director for public affairs of the National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse, who was authorized $100 per day for 25 days effective May 1 to "prepare a statement on public education with respect to drug abuse and treatment programs. In addition, he will define standards for inclusion in the task force report."

Gail Miller of Alexandria, Va., acting public information officer for the Youth Development and Delinquency Prevention Administration, HEW, was authorized $80 per day, not to exceed 115 days, for "various administrative and supportive duties for the staff director in initiating project activities."

Kenneth F. Wilhoite of Germantown, Md., was authorized $100 per day for 30 days "to provide materials on zoning, land development, tax assessment and licensing."

The letter said Wilhoite had "formed Kershaw, Wilhoite & Associates with the objective of addressing managerial and policy problems of public and private agencies."

Howard E. Aldrich, an assistant professor at Cornell, was authorized $90 per day for 30 days, and Dwight C. Smith Jr., director of institutional research, State University of New York, was authorized $100 per day for 30 days to "analyse problems in the maintenance of ethical and lawful behavior in the conduct of retail and manufacturing businesses, and to develop programs and standards."

Day Care

Ben Zimmerman of Alrington, Va., director of information services for the Day Care & Child Development Council of America, was authorized $100 per day for 60 days to "be an analyst on social and rehabilitation services, organization problems and delivery systems."

David W. Adamany of Middletown, Conn., was authorized $100 per day for 28 days to write "the section of the Task Force on Community Crime Prevention's chapter entitled 'Maintaining Integrity in Government."

Wallace T. Homitz and La Verda O. Allen of Oakland and Berkley, Calif., were authorized $100 per day for 10 days each to "analyse program potential within the field of public education relating to crime prevention, as well as developing a study outline.

Resumes for the last three were not included in the file.

Chinese Doctors Visiting Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Ten mainland Chinese physicians-the first to visit the United States in 23 years-are due to begin a four-day observation of medical practices in the Boston area today.

Dr. Richard Gorlin, Harvard Medical School professor, met the group when they arrived in this country last Saturday and will be one of their hosts during their tour of teaching hospitals here.

Heart disease and modern treatment for it have been a prime interest of the doctors, Gorlin said, since such ailments have been increasing in the People's Republic of China during increasing urbanization.

Gorlin described the physicians as "a most remarkable group of people-friendly, bright, asking many questions," and said Chinese medicine appears to be well advanced.

The Chinese, he said, are pleased with America interest in their acupuncture and herb treatments.

The visitors will study American techniques and theory according to their specialties. Besides cardiology, the doctors are interested in cancer, obstetrics, birth control and pharmacology.

Un Peu Francais Parlons Ici, Parfois

LEWISTON, Maine (AP) — "Frog" is a slur that once could have driven Maine's French to fistfights. Now it s turning up on bumper stickers

And the state's largest minority is suddenly aware that its language and culture are in danger of being swallowed up by the English-speaking majority.

Their answer is "Frog power" The little green stickers in leather and textile cities of southern Maine and the Saint John River valley of the north are a visible sign of the Franco-American push for social pride and with it, economic equality.

"A man who loses contact with his past will never really be a man," writes Dr. Donald Dugas in a recent edition of "Observations," a new bilingual newspaper he helped establish in Lewiston.

Losing Contact

Dugas, a bilingual educator and himself Franco American, said his people began the process of losing that contact when they moved from Canada into the lowest economic rungs of Maine's leather and textile industries.

They tended to remain there, Dugas said, and the trappings of their minority culture, especially their French language, began to suffer discrimination.

"There is a definite correlation in Maine between areas of economic strength and job discrimination against Francos, Dugas said. "The WASP bosses in communities like Camden are afraid of the diversity that Francos and their second language represent."

He contended that a labor dispute last year in Madawaska one that ended in violence, was "triggered by bad working conditions imposed on the Francos by their employers. There could be more of the same."

Adversely affected by the generally depressed state of his Franco-American heritage, Dugas said he was one of many Francos who abandoned their background to "make it" in America.

Ashamed of Parentage

But while working on a doctorate in linguistics, Dugas said, "I awakened to the complexities of a bilingual people." He said he caught himself learning how to become ashamed of his parentage. "So, I began to search for my identity again"

All of Maine will benefit if its "largest undeclared minority" awakens to that identity, Dugas contends. Rather than rejecting its second culture, Maine "could have a real economic boom" from a happier more productive minority whose differences are accepted or evencherished.

And then, Dugas adds, there is simply the desirability of having another rich culture to "resettle the basis of peoples' lives and to shake up the complacency with the challenges inherent with the living presence of a second language."

At present the French movement in Maine especially in its central and southern parts, is made up mostly of a few persons dedicated to the vision of a vital, bicultural state. The most active of these people are gathered at the University of Maine at Orono. Their organization is called the Franco-American Resources and Opportunity Group FAROG.

"The French Fact"

FAROG's student coordinator, Yvon A. Labbe, told a recent conference at Orono on the "French Fact" in the region that "our society....must be made sensitive to the advantages and the problems found in the bicultural individual and the rich heritage which can be acquired for the benefit of all."

He illustrated an educational syndrome FAROG sees at the root of the Francos' problems.

"A 5-year-old boy brought up in a French-speaking community with strong family ties enters school and crashes into the wall of the English-speaking world.

"He has to let go of one culture because of the system. He has to run through an obstacle course and make adaptations that aren't good. He has to negate himself. His biculturalism...is a hindrance

"So he grows up with negative values.. both American and French"

Kids Are Rejected

Commenting on the same pattern, Dr. Dugas said the kids suffer the symptoms of rejection: "They don't talk much, get routed in the non-college group and end up being against schools that never did anything for them."

Claire Bolduc, another active FAROG member, is angry about the process: "We've been robbed ...robbed of contacts for development by a long period of imitating an alien culture."

Accordingly, Labbe said, FAROG is prodding the university to recognize Maine's "French Fact" with a range of supportive policies that would include hiring Franco Americans at all levels, reviewing admissions policies and encouraging Franco American groups.

Seemingly slow and halting in central and southern Maine, the French movement up north-where there's the highest concentration of Francos-shows signs of real advancement.

"Things have been going very well up here," says Omer Picard who directs the St. Johns Valley Bilingual Education project. Picard said that until a few years ago the Francos were pretty much suppressed-even in an area where there numbers are so great.

Some communities are 95 per cent Franco American

No Longer Outlawed

But now Picard said French is being used at town meetings and in the schools. And there used to be laws against that.

"The Franco Americans are letting it be known that they are Franco Americans," Picard said.

Frye Elementary School in Lewiston is virtually in the shadow of the largest Gothic structure in Maine-a massive gray church that is testimony to a salient feature of the Francos' culture: their Catholicism.

Attending Frye school, estimates of one of its teachers, are a majority of pupils who come from French speaking homes. But none of the course work at the school is executed in French until the fifth grade. Then the children can take conversational French.

Bilingual Program Dropped

Recently the bilingual program in Lewiston, which Dr. Dugas headed, was dropped.

Superintendent of Schools Joseph Deschenes said the program was abandoned mostly because "we couldn't find qualified bilingual instructors at the elementary level."

Dugas said there was another reason: "Officialdom in this town doesn't care if the schools are bilingual or not."

Meanwhile, whatever the reason, many children in this southern Maine mill town continue going to schools that largely do not recognize their backgrounds.

Renaissance Group Meeting Today

Music, art, history, and literature of the Renaissance will come together for the New England Renaissance Conference today and tomorrow on campus.

The public is invited to attend all events. Registration is $3 and will be in Herter, opposite rooms 227 today from 1 to 2 p.m.; and in Thompson 102 tomorrow from 8:30 to 9 a.m.

Sponsored by the UMass Division of Continuing Education and the departments of English, history, art, and music, the conference will offer this program:

Today 2:15 to 4:30, in Herter 227. "The Constitutional Development of Italian Cities." Prof. Archibald R. Lewis of the UMass history department will chair the session. Frederic C. Lane, professor of history emeritus at The Johns Hopkins University, will talk about Venice; Robert S. Lopez, history professor at Yale, will talk about Genoa; and Anthony Molho, history professor at Brown, will comment.

4:30 to 5:30, Herter 227. "Isabella D'Este, Patroness of the Arts: Documents in the State Archives in Mantua." Clifford Brown, assoc. professor of art history at Carleton University, Ottawa.

5:30 to 6:15, Herter Gallery. Artistic representations of Rome and 15th Century diplomatic documents.

6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Campus Center 1009. Dinner and entertainment. John Heywood's "A Mery Play Between Johan Johan, The Husbande, TYB, His Wyfe, and Syr Johan, The Preest", directed by Gary Stewart. Italian songs and madrigals by the UMass Madrigal Singers directed by Alan Harler.

Tomorrow 9 to 11:45 a.m., Thompson 102. "Literary Studies in Self, Space and Movement." Ruth Mortimer of the Houghton Library at Harvard will offer "The Emergence of the Author's Self-Image: Author Portraits in Sixteenth Century Italian Books". Robert Peterson, English professor at Smith, will present "Space and Movement: The Example of 'Antony and Cleopatra'. O.B. Hardison, director of the Folger Shakespear Library in Washington, D.C., will speak about "Milton: 'In Medias Res' ".

Appraising UMass

By JEAN LOCICERO

Many students jumped from the small pond of high school to the large pond of university life, and in the masses here you can feel like a pretty small frog. The flaws and problems effect you too though - living in the corners of Southwest, lofts on the Hill, or tucked away in Sylvan. What would be one change you would make in the university, if possible? What role should UMass play in the society outside the campus boundaries? What one person alone can do is think about those questions, and jot your thoughts down - on a S.W.A.P. CONFERENCE APPLICATION.

A weekend of self appraisal of UMass, the S.W.A.P. conference is something personal in an impersonal university. It is also a catalyst for reform, but the conference is only as good as what it accomplishes. And those products are determined by those who participate.

The weekend's work will be done in workshop situations for discussions on off-campus and on-campus concerns. Three main areas of concern within the school are communication, governance, and counseling, about which ideas from faculty, administration and students, including those who do not consider themselves leaders, will mix in the workshop atmosphere.

The application form is simple, and is oriented to find a sample concerned and willing to devote Nov. 17, 18, and 19, to productive exchange of ideas to constructive ends. The Oak and Spruce Lodge in South Lee is the site and transportation can be arranged. Stop by the Campus Center Information desk, the Student Activities desk, the Greek Affairs Office in 227 Whitmore, or the Southwest Student Affairs in John Quincy Adams Lobby for an application. They will be due by Thursday, Oct. 26, as the delegates are to be decided by Nov. 1

If we can reform our local environment, affecting our daily lives, then we are qualified to go further. That is a fundamental goal of Student Workshops on Activities Problems, SWAP.

Senate Seats Open

Student Senate seats are still open in the following dorms: Dwight, Gorman, Mary Lyon, Chadbourne, Wheeler, Crabtree, and Field.

In Southwest, openings still remain in JQA upper and lower, Melville, Mackimmie, James, Crampton, Thoreau, Coolidge upper.

Two people are needed to fill the Sorority Senator seats also.

Nomination sheets may be picked up outside the Student Acitivites area on the first level of the Campus Center. They must be returned to the same place by 5 p.m., Friday, Oct. 20.

Elections for these spaces will be held on October 28.

JV Booters Route Community Greenfield

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The JV soccer squad traveled to Greenfield yesterday afternoon in the cold, anticipating a touch struggle against Greenfield Community College, which turned out to be a more party like atmosphere as the Minutemen went on to romp over GCC 6-0.

The booters started off slow and for the first seven or eight minutes they couldn't settle down and hit the open man. Once they started playing their own game, and getting the passing game working, things started to click, and they never stopped.

At the ten minute mark Bill Belcher scored the initial UMass tally as he picked up a pass from Dave Penza.

The second goal came as a total surprise to almost everyone. Alan Long had a throw in from the sidelines. Normally on the throw in, the ball is thrown into a wing who in turn tries to set up a play. Long didn't want any middle man involved as he threw the ball right at the net and Dave Boiselle got his head on it and, the Minutemen had two.

A few minutes later Dave Penza connected after receiving a beautiful cross pass from right winger Art Boyle (Artychoked) and the score was 3-zip, as the first half came to a close.

It didn't take the Minutemen as long to get their offense rolling in the second half as it did in the first. On a corner kick by Tom Corbin, Charlie Palano scored the first of his two goals to make it four for the Minutemen, and then Palano scored again on a long pass from halfback Dave Himmelberg and then there were five UMass goals.

The final tally was scored by Ron Blump, as he dribbled all the way up the left side and let a shot go, and that was six.

Although six goals in one soccer game is quite an offensive showing, the Minutemen had numerous other great scoring opportunities such as Jim Fitzgerald and Charlie Polano hit by the posts and having the ball bounce the wrong way. The statistics are evidence of the awesome show put on by the Minutemen, as they outshot the Greenies 31-5 and held a very slight edge on corner kicks 9-1.

In the nets for the Minutemen was Steve Richter, who turned in another fine performance in recording the third shutout of the year for the JVs. The squad is down to two goalies as Paul Peloquin has been lost to the varsity, following Barry Lutchen who went upstairs.

Art Boyle, who had never practiced penalty kicks before was forced to shoot one with about 4 minutes left in the game and yes ladies and gentlemen, Arty choked. He missed the net completely and his teammates wouldn't let him forget it all the way back to Amherst.

Off this victory, the JV soccer squad has been given a few days off by Coach Jack Berryman until they play Springfield Technical College in a pick up game next Tuesday.

Ice Expansion Boon To American Players

BALTIMORE (AP) - Expansion of major league hockey has diluted the caliber of play throughout the sport, but Terry Reardon of the Baltimore Clippers manages to see some long-range benefits.

"You can't hide the fact that there has been dilution, and it has hurt us," the general manager and coach of the American Hockey League team said Thursday. "But it's also going to help."

"A lot of kids who couldn't make it before are going to become stars now," Reardon told a meeting of the Baltimore Sports Reporters Association.

"The addition of two more teams in the National Hockey League and the start of the World Hockey Association," he said, "will expose more athletes to the game and make it easier for American boys to compete. That may be a big source for us in the future."

Reardon said the advent of the WHA also has increased salaries in the AHL several thousand dollars about the $10,000 average of last season, and added: "The players had it coming to them."

Jake Embry, president of the Clippers, didn't go that far but said, "we're happy to pay as high a salary as possible."

Embry contended, however, that salaries in sports are "getting out of line with reality."

"There's no way it can continue much longer without something falling in," he said.

As for the Clippers, Embry said expenses have more than doubled during their 10 years of existence, while ticket prices have gone up 25 per cent with the top seat for a home game now selling for $5.

Bradley to Quit Hoop For Politics

BRISTOL, Conn. (AP) - Bill Bradley, the New York Knicks' intellectual basketball star, says this may be his final season, and that if not, next year certainly will. He said he is interested in politics.

"This year may be my last year, said the former Rhodes Scholar from Princeton. "If not this year, certainly next year".

Bradley made the comment to newsmen Wednesday night while campaigning for Sen. George McGovern.

"I am interested in politics, and the question is where, when and why office," said Bradley.

"My home is Missouri and I am working very hard for the Democratic Party in the state this year."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The late Charles "Sonny" Liston, who was heavyweight boxing champion of the world, was very cautious where astrology was concerned. He broke training once, in Las Vegas, to "escape" a publicity confrontation, during which I was to tell him something about his horoscope. Former lightweight champion Ike Williams of Trenton, N.J., had much the same attitude. This followed my prediction that another champion, Bob Montgomery of Philadelphia, Pa., would knock him out. Montgomery followed through, scoring the kayo and became a friend of astrology.

Harriers Face Eagles Tomorrow

By WALT POWERS

The UMass Cross Country team will find itself in an unusual situation when it faces Boston College this Saturday. After four away meets against six opponents, the Minutemen will be running at home for the first time this year.

In B.C. they'll be facing a freshman-laden team in the process of rebuilding. Despite its inexperience, B.C. sports a 5-1 record, its only loss coming against Providence. Their top four are freshmen, but they're strong, and have great potential. Tom Cappazuto was last year's Catholic High School Cross Country champion. Keith Francis was last year's New England Half-mile Champ, and he's running third, behind Walt Swanbon. Running fourth is a guy named Liquori - Steve. He's Marty's little brother, and though he's not quite as good as Martywas, it's still an intimidating name.

UMass will counter B.C. with some pretty strong freshmen of their own, as well as a big crew of seasoned veterans. It is this experience, combined with a difficult-to-measure home course advantage, that should give UMass the edge.

The course loops through and around Orchard and Sylvan hills. It is hilly, and in many places the path is rocky and the footing treacherous. A course like this makes it difficult to keep up a smooth, fast stride over a long period of time and makes stamina more important than raw speed. The majority of the UMass team runs best on courses like this.

B.C. won't be a pushover. They are young, fast and have tremendous potential. They are underdogs, and have nothing to lose. Last year a very young UMass team humiliated the Eagles in Boston, and it is unlikely that their coach has forgotten it. They should be ready.

UMass is healthy and fully recovered from the last two meets. They've improved steadily in the last few weeks and should do well as a team. They expect to beat the Eagles, and are prepared to work for it.

Water Polo Meet at UNH

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

Sponsoring a Water Polo Club and a Master's Swim Program, the newly formed UMass Aquatics Club has been very active in their first semester of existence on the UMass campus.

The Water Polo Club's games are just as exciting to watch as those seen at the Olympics. They travel to the University of New Hampshire this weekend for some competition and then the following weekend they sponsor a return performance for UNH here at UMass. The team consisting of both undergraduates and graduate students, practices daily from 8-9 a.m. in Boyden Pool. Interested participants should contact either Bill McCafferty or Tod Eauchur at the pool.

The second part of the club, the Master's Swim Program is very similiar to the Master's Track Program at UMass. It appeals to the older age groups 25 years and up who want to swim competively.

Lead NAIA Division One

NEW YORK (AP) - Unbeaten Central Oklahoma State bolted to the No. 1 ranking Thursday among National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics football powers.

Livingston, Ala., leader in the NAIA Division One poll all season, was tied 14-14 by Western Carolina but still grabbed second place just one point behind Central Oklahoma.

Behind the 5-0 leader and 5-0-1 runnerup are Jackson State, Southwest Texas State, Central Washington State, Jacksonville, Ala., State, Caron-Newman, Nebraska-Omaha, East Texas State and Angelo State.

UMass Headed for Parents Weekend at Kingston Tomorrow

By MARTY KELLEY

Mead Field is innocent as Yankee Conference football facilities go. It's situated in Kingston Rhode Island, and was probably named after a prominent Rhody chemist who left the athletic department a lot of geters. And if you check closely this Saturday afternoon you'll probably find that the field is a hundred yards long, has goal posts and is lined in white. But, don't be fooled by the obvious, Mead Field has much more going for it than just structure and history this weekend.

It's Parents Weekend 1972, for all the Rammets of past fortune and don't bet they won't be there to greet the Minutemen. For past history will tell you, the Rams have had fun at Kingston with most editions of Redman football teams. And I rather doubt that a new name change and an undefeated top ranked squad will change the psychology at Mead. As Bill Ballou has listed for you, The Rams will look to the past to get ready for tomorrow.

And what about Massachusetts? Will history repeat itself? Let's hope not. But for a relatively young team, you can bet that the sting of last season's 31-3 Homecoming humiliation is still there. Offensive Coordinator George Flood explains:

"Last season we had the ability on offense but we weren't getting the points and people were surprised when we exploded against Holy Cross. But this team has been scoring the points (near 36 a game) so there will be a different type of offensive attitude reflected for the game on offense. We know we can put the points on the board".

Points or no points, Rhode Island has a host of variables on their side and one important factor that I'd like to dwell on is the fact that this is their Parents Weekend. Just what are the psychological reprecussions of a Parents Weekend? How will it affect a football team, especially a young one such as Massachusetts?

First of all go back to Burlington Vermont and pick up the action live from the UMass locker room at the half. The Minutemen are being horrored by a scrappy Catamount unit that delighted its 5,000 rain soaked fans with a display of football that in a way was prompted simply by their presence. It's called catharsis and whenever a totally dedicated arena can, such as in the Vermont case, motivate a football team through the rain and mud, then that's saying something for the integrity of Vermont's Homecoming Crowd. Is a Parents Weekend crowd like a homecoming crowd?

You can bet that the same sort of mass hysteria will permeate Mead Field this Saturday afternoon.

And maybe UMie rooters can take a lesson from the Mead throng this Saturday. Hell, it's been a long time since I've seen a crowd really carry one of Metawampee's contingencies to victory. And with an undefeated football team to date, this would be an apropos time to harness a little catharsis, or the emotional involvement of a college football game.

Now I don't think the cathartic reaction at Rhode Island (God knows it will be prevelent) will scare the Minutemen. It certainly didn't scare our integrety at Harvard so I think with our introduction to pressure at the Ivy Tower the team grew and I'm sure you'll see that period of growth personified in the likes of Healy, Hansen, Parrot, Mika, St. Onge, and any other sophomore character witness you want to drum up.

Going or shall we be so coarse to say that being invited to a Parents Weekend could be potentially dangerous to a football team that has established itself such as Massachusetts. But when Tom Price, all 250 pounds of him, goes on record as saying something to the affect that it won't happen again-we remember how they spoiled our Homecoming-and everyone is up for this one - well, these are common pregame sport cliches that I would expect anyone to say. But something tells me that Tom isn't kidding and neither will his Minutemen be kidding this Saturday.

A win is so imperative. We've now struggled through two Homecomings and finally after all the wait the punishment and the harrassment from the Homecomings on the road, UMass will return hopefully to the friendly confines of Alumni Stadium with the same credentials that they left with....

A's Nip Reds in 9th; Take 3-1 Edge

OAKLAND (AP) - Pinch-hitter Angel Mangual drilled a first-pitch single in the bottom of the ninth inning Thursday night, climaxing an Oakland comeback that carried the A's to a 3-2 victory over Cincinnati in game No. 4 of baseball's 1972 World Series.

The dramatic rally gave Oakland a 3-1 edge in the best-of-seven series and put the A's in position to clinch their first world championship since 1930, when the teams played in Philadelphia.

Mangual, batting for winning pitcher Rollie Fingers, drilled his hit through the drawn-in Reds infield and was mobbed by his happy teammates, who emptied onto the field as Gene Tenance crossed the plate with the winning run.

The Reds had rallied for a 2-1 lead on Bobby Tolan's two-out, two-run double in the eighth inning. Reliever Pedro Borbon got leadoff man Mike Hegan to open the A's ninth.

Oakland's pitch-hitting specialist, Gonzalo Marquez, batted for George Hendrick and singled up the middle. Allan Lewis ran for Marquez and, with Tenace coming to bat, Reds Manager Sparky Anderson went to the mound.

Tenace had already socked his third home run of this pitcher-dominated series in the fifth inning and Anderson wanted Borbon to be careful with the A's catcher. When Borbon fell behind 2-1 on the batter, Anderson went to the mound again and this time he brought Borbon back to the dugout with him.

World Series Expose in Poor Richard's

Erving Reinstated

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) - Julius Erving announced Thursday he will return to the Virginia Squires of the American Basketball Association pending disposition of his court suit to break his four-year contract with the Squires and play in the National Basketball Association.

Erving told a news conference that he will be in uniform and ready to play for the Virginia team Friday night at New York against the New York Nets.

Squires' owner Earl Foremen said that in the meantime litigation will continue. He said it could be between one and six weeks before the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York hands down a decision in the case.

Foreman said Erving will be playing under the terms of his present contract with Virginia, estimated to call for $500,000 for a four-year span.

Ram-UMie Flashback

By BILL BALLOU

The Minutemen journey to Rhode Island tomorrow for a continuation of what is one of the better series in the Yankee Conference. Here's what has happened during the past six years:

OCTOBER 18, 1966–UMass wins at Kingston, R.I. Final score is 14-9 as Ernie Small intercepts a Tom Fay pass at the goal line in the closing seconds. URI was driving and could have won. Collegian called it a "tough defensive battle".

OCTOBER 21, 1967–Redmen win their Homecoming game by 28-24 in front of rather small crowd. URI scores on first play from scrimmage, an 84 yard pass despite warnings by Vic Fusia to watch out for it. Redmen come back in late stages to win it. Collegian called it a "sloppy performance".

OCTOBER 19, 1968–Rhode Island breaks a 16 game UMass Yankee Conference winning streak by dumping the Redmen 14-9 in a hurricane at Kingston. UMass couldn't take advantage of numerous Rhody mistakes.

OCTOBER 18, 1969–16,200 see UMass win Homecoming game at Alumni Stadium, 21-9. Game is completely dominated by UMass running game as the Redmen pick up 397 yards on 70 carries. Collegian called it "unspectacular".

OCTOBER 17, 1970–Redmen drop their fourth in a row, on the season, as URI wins in Kingston, 14-7. UMass defense is good but offense is terrible. Both URI scores a resut of UMass fumbles.

OCTOBER 16, 1971–Mark Palau's 36 yard field goal the only UMass score as Rhody quarterback Bob Ehrhardt picks Redmen apart, hitting 19-30 passes. Final score of 31-3 indicates the extent of the slaughter. Rhode Island ends up with total offense of 509 yards.

Minutemen Hoping to Ram Rhody in Tilt Tomorrow

By EARLE BARROLL

It was the type of game they'd like to forget, but the memory still lingers.

"It's extremely difficult to put into words exactly how it felt," said senior guard John Hawkins last night after practice in reflecting on last year's 31-3 Homecoming trouncing at the hands of Rhode Island.

"I just had this empty feeling inside and as the game proceeded I just wanted it to end so I could get back into the locker room."

Center Kevin Moran, a junior, called it "the worst game we played all year."

And quarterback Peil Pennington couldn't do a thing about it. His arm was in a sling, compliments of Boston University the Saturday before.

Which brings us to tomorrow, Rhode Island again (at URI) and a game that looms very important in UMass' claim as the number one team in New England. (Game time is 1:30).

The problems here will be two fold.

Historically UMass football teams have had very little success at Kingston. (See related story by Bill Ballou).

The other problem has to do with this year's URI team. The Rams are 3-2, but were only four points away from being 5-0. Offensive line coach Bob Lord terms the Rams "T.N.T. They're a very dangerous team for us. They're ripe and we're ripe."

They feature one of the finest running tandems in New England in Dan Weed and Molly McGee. Bob Ehrhardt, the qb who engineered last year's demolition has graduated, but his replacement, Kim Purcell (sophomore), has the right amount of inconsistancy to pose major problems for any defense.

And if you've ever had any thoughts of trading places for a Saturday afternoon with Mr. Moran just take a gander at the tackles he'll be up against: 252 pounds to his right. 250 pounds to his left. And their replacement is only a mere 286.

As Dick MacPherson said at the Varsity M club luncheon on Wednesday, "We try to be truthful to our players. So we told Kevin about the two 250 pounders. But as of yet we haven't mentioned the 280 pounder to him."

NOTES: Paul Metallo was named to the ECAC team of the week for his performance against B.U. last Saturday. Bob Parrott was chosen as the sophomore of the week in the Yankee Conference...As for the polls, the Minutemen are number three in the Lambert Trophy race (Eastern supremacy,) 14th in the nation in the UPI small college ratings and still number one in New England...Earlier in the week there was a picture in the sports page where an unidentified UMass tackler was bringing down a B.U. player on a kickoff return. The mystery man was Paul Wesockes.

Soccer Team at Kingston Tomorrow

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team will travel to Kinston, RI on Saturday to take on Rhode Island in a crucial Yankee Conference contest. The Minutemen, now with a 3-2 record, will be seeking to get back to winning ways after a discouraging 4-1 loss to Tufts last Saturday in Medford.

The Rams are 2-0 in the conference, having defeated first Maine 3-2, and then bombing Vermont 6-2. The Redmond-men are currently 1-1, losing to Maine 2-0 and then bouncing back to beat BU 3-1.

Carl Vercollone, who has a 1.00 goals against average, will start in the nets for the UMies. Barry Lucien, was injured in the Tufts game and has been replaced by Paul Peloquin from the JV's. Fullback Jim O'Hara will join Peloquin on the parent squad and should seem some action on Saturday.

"This will be a very tough game for us," commented Gerry Redmond. "URI is one of the leading teams in the conference, and we have to win to stay alive. Connecticut will come to Amherst next Saturday for a very important game."

"To date Tom Coburn has accounted for over 50 per cent of our goals and has performed very well," continued the first year coach. "It would be pleasant, though, to see others among the scorers. At time we have caused slight apprehensions on the part of opposing goal keepers with our shooting, it would be nice to make them thoroughly nervous."

"The team was very disappointed with our loss to Tufts last week," concluded Redmond. "They really want to make up for it with a solid win over Rhode Island."

Crew to Compete in Head of Charles

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

This Sunday, the UMass Crew Team will be competing in the largest regatta in the U.S.—The Head of the Charles. Six Minutemen shells are entered in four events out of the seventeen offered.

The regatta begins at noon. UMass shells are entered in the Novice Singles at 1:20 p.m., the Intermediate Four with coxswain at 1:40, the Pair without a coxswain at 3:00 and the Intermediate Eight at 3:40.

Also competing is Crew Coach Mike Vespoli, who will be rowing with members of the Olympic Rowing Team in the Elite Eight race at 5:20.

The three mile, winding, upstream course runs from just below the BU bridge to a parking area off Soldiers Field Road after the Eliot bridge. Shells in each event are run at ten second intervals with the best time determining the winner.

Freshman Roger Bonsell will coxswain the eight. The tentative oarsmen listing includes: Senior Tony Joneck, Junior Rich Jamara, and Sophomores, Peter Berg, Bill Fitzpatrick, Kevin Kaylor, Bill Vose, Jim Bouziantis and Steve Torosian.

The four will be guided by Soph Tom Richard and powered by Seniors Jeff Allen, Ted Fitzpatrick and Joe Piela, and Junior Rich Clair.

The senior duo, undefeated in fall action, composed of Bill Moran and Al Flanders, will row in the pair.

The three novice scullers (Two oared single shells) will consist of Sophs, Bill Mitchell, Peter Flood and Paul Gowan.

Last year, the best finish by a UMass crew was ninth by the intermediate four in a field of twenty. Many shells from various schools, colleges, and clubs will be entered. The competition is very good, the course is tough and long, so, the experience will be beneficial for the rowers who seek to improve upon last year's record.

In All Shapes and Sizes

There's an old saying that there's more than one way to skin a cat. I think that saying aptly applies to professional quarterbacks.

Orthodox thinkers in football today would probably cringe at this heresay. Conventional thinking seems to lean increasingly towards specialization of the quarterback. We've all heard countless times about the new trend in professional quarterbacking. We've heard about the new breed of pro signal-callers-bigger, stronger, faster, more intelligent.

I'm not saying those aren't valuable assets, but only that they aren't all necessary at once and that the whole idea of the new breed of quarterbacks is being overemphasized. It sounds almost like today's quarterbacks must be a certain type. It's almost as if they were poured into a mold and must possess each of these attributes. What mold, then would some of the following quarterbacks have been poured from?

Joe Kapp led Minnesota to the NFL championship in 1970 with passes that had all the zip of a falling sparrow. But Joe found out that guts and leadership could compensate for his weak right arm. (I'll refrain from using the word courage here and stick to guts. It gets a bit old hearing about the "courage" of a guy who played with a gimpy knee). Billy Kilmer is another more recent version of the gutsy team-leader type.

Sonny Jurgensen, still a premier quarterback on a veteran Redskin Team, used to be fat. He had a belly that even the heaviest beer drinker would have envied. But Sonny throws with his arm, not his belly, and maybe only Joe Namath can match him for his pure playing ability. (The thrill of calling him Joe Willie is gone. Everyone does it now).

Namath plays on knees so fragile that running is out of the question. He has succeeded in the classic style of the old guard drop-back quarterbacks. Some say an obsolete style is pushing the Unitases and the Brodies out of their jobs, but I think it is simply a matter of age.

If the definitions of Kapp, Namath, and Jurgensen could be combined, you come up with a pot-bellied, quarterback that can't throw or run. Where's Upton Bell?

Salinger Expects Viet Ceasefire Soon

By BOB SCHEIER

Pierre Salinger, co-chairman of the National Citizen's Committee for McGovern-Shriver, said yesterday that he expects a Vietnam ceasefire "within 48 to 72 hours."

Salinger, in a telephone interview with the Collegian and a number of other college newspapers around the country, said he also thought the Nixon administration had convinced South Vietnamese president Nguyen Van Thieu "to accept the idea of a coalition government."

But he said the administration would make the peace move "a two step affairr", where all we would hear about before the election would be the cease fire, and we wouldn't hear about the coalition government until after the election."

Salinger, a former press secretary for President John F. Kennedy, said that he expected North Vietnamese troops to be withdrawn from South Vietnam under the agreement, and that the Viet Cong and South Vietnamese governments would then negotiate a political settlement for the country.

"A stated aim of the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong all along has been a coalition government in Saigon to preside over elections" he said. "The administration will disguise the fact that they have given up on this very vital point (the coalition government) that they have said they would never give up on, until after the election."

Salinger said the settlement would also include provisions for the return of American prisoners of war and the withdrawal of American forces from Vietnam.

Salinger said "I'm obviously not sitting with Kissinger and don't know what he's talking about, and have to get my information from public sources and read behind the lines."

In remarks about the presidential election, Salinger said polls taken by the McGovern organization and his own travels around the country had convinced him that the Democratic nominee could still win.

He added that in key states–those with large electoral votes and relatively small margins between McGovern and President Nixon–and across the country, many Democrats who had defected to the Republican party were returning to the Democrats.

The margin between McGovern and Nixon in many of these key states, such as Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Michigan, he added, were much smaller than the margin shown in national polls.

"In many communities, people find it unfashionable to say they are going to vote for McGovern," Salinger said, "Many people don't tell the pollsters what they think."

Peace Talks Fail To Reach Accord

SAIGON (AP) — Presidential aide Henry A. Kissinger returned to the United States Monday as the U.S. Embassy and a semi-official Saigon newspaper issued statements indicating the latest peace negotiations here had fallen short of an accord.

There was no official guidance on this, nor even on the subjects discussed, from either side. But an apparent failure to reach agreement centered on a cease-fire plan and an interim government to serve until a final political solution was achieved.

Kissinger headed for Washington to report to President Nixon after five days of talks with President Nguyen Van Thieu, the most intensive Indochina peace negotiations to date. Asked at the airport if it had been a productive visit, Kissinger replied: "It always is when I'm here."

Arriving in Washington, Kissinger said "we made some progress" but would not elaborate. He said he planned to report to Nixon later Monday night.

In Saigon, the embassy issued a brief statement saying efforts toward an accord between the allies would continue.

Tin Song, a newspaper that often reflects Thieu views, said the general impression of observers was that negotiations between Thieu and Kissinger had been conducted in a "very heated atmosphere in the face of the unyielding Vietnamese determination to stand pat on its position."

"Throughout the duration of the negotiations between the U.S. delegation and President Thieu, observers noted that the South Vietnamese had always maintained their clear-cut position to reject any peace solution contrary to the interests of the South Vietnamese people," Tin Song continued.

A spokesman for the presidential palace said he could not confirm the Tin Song account, and the U.S. Embassy would not go beyond its 29-word statement.

Both Newsweek and Time magazines have reported that the United States and North Vietnam have agreed to a settlement that would include a cease-fire. But there has been no official confirmation in Saigon from either U.S. or South Vietnamese officials.

Henry Kissinger says some progress was made in the intensive talks which he took part. However Tin Song a newspaper that often reflects the views of President Thieu said a very "heated atmosphere" existed between he and Kissinger when they were negotiating.

House Speaker David M. Bartley of Holyoke says he will meet with Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt to discuss the superintendent's vacancy at the Belchertown State School as well as other policies of the department.

Supt. Selection Sparks Fight

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The rumored appointment of a superintendent at the Belchertown State School has touched off a new controversy between the Belchertown Friends Association and the Dept. of Mental Health.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends Association, said he has enlisted the support of several local community groups including the Valley Children's Lobby in an attempt to block the appointment of a permanent superintendent at the school.

Ricci is a member of a seven-man committee that was appointed by Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt to find a successor for Dr. Roland A. Nagle, who announced his resignation as superintendent on June 12 effective Sept. 2.

The committee has presented two candidates for the post to Greenblatt for his consideration, but Ricci said he "refuses to participate in this shoddy display of democratic selection by an appointed committee."

"The selection process must be more orderly and deliberate," he continued. "I wish to emphasize that I have neither the reason to reject nor accept the two active candidates."

House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, said he is deeply concerned over the selection process. He said he will meet with Greenblatt today to discuss with the commissioner various policies of the department including the superintendent's post.

"I don't want to judge qualifications," he said, but "I do want the department to look over the qualifications of more people."

He added in a telephone interview that the legislature is still "unhappy with the way the Dept. of Mental Health is handling situations at Belchertown."

In a letter to Human Services Secretary Peter C. Goldmark, Ricci stated: "This latest crisis can be diffused simply by ordering Commissioner Greenblatt to appoint an acting superintendent for Belchertown."

Ricci said the appointment of an acting superintendent would give the department the necessary time to "conduct a thorough search for a superintendent in an orderly, deliberate manner."

Ricci is also the leading figure in a class-action suit charging the State Dept. of Mental Health with negligence in the care of residents at the Belchertown School.

Until the commissioner comes forward with written correspondence, Ricci said he will counter any claims that the department has "engaged in a vigorous recruiting campaign."

Meanwhile, 34 staff members of the superintendent's council of Belchertown have recommended that immediate action be taken to appoint a superintendent.

In a letter to Greenblatt, the staff said: "There are noticeable signs of a deterioration in staff and morale, confusion in the administrative decision-making process, and a lack of direction in determining priorities and goals."

Lee Douchkoff, director of the student intern program at Belchertown, said many of the staff members are in "complete sympathy" with Ricci, but feel the school is at a complete "standstill" and can no longer afford to wait any longer for a superintendent.

Douchkoff said even though he is dissatsified with the selection process, he is "satisfied that two qualified candidates have come to the front."

He said in an interview that he would not be happy with an acting superintendent since there "might be the chance that we would not find anyone more qualified than the two candiates that we now have."

Language Board Discusses Revision Of Requirements

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

The Foreign Language Review Board met twice last week to discuss possible revisions in the College of Arts and Sciences present foreign language requirement.

The board, which is comprised of eight members, includes two students and functions out of CASIAC. The two meetings, on Thursday and Friday, were similar in their content and discussion. The group hopes to submit a list of recommendations to the College Faculty within a month and a half.

Julie Fata, chairperson of the board, explained on Thursday that dissatisfaction with the present system of waivers was a major concern of the group.

"The waiver system must go," she explained. "It is unworkable as it is and tends to penalize those students who hang in and then do poorly in a foreign language."

Under the present system the four semester foreign language requirement may be waived in cases where students would do poorly due to "physical disabilities, psychological problems and demonstrated difficulties." With the exception of physical disabilities, these areas are "vague and difficult to define."

The board is currently studying an interim proposal which was made last semester. Ms. Fata declined to mention the specifics of the proposal, saying that it was only an interim report and by no means the final recommendation of the board. The board will be issuing its final report within one and a half months.

The board will consider alternate programs that will provide "alternate ways of gaining the same kinds of knowledge" for the student who does poorly in a foreign language as well as for the student who does well in languages.

An alternative program must embrace the two major aspects of foreign language study in order to be a worthwhile alternative, explained Ms. Fata. These are the cultural aspects, through which a student becomes familiar with the culture of a foreign language, and the aspect of language awareness.

Among the alternatives being suggested by members of the Foreign Language Review Board is the possibility of the development of an in-

Another proposal stresses the study of language as a process of communication and would embrace the areas of linguistics and semantics, and the idea of man as the creator of symbols. Other members of the committee are in favor of the abolition of the foreign language requirement.

The Foreign Language Review Board will submit its final proposal to the College Faculty where it will be put to a vote.

India's 'Dry' State Fights 'Wet' Tide

AHMEDABAD. - In the liquor shop of the Cama Hotel here, the Government inspector of prohibition sat at his desk thoroughly hating his job.

"It's pure poison, it's pure poison," he muttered, surveying the bottles of Scotch, Indian whiskies, brandies, cognacs and wines stacked on shelves around him. "I don't understand why people throw away good money on these just to kill themselves."

The wiry, spartan-looking inspector, wearing a crumpled khaki police uniform, sits at the liquor shop every day from morning to evening, issuing permits to visotors. For the whole of Ahmedabad, this is the only shop where liquors are sold and at least half a dozen people, mostly residents of the hotel, come to him every day for "visitors' permits," which cost the equivalent of a dollar.

"Show me your authentication," the inspector growls at an applicant. He means some identity document to establish that the applicant is not a resident of the Gujarat State and that he comes on a temporary visit from a wet area.

When he is satisfied about the identity of the applicant, he issues the permit, valid for one week and "one unit" (one bottle) of liquor, after a lot of form filling and muttering under the breath.

His brusque attitude toward drinkers is a reflection of Gujarat's last-ditch "dry" position among India's 21 states. The rest have all gone "wet."

Gujarat not only has kept a prohibition law on its books for the last 23 years, but has also made what appears to be a vigorous attempt to enforce it and an equally vigorous propaganda effort to discourage drinking on its soil - birthplace of Gandhi, a champion of prohibition.

"If I were appointed dictator for one hour for all India," Gandhi once said, "the first thing I would do would be to close down without compensation all the liquor shops."

Salinger On Vietnam

Salinger acknowledged there had been a downswing in student support for McGovern after his original vice-presidential candidate Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri, resigned after the disclosure he had undergone psychiatric treatment.

"A lot of that support has come back," Salinger claimed.

He also claimed the Democrats had registerd some 8,000,000 new voters across the country, a record for the party, and said these new voters were not taken into account on national polls.

Salinger also rapped press coverage of the McGovern campaign, claiming many people felt McGovern had stopped talking about the war because the press had stopped reporting his speeches on Vietnam.

In response to charges that Sen. McGovern was a "radical", Salinger said "It's impossible to run against Richard Nixon and not be a radical," claiming Nixon had made the same charge against John F. Kennedy in the 1960 election.

He said even if a cease-fire were declared before election, "the American people aren't so stupid as to believe that something that has been achieved in the last two weeks, obviously for political reasons, couldn't be achieved four years ago."

International Board Members To Be Announced

At the international folk dance event this evening, scheduled for 8:00 pm in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge, the seven foreign students who have been selected by petition to the provisional board will be introduced to all attending. Their immediate function will be to advise the Foreign Student Office on its procedures and on student needs. No run-off elections will be necessary at the dance.

The evening's activity, led by Amherst College students Steve Rausch and Eddie King who present folk dance events and classes weekly at Smith College, is free and open to the public. It has been organized by the Foreign Student Office in celebration of United Nations day October 24.

Judith Crist To Speak Tonight

Distinguished Visitors Program Committee proudly presents a lecture by Judith Crist tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Her topic will be "Every Man His Own Critic". Mrs. Crist is known primarily for her columns in New York Magazine and T.V. Guide and for her appearances on the Today Show. She also writes for Palm Springs Life and the Washingtonian. Her book, The Private Eye, The Cowboy, and The Very Naked Girl; Movies from Cleo to Clyde has a good collection of some of her columns from the New York and World Tribunes.

Mrs. Crist is a Prof. at Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism. She received her B.A. from Hunter College and her M.S.C. in Journalism from Columbia University. In 1970 she won the Hunter's President's Medal for Distinguished Service, the highest award an alumnus can receive. She is considered by many in her field to be the most influential critic in the United States today.

Mrs. Crist lives in New York, with her husband and teenage son.

As with all D.V.P. lectures, there will be no admission charge and a question and answer and coffee hour will be held immediately following Mrs. Crist's speech.

Joel Stoneham, director of the Food Services Department, described plans for changes in this department's services. Some of these changes include a bike shop in the lobby of Hampden Commons, and a study center and black cultural center in Berkshire Commons. The Food Service Department also opened a new Munchy's in Franklin Commons this semester. Stoneham said that he cannot predict whether or not board rates will increase this year. Stoneham Outlines Plans For Food Services Dept.

By HUGH OWEN

Joel Stoneham, director of the Food Services Department, outlined in a recent interview the current plans for new changes in the departments output to students.

Highlighting these changes are the comment cards which students can pick up at any dining commons. By filling out these cards with his/her comments about the Food Services the Food Services is able to take assessment of what changes students want.

This year the Basic foods in Southwest has been moved to Hampshire Commons in order that room in Hampden be provided for movies, coffeehouses, and various other student activities.

Munchys and the game room, which are presently downstairs in Hampden, will be moved upstairs to the south end and lobby of Hampden.

Bits and Pieces, a snack bar open as an alternative to the dining commons, has been enlargened and remodeled this year to provide a wider selection of food. Presently downstairs in Hampden is the catering kitchen which provides private catering and dorm dinners.

New this year in the lobby of Hampshire Commons will be a bike shop and either a duplicating news service or an arts and crafts center. A study center and black cultural center will soon be opened in downstairs Berkshire Commons. A new Munchys has also recently been opened in Franklin Commons.

New last September was the option for students to buy either a ten or fifteen meal plan. Stoneham said he believes this option provides students with a better alternative to the old mandatory fifteen meal plan. Last September 60% of the students purchasing a meal ticket chose the fifteen meal plan, 40% the ten. Second semester the percentage reversed itself, and this year 45% chose the fifteen meal plan, 55% the ten.

A few years ago the price of a meal ticket was raised to liquidate a large debt which the Food Services was able last year to operate in the black.

Stoneham is not sure whether or not there will be a raise in board this year. Citing the inevitable rise in food prices as a major cause, he said that in the future board price could go up. (An interview with Assistant Director of Food Services Arthur Warren, outlining some of the difficulties in the Department, will appear in tommorrows Collegian.)

Scholarships Gone For '72-73

By SHELLEY LAUZON

Scholarships from the University will not be available for the remainder of the academic year.

In an interview last Friday, Mr. Lynn E. Santner, Director of Financial Aid, said that all available money has been given out. Approximately 6,500 enrolled students applied for aid; of that number, 1500 have been awarded scholarships, the average being $350-$400.

"In terms of numbers, that figure is up a little, but in terms of per capita average, it's down a little from last year", he said. He explained that many students who received scholarships also received another form of financial aid, and that many students who did not receive a scholarship did receive money from loans, grants, or other sources.

The numbers of upperclass students applying for aid has increased. "There is nearly a 50-50 split between incoming freshmen applicants and currently enrolled students. Of the approximately 11,000 applications for scholarships we received, 5,000 came from freshmen who did not come to the University," he said.

Approximately $50,000 in parking fines from last year was given to students in the form of scholarships this year. Mr. Santner explained that this money had built up over the years and was never collected.

"A big effort was made last spring and summer to bring this money in. This figure, however, will probably even off to a lower one in the next few years, due to the fact it was an accumulated sum," he said.

The University receives few private donations; of those given the College of Agriculture and Natural Resources receives the largest number. This money is put into the Trust and Endowment Fund, and a majority of it is restricted for use by students in the College. These scholarships are different from those the university grants, and range between $25-$1000, with restrictions on each one.

Out-of-state students do not receive state scholarships. They do receive some money from the traffic fine fund and the Trust and Endowment Fund. The majority of students receiving this aid are upperclassmen. Most financial aid for out-of-staters comes in the form of federal loans or from work-study programs, Santner added.

Graduate students do not receive scholarships either, but Santner noted that the Financial Aid Office is presently negotiating for possible aid.

Scholarships are granted on the basis of need and academic performance. Freshmen who apply for aid are judged by a common factor of their high school record. "This system has worked fairly well over the past 6 or 8 years, with a few refinements along the way," he said.

The university budget has a specific item for scholarships. This year, the figure is "a little over $4,000,000 for the total university (Amherst, Boston, Worcester), according to Santner. "That figure is up substantially from past years," he said.

Non-Teachers Seeking Voice In Governing of University

By BOB SCHEIER

What do vice-chancellors, librarians, some engineers, and glassblowers at UMass have in common? The answer: They are all non-teaching professionals, and up to know have been the last unorganized group on campus. Now, the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts has been formed to give the 600 employees eligible to join it a voice in university affairs.

Organization of the Association was begun last January, and ratification of the group's constitution came last week, with almost all of the potential members who voted expressing approval of the constitution.

According to William Krimsky, assistant director of the division of Continuing Education and the interim president of the group, the group will start by focusing not on collective bargaining or pay, but increasing professional say in the governance of the university.

"There's a lot of expertise on campus that's never been used before," he explained. "Some people just didn't have a say as a unified voice."

According to Krimsky, any non-teaching professional on campus was sent a ballot and information on the group. Among these, said Krimsky, were many administrators, athletic coaches, construction and maintenance engineers, doctors, heads of residence, and post doctoral research assistants, among others.

He said he did not know whether any vice-chancellor-level administrators had joined the group, but said there were "some surprises" in who voted to ratify the group's constitution.

"The association has none of the bargaining aspects of a union," he said, "There's no single issue that affects all the members the same way."

He added that a committee has been formed to organize elections for permanent officers, which could take place within several months, in addition to by-laws of the group.

"Many of the people in the group are administration people who carry out policies that they really have no responsibility in setting," he added.

"There are a lot of talented people that should be given the chance to carry out their responsibilities responsibly," he said. "We want to be proud to all ourselves professionals and will demand professionalism from our members."

"We feel pleased with our jobs," he continued, "but want to change the level of contributions we make."

This will include, he said, pressing for professional inclusion in search committees, such as the recent chancellor and vice-chancellor search committees.

In The Nation And The World

Search To Continue Until Boggs Found

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - Hampered again by weather, the Air Force refused to give up hope Monday as the search for a light plane carrying House Democratic Leader Hale Boggs and three other men entered its second week.

"The mission will never be called off until the plane is found," a spokesman said Monday. "At present, it's full speed ahead."

But the spokesman, Sgt. Bill Anderson, said the only tangible grounds for optimism has been "relative mild temperatures" ranging between 30 to 40 degrees over the 136,000-square-mile search area, checked and rechecked by a fleet of military and private planes, mountaineering teams and Coast Guard cutters.

Some 50 aircraft, about half of them equipped with electronic surveillance gear, were available to search Monday, but were slowed by bad weather. Officials reported winds ranging to 40 miles an hour, rain and poor visibility.

It was one week to the day since Boggs, of Louisiana; Rep. Nick Begich, Alaska's lone representative; Russell L. Brown, a Begich aide; and pilot Don Jonz disappeared on the 560-mile campaign flight from Anchorage to Juneau.

Through Monday morning, Anderson said, search planes had logged more than 1,500 hours in the air.

Normally, air searches in Alaska are suspended after a week or 10 days if no success if reported.

The Air Force has checked dozens of leads without success and has summoned top-secret supersonic reconnaissance jets capable of searching thousands of square miles electronically in minutes.

The Air Force said it was studying 4,000 feet of film shot by a high-altitude reconnaissance plane Sunday but otherwise, a spokesman said, there have been "no signs, no sightings, no leads, no reports."

Air Force Maj. Henry Stocker, search coordinator at nearby Elmendorf Air Force Base, said officials are presuming the plane may have put down with survivors.

Hijackers Free Hostages

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) - Four Turkish hijackers surrendered late Monday and freed the more than 60 hostages they held aboard a Turkish jet liner for 38 hours at the Sofia, Bulgaria, airport.

The four Marxist university students stepped off the Boeing 707 and handed their firearms to Bulgarian authorities. Officials in Ankara said they asked for and will get political asylum in neighboring Bulgaria.

Turkey refused the hijackers' demand for the freedom of 13 leftist prisoners, but was reported to be unopposed to giving the four asylum.

Bulgaria's BTA news agency said: "All the necessary action has been taken to secure the safe and rapid return of the passengers, crew and plane to Turkey."

A Turkish news agency quoted a Bulgarian government spokesman as saying after the release: "We prevented a great tragedy."

The hijackers had threatened to blow up the plane and the passengers if Turkey did not meet their demands for freeing the 13 leftists and reforms by the government. Faced with the refusal, the hijackers twice extended their deadline for action.

They told officials in Sofia their aim was to "tear down the Turkish regime and set up a Marxist Leninist system."

The plane was hijacked in Turkey Sunday on a domestic flight with 71 passengers and a crew of 10 aboard. The pilot and a passenger were slightly wounded in a shooting on board. They were let off along with several other passengers when the plane landed in Sofia.

Turkish reports said 66 hostages were still aboard when the hijackers surrendered to Bulgarian police.

Reports from Sofia said the plane had been parked on a side runway at the airport and was surrounded by security forces, fire trucks and ambulances. Two of the terrorists patrolled outside.

At one point they conferred with Bulgarian officials who persuaded them to extend the deadline.

In a note sent to the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry, Turkey apparently refused to deal with the hijackers. The note is reported to have said Turkey considered Bulgaria responsible for saving the hostages.

The Bulgarian deputy foreign minister, Nenko Cendov, told the Turkish ambassador that his country could not accept this responsibility but would do all in its power.

Last May, when four Turks hijacked another airliner to Sofia, Turkey refused their demand to release the three condemned terrorists. But Bulgaria granted the hijackers political asylum to save the 59 hostages aboard.

Japan Struggling To Hold Prices Down

(AP) — Japan struggled to hold down the price of the yen Monday in another of the complex international money dramas which really have a direct affect on American pocketbooks.

This time the stake is how much Americans will have to pay for Japanese autos, cameras and television and radio sets. If the Japanese lose their struggle, the price of these things in the United States will go up.

The key is the price of the yen - that is, how many dollars it takes to pay a Japanese factory owner for his product. The yen is now worth about one-third of a U.S. cent. If it goes up for example, it would take more dollars to pay the 3,000 yen the Sony Co. gets for a good transistor radio.

At present, the American importer can buy these 3,000 yen for about $10. If the yen is revalued to be worth 10 per cent more, he would have to pay $11 for these same 3,000 yen. That would mean he would have to raise his price to American buyers. The problem is that the yen is a strong currency because Japan is selling more to foreign customers than it is buying. That means there are lots of dollars in Japan. The government must buy them or the price will fall.

By the seesaw effect of foreign exchange rates, if the dollar goes down it means the yen has gone up. To keep the yen down, the Japanese government has been buying dollars, $20 million Monday. So far this month it has bought more than $1 billion.

International money men still think the yen will have to be revalued upward, but the Japanese government hopes to put off any action until spring. It has already put in exchange controls to try to reduce the flow of dollars being sold for yen. The usual figure discussed for a revaluation is between 5 and 10 per cent.

Tokyo has fought bitterly against revaluation because the step would reduce Japanese exports by making the cost more in other countries. It would have hurt Japanese factories, too, because imported goods would have cost less.

U.S. Opposes Global Disarmament Meeting

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The United States opposed on Monday a Soviet proposal to convene a world disarmament conference in 1974 and said such a "large unwieldy" meeting could be harmful.

A majority of the less developed Third World nations backs the Soviet plan, but China stands with Washington in opposing it.

Ambassador George Bush declared that the U.S. administration did not believe such a conference could "contribute at this time to the achievement of concrete arms control agreements."

The expected U.S. opposition came at the start of the annual U.N. disarmament debate in the General Assembly's main policital committee.

Davis Charges Military Frame of GI

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Black militant Angela Davis has announced she plans a nationwide tour to drum up support for Pvt. Billy Dean Smith, a black GI on trial in the grenade "fragging" killings of two officers in Vietnam.

Food Shortage In Chile Acute

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) - A shortage of food and fuel in Santiago became more acute Monday as doctors, dentists and private school teachers joined a nationwide strike movement against Chile's leftist government.

The country's anti-Marxist opposition called for a "day of silence" Tuesday in which all opposed to President Salvador Allende's programs to "lead Chile down the road to socialism" would stay home.

The Interior Ministry said 34 persons were arrested Sunday after terrorist attacks in several parts of Chile, where 20 of 25 provinces are under a state of emergency, a form of martial law.

But reliable news of events in the interior was sketchy because the government last week assumed control of all Chilean radio stations in a state-controlled network of news, music and public announcements.

This capital of three million residents was feeling the pinch of a trucking strike which began Oct. 10 and a shopkeepers' strike more than a week old.

Gen. Hector Bravo Munoz, who heads the Santiago emergency zone where a midnight-to-dawn curfew is in effect, banned sale of gasoline to private motorists through the weekend.

When filling stations, guarded by army troops, were allowed to reopen at dawn Monday, sales were further rationed from last week's 40 escudo maximum to 30 escudos, about 65 cents U.S.

Housewives found the selection of fruits and vegetables at Santiago markets small and prices high.

Tomatoes were selling for as much as 120 escudos - $2.60 a kilo - 2.2 pounds.

Neighborhood deliveries of fresh milk were sharply reduced over the weekend and families were limited to two bottles each in one suburban neighborhood.

The government last week announced a ban on sales of beef until December, the Christmas holiday season. A ban on butter imports also has been announced, because of Chile's shortage of foreign reserves.

USSR Feels Viet War Near Settlement

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union gave its public reason on Monday to believe that a settlement in Vietnam may be imminent.

In doing so, Soviet authorities indicated they gave far more than passing interest to reports that Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's national security adviser, was nearing a negotiated solution to the war.

As in much official Soviet communication, the suggestion was indirect.

First English-language Tass, then the internal Russian-language service of the official news agency and finally the widely viewed 9 o'clcok television news carried an identical dispatch out of Paris.

Without any qualification, they all quoted North Vietnamese spokesman Nguyen Thanh Le as saying: "At present there are all conditions for a speedy settlement of the Vietnam problem."

The only other part of a much longer statement given to newsmen by Le in Paris that the information organs decided to reproduce, was the delegation spokesman's declaration that: "As far as we are concerned, our stand is correct, logical and sensible. We have displayed maximum good will."

U.S. officials judged the Tass and television announcements as significant.

Radio 'Hams' Act To Help Girl With Food Poisoning

MENDOZA, Argentina (AP) - A young girl critically ill with food poisoning received on Monday special serum flown from the United States through an arrangement made by ham radio operators.

Doctors said the condition of Estela Maria Azar, 18, remained grave. She became ill and her brother, Bertan, 12, died last Wednesday after eating tainted food.

Doctors said medicine to treat botulism was not available in Argentina and a local ham radio operator broadcast an appeal that was received by John Moran in Amherst, Mass.

Moran called Mount Sinai Hospital in New York, the doctors said, and a shipment of the necessary medicine was placed on a Braniff Airlines jet and reached here Sunday night.

The girl must receive several more treatments, the doctors added, and her condition in the meantime remains unchanged.

Moran said the appeal broadcast by a ham radio club in Mendoza was picked up first by ham radio operator Eva Perenyi in San Paulo, Brazil, with whom he regularly talks.

He said Mrs. Perenyi was in contact with three other ham radio operators in the United States looking for the antidote serum and had been able to locate some in Atlanta.

"By the time I got involved," Moran said, "the problem had become one of time. The serum in Atlanta could not be flown out to Argentina until Sunday night. And this was about 8:50 Saturday evening."

Moran said he told Mrs. Perenyi he would try to find serum near an airport with an earlier flight to Argentina.

"I got on the phone and made several calls and found out there was a plane out of Kennedy Airport New York City at 10 p.m. Saturday. Then I started calling hospitals in New York.

"I was lucky. On my first call I got Bill Maden, an executive on dujty at Mount Sinai, and he found the serum."

European Troop Reductions Sought

BRUSSELS (AP) - The North Atlantic Council discussed on Monday the question of preparatory talks for a European security conference and for exploratory sessions on mutual troop reduction. Officials said dates were set for both meetings.

Preparatory talks on the European security conference will open in Helsinki on Nov. 22, they reported. Finland has invited the United States, Canada and 32 European countries, East, West and neutral.

In January exploratory talks are due to start on force reductions, probably in Geneva. The United States, Canada, West Germany, Britain, the Netherlands, Belgium, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Norwqy and Denmark will represent the West. France is not interested and will not attend.

On the Eastern side, East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia and perhaps others are expected, in addition to the Soviet Union.

The Helsinki meeting has been sought by Moscow and its allies for years. It will deal with some military matters, but not the same ones as the force reduction conference. The Western allies are expected to propose to the Russians such measures as mutual notification in advance of major maneuvers and other troop movements.

They also would like to see increased exchanges of students, teachers, tourists, books, magazines and newspapers between East and West.

Moscow would like a declaration renouncing the use of force. It also wants an end to the refusal of the United States and some of its allies to sell some products they consider strategic. The Russians would like better terms of credit and other economic help.

Chinese Doctors Continue Visits

CHICAGO (AP) - Chinese doctors visiting the United States looked in upon two American institutions Monday - a large pharmaceutical research laboratory, and in the evening, a circus.

The delegation of 11 physicians arrived here from Boston at midday and visited Abbott Laboratories in North Chicago, where they were shown research in the development of drugs for neurological diseases, computer techniques and electronic monitoring systems to aid heart patients.

Monday night the attraction was purely social, the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus.

The Chinese, returning visits by American doctors to China, have visited institutions in Washington, New York and Boston in a nongovernmental tour sponsored by the American Medical Association and the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences.

Their schedule calls for further scientific-medical inspections in Chicago Tuesday, before they continue on to Kansas City Wednesday and later to San Francisco.

Antiwar Action Responsible If Viet Peace Achieved-McG

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Sen. George McGovern said Monday that the antiwar movement, which fueled his presidential candidacy, would deserve "the major share of the credit" if President Nixon reaches a Vietnam peace agreement in the closing days of the election campaign.

McGovern indicated he is still skeptical that the flurry of diplomatic activity will lead to any concrete Vietnam peace development by Nov. 7. But he told reporters outside the gate of the U.S. Naval Hospital here that "I would say that the antiwar movement deserves the major share of the credit for any move the President makes in the closing days of the campaign."

The Democratic presidential nominee launched his fourth coast-to-coast campaign swing since Labor Day by paying a Veterans Day visit to two wards of the hospital.

The wards were selected by hospital officials and most of the patients McGovern saw were elderly, with ailments unrelated to the Vietnam war.

Later, in a television interview, McGovern said he would be glad to give up his antiwar issue "if we can end this war."

Asked if he would rather be right than president, he replied that he wanted to end the war and didn't see why President Nixon should get credit for doing now what we could have done four years ago.

But he added "if he ends the war even on the night before the election, I'll be there rejoicing."

McGovern told several of the patients he expects to win the election and, in talking to reporters outside the gate, said "the momentum is all in our favor." The two weeks remaining before election day is "plenty of time to turn this election around," he said.

For any election eve settlement, McGovern said, "I'd think you'd have to give credit to the anti war movement."

Collins Central Campaign

James G. Collins, Democratic candidate for State Representative, will return to the UMass campus this week to campaign for students' votes in the November 7th election, now only two weeks away.

Tonight, from 8 to 11 P.M., Collins will canvass door-to-door in dorms in the Central Area, including Brett, Wheeler, Brooks, Gorman, Hills North and Hills South.

Tomorrow, following a dorm dinner in Webster House at 4:30 P.M., Collins will canvass in Van Meter South, Butterfield, Greenough, Chadbourne, and Baker.

The 26-year-old Democrat says that he is scheduling at least three more days of canvassing on the UMass campus prior to the November 7th election.

Melee Disrupts Nixon Speech

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) - President Nixon paraded his reelection campaign through affluent New York suburbs Monday to a Long Island rally where his speech was disrupted by a melee between demonstrators and police.

Before beginning a 3-1/2-hour motorcade through a dozen white-collar communities north of New York City, the President promised to use his veto power or withhold appropriations to curb what he called a congressional spending spree.

State Police estimated more than 400,000 persons lined his 50-mile motorcade route, and another 15,000 to 20,000 jammed Nassau County Coliseum on Long Island for a nighttime rally.

Loud cheers and chants and a sea of waving American flags greeted Nixon as he rose to begin his speech. Then, as he began talking, about a dozen protesters stood in the crowd behind him and began chanting.

Nixon supporters sitting nearby attempted to quiet the demonstrators and fighting broke out. Uniformed and plainclothed policemen moved in, some with nightsticks, and the melee accelerated before the protestors were dragged from the hall.

The President had stopped his speech and, smiling, turned around the watched the struggle. The crowd of Nixon partisans cheered as the hecklers were removed and the President continued with his address.

In his address, Nixon spoke of the election two weeks away and said "the choice to be made is bigger than political parties."

America's future course is at stake, Nixon said as he spoke of "millions of Americans and in-dependents who are joining us." He lashed out at congressional actions and voting appropriations exceeding his budget saying "we must stop that kind of spending that will lead to a tax increase in this country because taxes are all too high."

Campaign '72

Taxes To Be Major Issue On Ballots

(AP)—Taxes, especially those levied on property to support schools, are under attack in various Nov. 7 ballot propositions across the country.

Also facing voters are issues affecting the environment, equal rights, criminal justice, the mechanics of government and the 1976 Winter Olympics as they decide on state referenda, constitutional amendments and the like.

Michigar, Oregon, Washington and Colorado confront the issue of property tax and equal support of public schools.

A proposition on Michigan's ballot would prohibit local property taxes for public schools and direct the legislature to come up with new financing.

A companion proposition would lift the constitutional ban on a state-graduated income tax, which some say might lead to an increase of as much as 100 per cent in the present 3.9 per cent levy.

While chances for passage appear good, the state AFL-CIO opposes the property tax ban.

The measure has the backing of labor and the citizens' lobby, Common Cause, in the hopes of evening out wide disparities in per-pupil expenditures.

Opponents, among them Gov. John A. Love, fear state government won't have enough money to operate if the other sources prove inadequate.

The property tax pays 80 per cent of public education's way in Oregon, and the state Farm Bureau has succeeded in placing a proposition on the ballot to prohibit this means of financing.

Arrayed against the proposition are virtually all other major interests in the state, who express fear of school closure if the legislature can't agree on alternate revenue sources.

The stakes aren't as great in Washington, where voters are being asked to repeal a two-mill state property tax that supplies $50 million annually for public education.

Taking a different tack, Missouri voters will be asked to permit a property tax break for homeowners over age 65 and New Mexico asks whether to exempt some personal property.

In Ohio, the question is whether to repeal a 10-month-old income tax. Massachusetts wants to permit a graduated income tax and Louisiana, confronted with impending court-ordered equalization of property assessments, wants to get out of the property tax business at the state level.

Candidates To Debate

The candidates for state representative in the Amherst district will meet in debate tomorrow evening at 9:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge. The candidates include Democrats James Collins and incumbent representative James Nolen. Nat Reed and Gerry Whitlock are the Republican standard bearers.

They will be questioned by a panel of students representing various groups, including the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) and the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG). Questions from the audience will also be entertained by the candidates.

Mezzo Soprano To Give Recital

Tonight at 8:15 p.m., the Smith College Department of Music will present a recital by mezzo soprano Janet Baker in John M. Greene Hall.

Miss Baker, who was born in York, England, and trained in London, is best known as a recitalist and as a soloist with orchestra in works of Mahler, Bach, Brahms, Mozart, and Benjamin Britten. She has also been acclaimed for her operatic work. In the decade since her first tour of Russia, France, and Sweden with Britten's English Opera Group, she has emerged as one of the world's most distinguished and respected vocalists.

Following Miss Baker's highly successful American debut at Town Hall in 1966, she gave an even more successful recital at Carnegie Hall. Since that time, her many recordings and her annual American tours have maintained her popularity both here and abroad.

Among Miss Baker's many honors are an honorary D. Mus. degree awarded by the University of Birmingham (England) in 1968, and her designation as a Commander of the Order of the British Empire in 1970.

The program for Tuesday's recital will include a Hayden aria, groups of songs by Brahms, including The Four Serious Songs, songs by Strauss, and a number of 20th century English songs.

Tickets will be available today from the Music Department Office, 584-2700, ext. 261, or from the John M. Greene Box Office, ext. 366.

Tonight at 8:15 P.M., mezzo soprano Janet Baker will present a recital in John M. Greene Hall, sponsored by the Smith College Department of Music. The program will include works by Brahms and Strauss.

Cox Says Young Workers Support Nixon

HARTFORD (AP) - President Nixon's 26-year-old son-in-law, Edward Cox, said Monday the young workers of America support Nixon.

In an interview, Cox said the young blue-and white-collar workers don't listen to the "cheap rhetoric and empty promises" from "the opponent" that Cox says attract attention on college campuses.

Cox, who campaigned for Republican congressional candidate Richard Rittenband, said the young workers are the first to get drafted and they know the tax situation because they have jobs.

"They know wages are now outstripping inflation," he said.

After eating a piece of "Welcome to Connecticut" cake at an Italian bakery in Hartford's South End, the Harvard Law School graduate said he speaks on college campuses and draws very large audiences, "but all the questions I get are antagonistic." Cox said he polls those audiences and finds that the majority of them support the President.

"There is a silent majority" on campuses, Cox said.

The husband of Tricia Nixon signed autographs, drew admiring glances from the mostly elderly crowd, and was applauded when he noted that the sun had broken through clouds over Hartford.

After Cox autographed a poster of President Nixon for Mrs. Bertha Kredar of New Britain, she said "you can't even buy this one from me."

Cox also visited a housing project for the elderly.

SWAP: Last Chance

Almost everyone who goes to school here has ideas on how the University should be run, whether it be in the form of a gripe, or a dream to make UMass a better place, a complete living learning experience. But there is seldom a time or a place where these views can be heard by people, or where the student can talk in an open forum with fellow students, administrators, and such.

For those interested, there is a once a year opportunity to do just that coming up the middle of next month; the SWAP Conference. SWAP is a place where students, administrators, faculty, the whole university community, can get together and exchange ideas. The whole UMass experience is appraised, and there are workshops which cover a wide variety of topics, from defining the role of the university outside campus boundaries to discussing the problems of living in Sylvan or Southwest.

The only thing one need do to go to SWAP is fill out a questionnaire application, obtainable at the desk in the Student Activities area of the Campus Center, and have it pass a screening panel. But time is very short. Today is the last day that applications for SWAP are being accepted. It's your last chance to get in. SWAP is a worthwhile experience because YOU are there. The opportunity to take part is open, but it's up to you to act.

Try It, You'll Hate It

It seems that most everyone who lives on campus has the same pet peeve, the Dining Commons. In view of the ever worsening state of things at the D.C. we need hardly ask why.

Despite all the fancy posters which vainly try to mold a new image for Food Services, the fact is that things are getting worse. It's not uncommon to find food in a less than appetizing state at mealtime, frequently dry, and often somewhat less than piping hot. There is also the matter of dirty silverware, which is being found more and more frequently where the clean stuff should be.

Then there are the portions, especially at lunch. Last week, for instance, lunch one day consisted of a hot beef sandwich, which was comprised of a slice of bread, a scoop of gravy, and ONE thin slice of beef. Hardly what might be termed a hearty meal. And all the hoopla about "Steak Night" is certainly wasted in light of the fact that seconds aren't allowed for what is one of the only really good meals of the semester.

Of course the people in Food Services can alway counter these arguments with the traditional moaning about food prices and by saying that you can always have seconds on your hot beef sandwich, but these excuses will hold no longer. Food Services on this campus is a minor league operation at major league prices, and the captive audience that is forced to use it is getting a raw deal. Students deserve better, and steps should be taken now to start making Food Services worth its ample price.

Ed Bryant

Ellsberg's Nation

At the time, he felt somewhat like a war criminal, and wished to do something to atone for his complicity. He had, he felt, sufficient dynamite to arouse not only the nation, but also the Pentagon. He felt his revelations would be of major significance, that they would kick the last prop out from beneath the shaky rationale for the continuance of the war. He was willing to face long-term imprisonment if it would shorten the war. But Dan Ellsberg never suspected that only he would matter, not his actions.

Dan Ellsberg seriously overrated the common sense of the American people, to whom he released the Pentagon Papers. These documents were all classified, meaning that according to the Defense Department, the information contained in them was vital to national security, and should therefore remain secret. There are few people who can resist knowing someone else's secrets; few who never wish to know "the real story." Yet no one seems to have bothered to read the Pentagon Papers, not even those people who blithely claim that the President, who has all the information available to him that is not available to the public, is best equipped to make decisions. Here was a chance for those who so place their faith to check whether or not that faith was wisely placed, in light of information which had previously been available to the President, but not to them. In view of the nation's patience with President Nixon's conduct of the war, it must be assumed that these True Believers have not troubled themselves to read the Papers.

Ellsberg may indeed go to jail for his actions, which have not had their desired effect. In terms of the damage done to its good reputation in the country, the government really ought to find Ellsberg guilty of a misdemeanor, and fine him $50 for causing slight embarrassment to the government of the United States. If a public uproar might have endangered the Nixon Administration's ability to bomb hell out of North Vietnam, it might have a case against Ellsberg. This is not the case, however, and the Administration really ought to thank Ellsberg for his invaluable sounding of the depths of public apathy.

What has come out of Ellsberg's revelations? The chief thing is that Ellsberg himself has become a star, alongside such other movement stars as Dr. Benjamin Spock, Daniel and Phillip Berrigan, Dave Dellinger, and Jane Fonda. The national press takes notice of his activities, and his presence would increase attendance at anti-war rallies, had they not been called off for the duration of the McGovern campaign. Without finding fault with Dan Ellsberg, he has played into the hands of an American idiosyncrasy which places celebrity status above other considerations. Ellsberg is still news, but he has already played his cards, and found their effect to be minimal. He has lost his shock value, which didn't turn out to be much.

None of this is intended as criticism of Dan Ellsberg, who is guilty only of faith in the basic intelligence of people, and of faith in their compassion for other human beings. What Ellsberg did was a courageous act. Ellsberg could have kept silent; in his profession, he was quite competent, and the end of that particular path has as its reward power as well as celebrity. Ellsberg could well have ended his career as President Edward Kennedy's national security advisor. To understand where Ellsberg was coming from when he made his decision, a remark of one of his former colleagues should be considered, perhaps even savored. Said the colleague, upon learning of Ellsberg's role in the release of the papers, "Do you realize what this means? Dan Ellsberg will never get a security clearance again." From this myopic world where gently attempting to persuade Dr. Strangelove is the main purpose of life, Dan Ellsberg came forth, in violation of the most sacred canons of his trade.

I dwell on Dan Ellsberg today because it is my feeling that a settlement of the war is imminent. Within ten days, there will probably be an agreement reached whereby Richard Nixon makes good his promise to end American participation. The war will cool off for one or three years, after which time the Viet Cong will probably secure South Vietnam, thus achieving militarily what Ho Chi Minh was promised at Geneva in 1954. If this comes about, Ellsberg will become a footnote to what Hubert Humphrey called "a very noble venture indeed." He may also become the last prisoner of war.

Dan Ellsberg gave it his best shot. The same cannot be said of Richard Nixon. Yet today Ellsberg stands on trial, and Nixon stands for re-election. This sad commentary reflects less on these two men than it does on the nation these two have appraised, one with such unjustified optimism, the other with such cold cynicism. Unfortunately, it would seem that latter made a better guess. Hoa binh.

To Vote Or Not To Vote

The election is less than two weeks away and everyone has some important decisions to make. Everyone must decide whether or not to vote, what purpose voting or not voting will serve, and if the decision is to vote who to vote for and what purpose that will serve.

Many politically active people have encouraged us to vote because our vote will make a difference. The idea that one vote will make a difference in electing a candidate is ridiculous. Very few local, state or federal elections have been decided by one vote. While it is apparent that one vote will not make a difference it is important that people do not adopt this idea. If everyone believed that their vote would not make any difference then no one would vote. The reason for objecting to the idea that one vote doesn't matter is not because it isn't true but because if that attitude became widespread there would be no voters.

The idea that voting is a civic responsibility needs clarification. Many groups say that it is a civic responsibility to participate in their activities. The Red Cross tries to impress us with the idea that it is a civic responsibility to give blood. The United Fund, the P.T.A., the Boy and Girl Scouts try to make similar claims. Most people do not listen to the pleas of these groups so why should they vote? Voting might be considered a greater responsibility than any of the others. The act of voting in some way influences those in power. It helps them decide who will get funds for their projects and social activities. Voting effects a greater portion of the population than any other activity.

Voting serves many purposes that are not generally thought of. When you vote, no matter who you vote for, if anyone, you indicate a faith in elections and the ability of the people to decide. If large numbers of people did not vote there would be a grave threat to the stability of the present system.

Not voting because none of the candidates appeal to you is a poor way to voice your dissent. Not voting is apathetic. Voting and casting a blank ballot is a very good protest. Governor Sargent and Senator Kennedy must be aware of the large number of voters who cast blank ballots for governor and senator in 1970. Casting a blank ballot in most races indicates that you are informed, interested and opposed to the candidates for that office. The large number of blank ballots for county and lesser state offices can not be explained as protests. Most voters have little or no idea who they are voting for when elections are held for these offices.

The question of who you should vote for is interesting. If it doesn't make any difference if you vote or not then it doesn't make any difference who you vote for in terms of who gets elected. This attitude is harmful because if many people subscribed to it voting would be done by a roll of the dice. A vote can do more than elect people though. A vote can be used to express an ideological preference. This year it is possible to vote for a Liberal, Conservative or Socialist. If Senator McGovern should get fourty-nine percent of the vote it would make a deep impression on Mr. Nixon. He would realize that many of his policies were not popular and try to make them more acceptable to the McGovern people.

Ballot questions are not very often decided by one vote. The preferences that are indicated on ballot questions are important. Because people have expressed a desire for a graduated income tax in previous elections it will be on the ballot again this year and stands a good chance of becoming a law. The number of votes the amendment to lower the drinking age gets will decide if it becomes effective even if it does not achieve a majority.

The decision to vote or not is an important one that each person must make for himself. He must decide if voting is worth the hassles or not. If someone doesn't think voting is worth the trouble involved it will be impossible to convince him to vote. People have a right to choose not to participate.

Simple Solution To A Complex Problem

To The Editor:

In response to Mr. Tinder's column of 20 October 1972 concerning the place of required courses within the University curriculum, I find it interesting that one could think it possible to instill within students "wisdom and self-discipline" and further to give students "a good idea of what they wanted to do with their life" by "forcing students to dabble in a variety of fields." The very essence of a required curriculum means that there is no free choice, thought and decision. I should thank that one does not learn how to become a self-motivated learner and thinker by being told what to do throughout the educative process. Indeed, that is the very problem. We are not an educational institution in any sense of the word, rather we force facts and disgard the notion of teaching how to learn.

It is indicative of Mr. Tinder's thinking when he makes a statement such as "how...can a student who thinks that he may be interested in english not be sure that science is not his forte unless he takes science courses." It is obvious that he views learning only in terms of the classroom, a view which is at best obsolete.

He further comments that if there were not a required distribution of courses that students would be come "highly specialized in one narrow field but lacking the sensitivity, vision, and creativity which a good liberal arts education fosters." The notion of a well-rounded man (yes, man indeed, because when that idea was brought forth only men could become "educated") is an anachronism within our society. It is no longer possible to even comprehend the knowledge man has accumulated. More facts are generated every minute than can ever be comprehended by one individual. But the University retains the "well-rounded man" ideal while it leaves its students helpless to deal with the world as it really is. We are not taught how to learn here, we are taught only facts. As for the matter of becoming highly specialized, it is the University that teaches us how to become highly specialized. They have divided up knowledge into "disciplines" and isolated each discipline from the other. No attempt is made here to help the student synthesize the various disciplines and to help point out the interrelationships, rather each points out how one is different from the other. It is the very structure of the University which keeps us from understanding the complexities of issues and how each discipline is interdependent on the other.

Finally, people learn best when they enjoy what they are learning, and when it has some relevance to their existence. Like too many other institutions in our society, the University doesn't like human nature so it attempts to mold the human to the structure instead of molding the structure to the human. Why is it so difficult to accept the fact that people have different learning habits; that all problems cannot be solved with simple solutions? And that is precisely what a requirement is, a simple solution to a complex problem.

Senate Santas

To The Editor:

The front page article in Thursday's Collegian, Student Senate Plows Through Budget Changes by Bob Scheier, contained statements that definitely deserve clarification. The statement made by Paul Hamil, Financial Affairs Committee Chairman, that the Transit Service budget is "one of the screwiest I've ever seen" was a correct observation. The reasons for the ridiculous condition of our budget is not because of any errors made by the management of the Transit Service. During the final review of the Transit Service budget last spring there was $25 approved for purchase of coveralls for student mechanics and nothing for maintenance of these. Sometime between the evening that the Budget Committee accepted the budget and the Student Senate passed it, we acquired $200 in the uniforms category. The reason then that the Transit Service Budget is one of the screwiest that Paul Hamil has ever seen is either that Santa Claus is masquerading as a member of the budgets committee or that nobody is proofreading the Budget Act.

I might also add that a similar blunder on our 1971 budget gave us an extra $4,000. All of this plus about $1,000 was returned to the Student Senate.

For The Record

To The Editor:

In regard to an article and letter to the Editor appearing in the October 17 Collegian, the Amherst Board of Selectmen would like to place the following facts on record.

On March 21, 1972 the Board adopted the following policy: "The Board of Selectmen will not allow any political advertisements within the highway rights of way and will so inform the Director of Inspection Services. If a candidate wishes to erect a sign on private property, he must go to the Zoning Board of Appeals for their approval. Upon application accompanied by a description, the Board will grant permission for each major political party to maintain one "pavilion" within the highway rights of way. Any organization wishing to provide non-partisan information on voting may be granted the same privilege."

The Board adopted this policy not only to curb visual pollution in Amherst, though that was of concern to us, but also, and principally, because we felt candidates should inform voters of their stands on isssues and not seek votes merely on the basis of name recognition. We wanted to encourage the provision of a pavilion (be it a trailer, office or kiosk) where voters could easily obtain such information.

On March 30 we informed the Chairman of the Democratic and Republican Town Committees of this policy. On July 18 we received an application from the Republican Town Committee for permission to park a trailer in the North parking area of the Common, to be used as campaign headquarters. On July 24 the request was granted. The request clearly fell within our stated policy and did not in any way constitute a reversal of previous decisions.

The Board may very well review this policy at a later date. We would be happy to hear from citizens regarding their opinions. In the meantime, we urge all registered voters to become informed on the issues and candidates' stands thereon and, above all, to vote on November 7.

Nancy B. Eddy, Clerk
Amherst Board of Selectmen

Editorial Points

Doesn't Richard Nixon have a flair for the dramatic? Imagine, ending the war so close to the election. It may have cost a few extra lives, but that's politics.

Speaking of the dramatic, wasn't the UMass–URI game one of the cliffhangers of the year?

In what is becoming a weekly classic, the Collegian defeated the Student Senate in football yesterday 54-14. The classic part comes in with the style of the Collegian and the classic ineptitude of the Senate (ha, ha, student bureaucrats).

You can expect to see a motion on the floor of the Senate next Wednesday night banning the Collegian football team. If you can't beat 'em, legislate 'em out of existence.

It looks like this University is capable of anything. Not only do they hand out two parking stickers for every space, but they have the magical power, for this week, to change Wednesday into Monday. Does that mean that people whose birthday comes this Wednesday don't get older this year?

How About Biking?

To The Editor:

We were interested and quite gratified to read of the Mass Transit program due to begin at UMass in February, 1973. However, we could find no mention of one important type of transportation, namely the bicycle.

As is well known, America is a land of spectators, more than active sports participants, and of the automobile, rather than simpler forms of getting about. Personally, we ride our bicycles daily from our homes in North Amherst to the Infirmary. This could be invigorating, were it not for dangerous road conditions and the noxious fumes of cars and buses.

Would it not be a hopeful sign then, if a small proportion of a large Federal grant were used to encourage bicyclists, by building bike paths on major highways, and appropriate safety devices and parking places? In winter weather, such paths could be used for snow shoeing or cross country skiing. The undersigned would like to assist in developing such a program.

Getting The Treatment

To The Editor:

We recently went to the Amherst Cinema after reading its ad in your newspaper of the previous day stating a $1.50 admission less 50¢ with a student I.D. At the box office the posted price was $2.00 admission less 50¢ with a student I.D. We informed the box office attendant of the price in the ad and she called the manager. He described his version of the ad and said we were mistaken. We paid the higher price but were not convinced by his description of the ad. We went out to our car and brought in the ad and showed it to the manager. He admitted his recollection of the ad was mistaken and that we could have our 50¢ each refunded "if it meant that much to us." We took the refund. As we were seated in the theatre waiting for the movie to begin, the manager appeared and refunded the balance of what we had paid, i.e., the advertised admission price, and told us in a most discourteous manner to leave.

As we left, we politely asked his name, which he said was Jeff Aldrich. Then, in front of many other patrons, he loudly added that he has the right to throw out anyone he chooses.

We calmly walked over close to him, out of earshot of anyone else, and informed him that his last remark, made in front of many others, is considered published and thus slanderous. We then left. We feel you and your other readers wish to be informed of the manner in which this establishment reacts to patrons who quote the price advertised in your paper.

Cindy Razin

Student Advisory Board

To The Editor:

In recent weeks there have been a number of complaints regarding the discontinuation of Cold Self Care Centers in certain residential areas. Here is the reason why:

The enactment of the Poison Prevention Packaging Act (PL 91-601) requires the dispensing of aspirin-containing drugs only in "special packaging" - childproof, tamper proof containers reviewed and studied by the FDA. This law also affects the packaging of "hazardous substances defined in the Hazardous Substances Act; economic poisons defined in the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide & Rodenticide Act; a food drug or cosmetic as defined in the Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act; or a substance intended for use as fuel when stored in a portable container and used in the heating, cooking or refrigeration system of a house."

A study of the use of the Cold Self Care Centers, in past years, reveals the following:

	1969-70	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73
No. of individuals signing in:	3,000	8,000	11,000	?
No. of units taken:	23,000	60,000	90,500	120,000-150,000
Cost:	$ 350	$ 900	$ 1,400	$ 6,000-$ 8,000
Cost per unit:			1-1/2¢	5¢

The new plastic containers, that the law requires be used this year, account for the increase in per unit cost to 5¢, from the 1-1/2¢ for the same drug in paper packets. In case you are questioning why this legislation was necessary, remember that over 50% of the reported ingestion by poison control centers involve children under 5 years of age. Coupled with the statistics given earlier, is the fact that many more people have helped themselves, more than abundantly, at the Centers without signing out the drugs.

Since the University Health Center exists to serve primarily student members of the campus, the Student Advisory Board, with the Director of Pharmacy, is looking into the problem.

In this respect, a subcommittee has been formed to study the situation. The Area Governments are being asked to point interested individuals to this subcommittee who will present the Area's point of view. It is intended that a decision be arrived at speedily, without letting this matter drag on for too long, which is, in a way, possible only with the express cooperation of the Areas involved.

For more information, contact Mr. Jeffrey Harsfield, Director of Pharmacy, Health Center (5-0399).

Therapist Meeting Disrupted

NEW YORK (LNS)–Carrying five pounds of cow brains and one pound of cow kidneys, twelve people with stockings over their heads marched into the annual meeting of the Academy for the Advancement of Behavior Therapy at the New York Hilton Saturday, October 7.

The twelve Anti-Behavior Control Coalition members--including lesbians, gay men, straight women and men, former mental patients and even a few sympathetic shrinks--had forcibly interrupted a seminar entitled "Civil Liberties." They were there to protest the behaviorists' techniques of aversion therapy and desensitization used on an increasing number of inmates of prisons and mental institutions, most often homosexuals.

The three behaviorists leading the seminar are at the top of their field: Ralph Schwitzgelb, a Harvard electronic device brain implantation expert; Michael Serber, head of the Attascadero State Prison in California--a hospital for "criminal sex offenders" that practices behavior modification; and George Bachy Rita, whose projects include "diagnosing" temporal lobe epilepsy among the California prison population to justify the use of lobotomies. Dr. Peter Breggen, an outspoken critic of lobotomies, estimates that there are 600 lobotomies performed in the United States every year.

As the twelve masked demonstrators entered the seminar they chanted "We are your nameless, faceless victims. Server said "Give them an M&M"--a reference in behavior lingo for reward conditioning for children that uses candy as the reward.

One of the twelve responded. "You make people jump through hoops like circus animals for their humanity and some M&M's."

Another demonstrator yelled, "Here, you want some brains to play with?" and she threw the cow brains across the room. They landed in the lap of one of the doctors. All of this was to the screams of "murderers, butchers." Soon the kidneys were in the doctors' laps, too. Amazingly, they sat passively throughout the action. A few minutes later the twelve left.

The weekend conference was attended by some 1500 people. That number was way over the organizers' estimates and points to the increasing popularity of behaviorism amongst the therapeutic establishment.

Other seminars included "Systematic Desensitization," "Remote Control Shock Aversion Techniques for Head Bangers (usually children)," and "Heterosexual Retraining." Also attending the conferences were New York area doctors and students.

In the past year or so there has been quite a bit of public outrage over the use of aversion therapy, behavior modification and lobotomies, particularly from gay organizations and prisoner support groups. One prison which has gotten some publicity is the California Medical Facility at Vacaville.

Last year the Department of Correction announced a plan to move all the prisoners from the state's adjustment centers (the maximum security sections of the maximum security prisons).

Gay Teacher Finally Wins Credentials

HARRISBURG, Pa. (LNS) - The State of Pennsylvania approved teaching credentials for a recent graduate of Penn State in the middle of October, but only after a summer filled with controversy. The new teacher, Joseph Acanfora, had been active in the gay group on the State College campus and his actions, including the filing of a suit charging the university with discriminationation against homosexuals, caused the state of ponder whether or not Acanfora was morally fit to teach the young people of Pennsylvania.

On July 10, Acanfora's teaching credentials were withheld by the Pennsylvania Teacher Certification Council pending final decision by State Secretary of Education John C. Pittenger. Acanfora went before the Council, many of whose members also serve as Penn State administrators. Typical of the questions Acanfora was forced to deal with was one by A. W. VanderMeer, a dean of the university's College of Education.

"What homosexual acts do you prefer to engage in?" inquired the dean, who no doubt would have been scandalized by a similar invasion of privacy regarding his own sexual practices.

Pittenger finally okayed the credentials after consulting with State Attorney General J. Shane Creamer who said that there were no legal barriers to granting Acanfora certification. But it remains to be seen, after all the hullabaloo, whether Acanfora will be able to get a job in the state.

Softer Spring Season in Store

NEW YORK (AP) — Whether a woman is plump or skinny, there is something to be gained from the softer spring styles.

Some designers are trying to coax women out of that strict blazer and pleated skirt sports wear image. The look still is tailored, but there is a gentling, a narrowing, an increased fluidity going on.

Shirt tops and cardigan jackets can cover bulging hips. The smaller pleats in skirts can flesh out thin figures.

At the Molly Parnis Boutique spring collection showing Monday, designer Morty Sussman brought out a green, two-piece ensemble for evening.

"We've had it with the blazer and pleated skirt," said Sussman.

The top is a shirt, instead of a blazer. The skirt is accordian-pleated and full, instead of wide, stitched pleats.

"It's still a tailored look. Women don't want to get too fussy at night. There is still the shirt on top," said Sussman, whose collection is priced $90 to $250.

The shirt can double as a jacket, if a woman puts a sleeveless turtleneck sweater under it, he suggested.

For day, Sussman offered a raft of shirt dresses. His newest neckline is a deep V-shape with a soft rolled trim.

"I love that neckline. It's flattering. It will make a woman look softer and taller," he said.

It's even softer, worn with ropes of pearls, which are big this year for dresses, and suits with the cardigan jacket.

The point of the collection was to show easy, packable clothes, and the fabrics are soft cottons, wool jerseys and matt jerseys.

Cross-Cultural Workshop

The Ofice of Foreign Students will sponsor a Cross-Cultural Workshop next weekend from Friday evening October 27th to Sunday noon October 29th. The participants at the workshop will include UMass students from several different countries as well as American students from different backgrounds. The workshop will examine the communication process and how it is influenced by cultural differences and attempt to find ways to improve communication in culturally diverse groups. Any student wishing to sign-up for the workshop next weekend should contact Ann Silva (545-0019) or Steve McLaughlin (253-3252) by Thursday.

Directories Available

The final edition of the Fall Term Student Telephone Directory is now available. Students in dormitories with room telephones receive a free copy as a part of their telephone charges. All other students and University departments may obtain telephone directories at the Campus Store at a cost of 25¢ each. This edition carries... address... and telephone numbers of all graduate, undergraduate and Stockbridge students who had provided the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore, with local address information as of October 5, 1972.

Italian Newspaper Editor To Talk On Italian Politics

Signorina Luciana Castellana, editor of the Italian newspaper, Il Manifesto, and a leader of the Il Manifesto political group, will speak at Amherst College tomorrow on "The Current Social and Political Situation in Italy."

The lecture will be at 4:30 p.m. in the Converse Assembly Room on the Amherst campus. The event is sponsored by the department of anthropology and sociology and is open to the public without charge.

The Il Manifesto group is composed of heretical Marxists, expelled in 1969 from the Italian Communist Party, and represents a striking (and Italian) fusion of newer and older tendencies in European socialism.

National Black Theatre To Visit Here Saturday

The National Black Theatre, with Director Barbara Ann Teer, will visit UMass next Saturday night, Oct. 28, for a single performance under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council in conjunction with the Third World Alliance.

This noted threatre company from Harlem will offer excerpts from its current production "Change/Love Together/Organizer/: A Revival", in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Tickets are available from the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council ticket office, 125 Herter Hall in Amherst, telephone 545-0202 and are $1 for full-time UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for the general public.

This performance is not part of the Fine Arts Council announced series and is a special event which brings to Western Massachusetts one of the most talked-about contemporary theatre groups.

"The subject matter of the performance to be given by The National Black Theatre deals with the elimination of drugs, evil and vice which run rampant in all Black Communities. The 'Revival' is more than dynamic entertainment, it is an educational vehicle designed to remove those negative influences from the Harlem community and move it back toward love", according to The Theatre.

Applications Open For Spring Legislative Internship Work

This program offers five political science undergraduate internees valuable experience as well as course credits in practical government and politics in the State House in Boston. At the same time it permits these students to continue their academic work at the UMass-Boston campus. The internship program allows undergraduate political science majors to obtain six credits for their work as part time aides to state legislators in Boston. On the average internees are expected to work between 20 to 30 hours a week with their legislators, and they are paid at an hourly rate slightly above the minimum wage.

In adition to the six credits work in the internship program, internees must also enroll for an additional nine credits of regular academic work at the UMass/Boston campus. The details of registration have been worked out with the registrar's office in Boston and Amherst, Living arrangements in Boston must be worked out by the individual student and in the Greater Boston area.

The internship program is geared toward political science majors, preferably juniors, so that they may integrate their internship experience with their other political science course work in their senior year. Sophomores and freshmen are not eligible, but occasionally senior political science majors have participated in the program. However, only those political science juniors and seniors with at least a minimum 2.5 cumulative average in their political science course work are eligible to apply for the program.

Applicants will be interviewed by a panel made up of a former intern student and political science professors, after they have filled out application forms. These application forms can be obtained from Miss Arlene Slaughterback in Room 216, Thompson Tower.

Students who have participated in the program have worked with legislators from both parties and have been involved in the work of such committees as education, housing, corrections and judiciary. Those internees who have graduated from the university have gone on to law school, federal civil service and graduate work in the field of public administration.

Project Self Workshops Register Today

There will be a special registration for PROJECT SELF workshops for Southwest Residential College Women students today from noon to 3:00 pm.

If you are interested in signing up for one of the workshops by and about women which are being offered for the next eight weeks, come by Southwest Women's Center in the former faculty apartment of Mackimmie-Crampton and get full information, and a registration form.

Southwest Academic Division is subsidizing any Southwest woman student who wishes to take one of the 16 workshops, so that she has to pay only half of what the regular student tuition is. This is an unusual opportunity to participate in a workshop chosen from a wide variety of topics, such as: Film: Sex Roles and Self-Image; Tai Kwon Do (Korean Style Karate); Prostitution: The Woman-Identified Woman; Women and War in the News; Women in Movements of Social Change; Attitudes about Women: Valuing Ourselves; and many more.

In addition to subsidizing half of the tuition for each Southwest student enrolled in a Project Self workshop, Southwest Academic Division is giving one credit for each workshop completed.

Project Self is sponsored by Continuing Education for Women and has its base at Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall.

Apple Picking: An Amusing 'Occupation'

HARVARD, Mass. (AP) - The school teacher-farmer who runs the pick-your-own-apple business here is pretty sure it won;t make him rich.

But he does know it will give him a good time-watching the city types who drive 35 miles out of Boston to shuffle through the leaves, smell the fruit-scented air, laugh, run and pick a $2.00 half bushel of apples.

"That's why I bought the orchard last year," said Richard Storrs. "Everybody who comes out here has a good time. And you feel good because of it. If anyone comes here grouchy, he leaves full of smiles."

The fun is both in the apple picking and the personality of Storrs, whose services include a free cup of cider on entering the orchard, "mingling, chatting, helping the folks" in the fields and handing them official membership cards in the Apple Pickers Institute of America when they leave.

All types of people come to his Hawbuck and Nashoba Valley Orchards, he says, college students, senior citizens, "the kind of people you'd like to have as neighbors."

For $2.00, they can fill a bag with bright red Macintosh, Delicious, Cortlands, Romes or Gravelations.

But not everything about the apple business is fun. The money situation is a problem.

"It costs me $2.00 a bushel to grow, pick, pay a supervisor, box and truck apples. The going commercial rate is $2.40," he says, and that's why a quarter of his annual crop of 20,000 bushels is the pick your own variety.

Storrs is a teacher at, believe it or not, the Applevine School. The school's insignia is an apple.

"Apples are a losing business." says Storrs. "It's difficult to make a buck. In fact, I'm losing money this year."

"If expenses go up and the selling price remains stable, I might have to sell the property and become a housing development like so many other orchards."

But he says he doesn't let it worry him.

"Did you know that Johnny Appleseed was born 10 miles from here in Leominster. Yet I'm not like him. He was concerned with apples as a religion.

Cancer Relief Seen Possible

NEW YORK (AP)—The president of the American Cancer Society said today it should be possible to achieve a five-year survival rate for nearly two-thirds of all cancer patients.

Dr. A. Hamblin Letton, chief of staff of the Georgia Baptist Hospital, Atlanta, told the 59th annual meeting of the cancer group that nearly 66 per cent could be saved "if we use our best forms of therapy and early detection."

"We are now saving 40 per cent of patients who have cancer; we could save 66 per cent, " Letton said.

He added that new data reported last month by the National Cancer Institue show that "much progress" has been made in the survival rates of cancer.

"Previously we were saving 33 per cent of all cancer patients," he said.

The Head Of The Charles Regatta

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

"Hustle, hustle, you turtles."

A little girl exclaimed this statement as the shells passed the Harvard Boat House. This typified the mood of the Head of the Charles Regatta, as crews came from all over (Florida, Wisconsin and Nebraska were some of the farthest) to compete on the three mile course.

People lined the bridges and shores to yell words of encouragement to their favorites. The action began at noon on a lazy Sunday afternoon and continued until about five, as shells raced against time, leaving at ten second intervals. The times were computed by a computer and the winners determined according to how fast they went and whether or not they violated the course regulations.

Almost 1500 rowers tried their luck and tried to prove their skill. Most spectators crowded the banks over the last mile, the rowers at this point being either tired or sprinted. Thus, the excitement of a shell passing or being passed, along with the treachery offered by the winding of the river and the bridge supports, excited the onlookers, while the rowers cautiously approached the Eliot Bridge turn.

The top finish by a UMass shell was eighth in a field of thirty-seven in the intermediate fours race. Though the crew of Ted Fitzpatrick, Joe Piela, Jeff Allen, Rich Clair, and coxswain Tom Richard had trouble at the start caused by a passing motor boat (The shell's number was knocked off and had to be taped back on. The tape later funneled, causing the front of the shell to stick due to the increased resistance.), their strength still kept them in the top ten.

Another shell entered at the last moment in the fours race, placed 13th. Freshman Roger Bonsell guided the foursome of Jim Kennedy, Steve Torosian, Rich Jamara and Kevin Kaylor along the Charles.

The Intermediate Eight captured 12th in a field of forty. Bonsell took his second ride of the afternoon in steering the shell of Rich Jamara, Peter Berg, Bill Vose, Kevin Kaylor, Tony Joneck, Bill Fitzpatrick, Jim Bouzianis and John Gombar. Kaylor and Jamara also doubled by racing in two events.

Three UMass oarsmen rowed in the Novice singles race. All three had difficulties with Eliot Bridge. Peter Flood was rowing a very strong race when he hit the bridge support. Though stunned, he managed to finish the race. The other two grazed the same support.

Paul Gowen finished 10th, with Peter Flood 15th and Bill Mitchell, 20th.

The pair of Billy Moran and Al Flanders finished 15th out of twenty-five.

Charles Leonard rowed two events, staying under the banner of UMass, finishing eighth in the double sculls with Union Boat club rower R. Williams and then 17th in the Intermediate Singles.

So, the fall regatta season ends with the festive Head of the Charles. In its seventh year, the Charles is fast becoming what the Boston Marathon was--an endurance event that all could enter. The mystique of the Charles is that it allows anyone and everyone to compete, and it also is a fitting climax to the fall rowing schedule.

A UMass rower is alone on the Charles River in the Head of the Charles Regatta.

Friday's sports head was Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Statistics indicate that Scorpio women show a strong preference for younger men. These women also appear to be more divorce-prone than those born under other zodiacal signs. This is according to a study made in West Germany by Prof. Rolf Denneel, former director of the Zoological Institute at Bonn University.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Communications require double-checking. Reservations, directions tend to go astray. Relative at a distance could garble message. Ask questions. If answers don't make sense, ask again.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get ready for new challenge. One who made money promises comes up empty. Situation is only temporary. No need to be discouraged. You are learning lessons. Apply them in future. Take inventory. Insure valuables.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cycle moves up and your intuition is on target. Mate, partner may be concerned about nothing. However, you should be aware of legal commitments. Take nothing for granted. Attend to important affairs in person.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You receive offer. It may glitter but requires more effort than is at first discernible. Don't expect something for nothing. Sagittarian could play key role. Go behind scenes. Search for truth.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Obtain hint from Cancer message. Some of your hopes, wishes may be revised. You get at facts by studying details. What you learn may not be pleasant but could prove profitable. Know it and respond accordingly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be ready for change of plans--and scenery. Gemini plays important role. You are in better position than might be assumed. What appears an obstacle is merely a challenge. Family member is sincere but could be misinformed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Domestic adjustment is in picture. You could be recipient of surprise gift from family member. Accept this as conciliatory gesture. Long-range plans are subject to change. Be receptive. Happiness is due.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Choose with care--don't rush decisions. One you care for may be going through emotional crisis. Know it and be patient. Money question arises in connection with joint venture. Check with Pisces.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Study Scorpio message. Sense of timing may be slightly off target. Take time to line up sights. Accent is on seeing clearly. People observe and ask questions. Be aware of public relations. Get expert counsel.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You get recognition for past efforts. Be gracious even if someone asks, "What have you done for me lately?" Display maturity. You are gaining valuable recognition. It will be worth putting up with some catcalls.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Creative forces are accented. Express yourself and imprint your own style. Young person may make outlandish request. Maintain balance, sense of humor. Avoid temptation to be extravagant.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't neglect home duties. Basic responsibilities are spotlighted. Thorough approach is necessary. Complete projects, including home repairs. Older family member will do you a favor. Show appreciation.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you may be musical, you are diplomatic and you are extremely attractive to opposite sex. January and October are indicated as your most significant months of 1972. You are a combination of tenseness and relaxation, a dilemma to many and a delight to others. In November, you make new contacts and could embark upon a novel project.

Booters Lose Early Lead Defeated At URI 4-2

By MARTY KELLEY

Kingston, Rhode Island—Defeat offers absolutely no valor whatsoever. But under the pain of it all, there's something called integrity and in defeat if you can find it you're a better man for it. And although he was the last visiting Minuteman off the field that day, Jimmy Vollinger, a scrappy sophomore from Northampton, Mass., with his head tilted downward, muttered an anecdote that in some small way rationalized the most crucial loss that his soccer team was to absorb in the 72 campaign.

"If only we could have won it for the coach", said Vollinger. "For the first time in my life I've had an opportunity to play for a coach that I really respect and a type of guy who really knows his soccer. If we could have only hung on and won it for coach Redmond. We're so lucky to have him and UMass., and I just want to win for him in a real bad way".

But that wasn't the whole story at Kingston this past Saturday morning. And when it was over, Massachusetts was dealt a 4-2 defeat to Rhode Island, that for a young team meant a season of dreams vanquished in the morning cold at Kingston. And without a doubt the challenge was there and in no way, shape, form, or fashion did this Minuteman edition wilt although the visitors protected a slim 2-1 lead going into the last 10 minutes of action.

"I told our halfbacks to clear the ball all the way down the field at that point in the game. I just wanted to protect that one goal lead", said Redmond. "But by the time the backs were clearing the ball, it was too late and we had to go back on offense".

Now there was question whether UMass was ever on offense that day as both goals went off fullbacks' shoulders. But anyway, the credit went to diminutive Tom Coburn late in the first half and to Mark Tyma for the go ahead goal in the second half. That one really baffled Ram goalie Kevin Daley.

"I never saw the damm thing" admitted Daley at Theta Chi that night. "I just lost it in the sun and before I knew it it was in the upper corner of the net". That piece of chicanery occured as a result of an indirect kick and it was the former incident that came back to haunt the Minutemen. An indirect kick, an obstruction call, and a breakdown of a forward wall in front of goalie Carl Vercollone were the variables that were to dispel any thoughts of a Yankee Conference title this fall in soccer.

With the wind and the slope of the field in their favor the Minutemen fought back behind the work of reserves Brian McKenney, Ed Dougherty, and Vollinger. Defeat was nearly averted, but it took an incredible save by Daley off Coburn in the last minute and a half to save the win for Rhody. It really wasn't a save, it was simply robbery as Coburn went in one on one and like a streak out came Daley. "I guess", said Tom after, "that I hesitated for the split second, which you really can't do in front of the net".

So the team probably won't see the bottom half of New England's top ten this fall. Redmond's Hellions are now 3-3 for the semester and a darkhorse 1-2 in the conference.

"Our whole season was wrapped up in these two games, Rhode Island and next Saturday with Connecticut", said co-captain Dave Ouellette. "We needed this one and we didn't get it and I think we deserved it". And "Whale" was right but the scoreboard didn't reflect integrity on the visitors part.

The Rams had to come from behind to win and they were rated number ten in New England. Then take into consideration that a decent representation of the Parents' Weekend football crowd, was there, well you could say that the Rams had reason to win. The only UMie fans were yours truly and our bus driver, but the visitors came down to Rhody for a purpose-to play some serious soccer and battle the hierachy for the conference title, or some facsimile there of.

The bus ride was long and exhausting and I don't know if coach Redmond's European soccer books eased the pain or whether the ten minute stop at Lum's in Attleboro did. The Yankee Pedler in Warwick some thirty miles from Kingston was somewhat impersonal, and the pre-game breakfast was cold and lacked butter, but there was nothing like the morning's match some two hours later.

The Minutemen are pretty good entertainers and really wanted a shot at the title. Now they can only win it with their integrity, and in this reporter's eyes when the final whistle signals defeat, if you can find integrity, it only means that someday you'll have that title.

UMASS FLANKER Steve Schubert is about to get crunched after receiving a toss from QB Piel Pennington. Schubert had a fine day, not only catching passes, but returning punts to boot. His 37-yard punt return to the URI 18 yard line set up the first Minutemen touchdown, as he continually returned the ball into fine field position. (MDC Photo by Kenny Sulin)

Harriers Romp Over Eagles

By WALT POWERS

The day was cool and clear, with little wind. The course was hilly and dry. For the UMass Cross-Country team it was homecoming day, and before a small but vociferous crowd, they put on a brutal display of team running, overwhelming the Boston College Eagles by a score of 19-44.

The outcome of the meet was never really in doubt. The only competition came between B.C.'s Tom Cappazutto, and Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, and Tom Maguire, all from UMass.

Cappazutto went out in front early, but he was harried by four Minutemen, including Thomas, who took a slight lead. Cappazutto refused to wilt under this pressure, and stayed close until the end of the first orchard loop, where Thomas pulled away for good. Maguire and Gillin advanced toward the end of the second loop but they couldn't pass.

About a quarter mile from the finish, Cappazutto finally broke free of a cold-weakened Gillin, and finished second. As it turned out, he was the only Eagle to finish in the top nine.

The race, overall, was very fast. The course record of 26:06, set last year by Bill Gillin, was broken by nine men. Coach O'Brien offered two reasons for this. First: "The old record was set on a cold, rainy day when running conditions were poor." Second: "The course has undergone minor changes that have resulted in a faster, though not shortened, course.

For the team, it was their strongest showing of the season. They handed the young Eagles only their second loss of the year, despite the fact that Bill Gillin, Paul Segersten, and Chris Chambers were hampered by colds, and Pete Crisci, coming back from an injury, was running in only his second race of the year.

"Our team split was good," said O'Brien, "and we ran better than we did against UConn. This meet was very encouraging."

The team won't have much time to celebrate, though. This afternoon they'll face Springfield College at three o'clock. Springfield is fresh from its victory in the Codfish Bowl Championship meet, and boasts, in Chaley Dugan, last year's New England runner-up in cross-country, and the two-mile run. This is a home meet, and it will finish on the field adjacent to WoPE.

Celts Roll 105-85

BOSTON (AP) — Jo Jo White, John Havlicek, Dave Cowens and the Boston Celtics' fast break caught up with the undermanned Philadelphia 76ers in the third quarter Monday, and Boston ran its season opening win streak to seven games with a 105-85 victory over the 76ers.

Trailing 61-60 in a seesaw game, White hit from the top of the key, then Havlicek and Cowens followed with baskets from outside to give the Celtics a five point lead they carried into the fourth quarter.

The relentless Celtics kept the pressure on the fast tiring 76ers in the finale, outscoring them 14-5 over the first 4-1/2 minutes of the period. Havlicek had six of the 14 points.

Philadelphia has yet to win in six games.

Cowens led the Celtics with 21 points. Havlicek had 20 and White had 16. John Bock scored 21 points for the 76ers and Fred Carter had 17.

Minutemen Ram Rhody 42-7

By BILL BALLOU

There are some people who think the University of Connecticut is the best team in the Yankee Conference.

There are some people who think the University of Massachusetts is the best team in the Yankee Conference.

All the conjecture and argumentation will end this Saturday when the two teams battle for the Conference championship at Alumni Stadium.

UConn and UMass are in this position by virtue of both having undefeated 3-0 Yankee Conference records. The most recent additions to their undefeated skeins came this past Saturday when the Minutemen whipped Rhode Island 42-7 in Kingston and Connecticut dumped Maine 31-9 at Storrs.

The consensus in the papers seems to be that the Minutemen not only are the best in the Conference, but the best in New England as well. The New England polls since the Harvard game have had UMass in the top spot with Dartmouth second. UConn hasn't threatened thus far. But a preseason poll picked the Huskies to take it all in the YanCon so they have something to live up to. Saturday at about four o'clock we'll know.
